In their brief defendants argued that Section 3012 "'does not furnish any standards to be applied by a superintendent of schools in refusing to recommend . . . for tenure' . . . [and that] 'the New York State Courts and the State Commissioner of Education consistently have held' that a probationary teacher may be fired 'at any time . . . without the necessity of providing for a hearing and without assigning any reasons.'" Defendants further maintained that under the New York law a probationary teacher cannot appeal an adverse decision, and that his constitutional right of due process is not violated thereby, "because there is no right to government employment and 'due process of law is not applicable unless one is being deprived of something to which he has a right.'"

While agreeing that the phrase "competent, efficient, and satisfactory" (as used in Section 3012(2)) does not restrict the superintendent's power, plaintiff nevertheless contended that the allowance of such authority "'violates . . . due process of law . . . by arbitrarily and capriciously depriving plaintiff of his employment.'"

One difficulty in the case was that Section 3012(2) "has never been construed by the New York State Courts, [although] no Article 78 proceeding has apparently ever been successfully brought to force a superintendent to recommend a teacher for tenure." Refusing to be bound by either parties' construction of the statute, the court found legal support for both parties' arguments, while nevertheless maintaining that "alternative statutory interpretations are not foreclosed to the three-judge court."

Specifically, the court found that "the position of the Department of Education, the body charged with administering the law, that the superintendent has unlimited power cannot be rejected as untenable," because several New York courts held in the 1948 case of McMaster v. Owens "that a board of education has full and untrammeled discretion in granting tenure." Other state courts have ruled that even a tenured teacher may be suspended for circulating a letter critical of a school board (In the Matter of Puentas v. Board of Education, 1965), or for being found "incompetent and inefficient" in allowing his religious beliefs to interfere with his teaching (McDowell v. Board of Education, 1918). The court additionally cited a 1957 report of the state education department in relation to Matter of Board of Education, Union Free School District No. 15 which stated that if a superintendent "were required to state the reasons for a failure to recommend" an individual for permanent appointment, "the whole statutory scheme would be set at nought."

On the other hand, these examples of New York law lend "considerable substance to plaintiff's position"—i.e., that "it would take a bold teacher indeed who would risk his appointment to tenure, and the stigma of failure to be so appointed, by speaking out in favor of causes unpopular with the superintendent." Although the state's "statutory scheme of teacher selection might reasonably be interpreted to protect the rights of employees generally," the court found that defendants' "extravagant claims" to a superintendent's "unrestricted" right to deny tenure give added weight to "the contention that a school superintendent's power has a significant inhibiting effect on the free speech of probationary teachers":

> The mere statement of defendants' position that the job of school teacher in public schools is not life, liberty or property within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment and that therefore no fair process is due the teacher establishes its untenability. As then Circuit Judge Thurgood Marshall put it, "the theory that public employment which may be denied altogether may be subjected to any conditions, regardless of how unreasonable, has been uniformly rejected."
> Whether we state the matter in traditional terms—that government largess is a property right within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment . . . —or whether we say that to deprive a government employee of his job for exercising constitutionally protected rights is to deprive him of the liberty guaranteed by that Amendment, or whether we merely reason that all government action with respect to its employees must meet the standards imposed by the Amendment, our conclusion is the same: the federal constitution requires every level of government to afford non-discriminatory and fair treatment, both substantively and procedurally, to all its employees; conditions of governmental employment may not stifle fundamental liberties.

The court further noted that although federal court adjudication of plaintiff's rights pursuant to the Civil Rights Act may satisfy some "minimal requirement" for the vindication of a constitutional right, "the lesson of the evolving body of Supreme Court law protecting fundamental First Amendment rights of free speech and association is that the ultimate availability of such relief to the courageous few who choose to pursue the tortuous and dangerous path leading to it is not sufficient protection for freedoms guaranteed by our Constitution." Doubting whether "a single federal judge should undertake to construe a state statute so as to avoid a major constitutional issue," the court ruled:

> If it is the purpose of the three-judge court statute to prevent a single federal judge from making such pervasive rulings, it would appear that the necessity of making the question-avoiding construction would be sufficient reason to convene a three-judge court.

In assessing the substantiality of plaintiff's claims, the court noted that the U.S. Supreme Court "has been a particularly jealous guardian of First Amendment rights when academic freedom is threatened" (Barenblatt v. United States, 1959; Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 1957). Although most academic freedom issues have dealt with the universities, the court emphasized that "the effect of procedures which stultify grade school teachers cannot be ignored":

> The considerations which militate in favor of academic freedom—our historical commitment to free speech for all, the peculiar importance of academic inquiry to the progress of society, the need that both teacher and student operate in an atmosphere of open inquiry, feeling always free to challenge and improve established ideas—are relevant to elementary and secondary schools as well as to institutions of higher learning . . . . In the present case, no speech or conduct by the probationary teacher is specifically prohibited. Both plaintiff and defendants contend however that the statute vests in the superintendent the power to choose at his pleasure what standards he will follow. If the superintendent does in fact have such power, it could be argued that the danger to free speech is even greater than would be vague standards. In any case, the allowance of such broad discretion is vulnerable to the same attack advanced in other chilling cases: "When one must guess what conduct or utterance may lose him his position, one will 'steer far wider of the unlawful zone'" (Speiser v. Randall; Keyishian v. Board of Regents).

The court also discussed the "delicate and difficult questions" tenure decisions pose for an educational system, explaining that the state "must be given substantial authority to choose its teachers on the basis of intangibles," and emphasizing the difficulty of formulating "precise standards . . . for determining who shall be appointed to tenure." Citing several cases and interpretive articles involving teachers' rights and "'the delicate operation of assessing a professional person,'" the court concluded:

> As one commentator has put it, however, "the impossibility of defining with precision the scope of the employer's appropriate control over the employee is insufficient reason for treating that control as boundless."
> Where the delicate balance between the individual's First Amendment rights and the state's great interest in the effective administration of public schools is to be struck, meeting such a challenge is no easy task . . . . The ultimate decision will turn on whether the state has achieved its legitimate objective in a way that does not necessarily impinge on free speech and whether the Constitution requires that the unavoidable "chilling effect" on probationary employees be minimized by the articulation of more definite standards and the assurance of effective remedies to enforce these standards.

MICHIGAN

DECERTIFICATION ELECTION DIRECTED WHERE SHORT-TERM CONTRACT EXTENSIONS BAR TIMELY PETITION FILING

When Walter Winchester Hospital (Genesee County) and the Service Employees Union (SEIU), Local 21-M, extended their old contract week by week while negotiating a new contract, the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) ruled that such short-term extensions unfairly could bar rival unions from ever entering timely election or decertification petitions. Determining that a contract so extended "is not a contract which will bar an election," the MERC granted a decertification petition entered by the hospital, and clarified its own policy so that a contract extension serving as an election bar shall be at least 150 days long.

The SEIU contract, which covered an over-all hospital unit of regular clerical, technical, and custodial workers, was effective from May 1, 1968, to December 31, 1969, but provided for automatic 12-month renewals unless either party notified the other (at least 60 days before expiration) of a wish to modify the contract. An addendum to the contract recognized the SEIU as exclusive representative of a separate unit of licensed practical nurses (LPN's).

When renegotiation began, the parties agreed on December 24, 1969, to extend the contract to January 6, 1970, on January 5 to extend it to January 13, and on January 12 to extend it to January 16. The SEIU maintained that the extension to January 6 acted as an election bar, while the hospital contended that the extension applied only to that portion of the contract covering the over-all unit, and did not extend the LPN addendum.

Declining to rule upon what sections of the contract were affected by the extension to January 6, the MERC pointed to its February 8, 1968, policy statement, which holds that "petitions for election filed by rival labor organizations, or decertification petitions under the provisions of the Public Employment Relations Act, must be filed with the [MERC] no earlier than 150 days and no later than 90 days prior to termination date of the collective bargaining agreement." The MERC explained that this policy allows rival unions to file decertification petitions before the expiration of a contract, and also provides a 90-day insulation period during which the parties to an agreement can bargain without interference from rival petitions. Moreover, if an agreement is reached within this 90-day period, an election petition filed subsequent to the expiration date of the original contract is barred.

Former MERC policy—which allowed contract extensions of less than 90 days—made it impossible for rival organizations to file in time to beat the 90-day insulation period. And the parties to a contract could continue acquiring new 90-day insulation periods, thus barring the timely filing of any petitions. The MERC's new policy, however, provides both insulation and filing periods by holding that any contract extension serving as an election bar cannot be less than 150 days' duration.

In the instant case the MERC ruled that > the extension entered into on December 24, extending the contract from December 31 to January 6, and the [subsequent extensions] are merely extensions of the agreement from negotiation session to negotiation session. To allow such extensions, shorter than 90 days, could result in our February 8, 1968 policy declaration relative to the filing of petitions by rival organizations, or employees seeking decertification, being utilized to bar forever rival organizations or employees from an election conducted by this Commission. We find that the extension of the collective bargaining agreement advanced as a bar to an election in this matter is not a contract which will bar an election.

The MERC accordingly granted the hospital's decertification petition, and directed a representation election among members of the LPN unit. (Walter Winchester Hospital and Service Employees Local 21-M, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, March 3, 1970.)

LOCKOUT INSTITUTED BY SCHOOL BOARD FOUND VIOLATIVE OF HUTCHINSON ACT'S STRIKE PROHIBITION

eral extension of the opening day of the 1969-70 school year unlawfully influenced contract negotiation with the Genesee Intermediate Education Association, and effectively constituted a lockout violative of the no-strike provision contained in the state's bargaining statute (Hutchinson Act). Explaining that the "dominant public interest" rationale applied in cases prohibiting public employee strikes also is applicable to a public employer's duty to continue operations during a labor dispute, the examiner concluded that the use of a lockout as an offensive bargaining weapon is prohibited by the act. Since the act's strike prohibition is absolute, the prohibition against lockouts also is absolute, whether or not a negotiation impasse has occurred.

Negotiation of a 1969-70 contract was undertaken by the Genesee board and the Association on May 8, 1969, and continued to August 20 when the board signed three of four items comprising the contract, but refused to sign the fourth because of disagreement with its language. The Association sought mediation of the unresolved item, which included the 1969-70 school calendar. During this period local teachers were sent a July 31 letter informing them that the opening day for the ensuing school year would be September 2.

Early in August, however, the superintendent cancelled a workshop planned for September 4-5; an Association negotiator was told that the reason for the cancellation was "you might go on strike." Then on August 28 all bargaining unit members were sent letters reading in part:

> We regret that progress toward final ratification on a master agreement with our professional employees has been painstakingly slow, and we have not reached accord.
> In view of this discouraging development we have cancelled our opening day orientation, Tuesday, September 2, 1969 and subsequent work day duties until the revised contract is agreed.
>
> Please do not report for work on September 2, 1969 or any following days until officially notified. No payment will be made for professional services any days prior to contract ratification.
> We trust this situation will be resolved with promptness and dispatch, and we may embark upon the new school year with optimism and purpose.

A meeting between the district and the Association ensued, at which time the district said it assumed teachers would "withhold services" because of a similar condition the previous year. Although the Association attempted to discuss terms for temporary return, the district said the schools would not open until ratification of the 1969-70 contract.

Staff members reported to work on September 2, but no business was conducted and no official phone calls were accepted until September 9. Also on September 2 the superintendent issued a memo stating in part that "members of the professional staff are welcome to use the facilities of the building as you meet today with other members of your association. It is hoped that your deliberations will be fruitful." Then on September 7 the school board adopted a resolution deferring the 1969-70 opening date to September 9, establishing a 1969-70 pay rate identical to that of the previous year until ratification of the new contract, and reiterating that "no retroactive payments will be forthcoming."

During a hearing before the MERC examiner the district denied locking out its employees because the school calendar had not been established, public employees have no bargaining rights, common law allows locking out employees who exercise such rights, and public employees are not statutorily protected from a lockout. Moreover, the district contended that since its staff members had not signed their contracts, they were not employees, and that the lack of a master contract allowed the district to defer the opening date at will, as well as refuse payment to staff members who reported a week ahead of time.

The Association, however, argued that since public employee strikes are prohibited by law, public employer lockouts are not a legitimate weapon in labor disputes. Pointing to the fact that no legitimate impasse existed, the Association charged that the district unjustifiably used the lockout as an economic weapon interfering with employees' bargaining rights, discouraging union activity, and disrupting bargaining efforts.

In concluding that lockouts statutorily are prohibited and that the district engaged in unfair labor practices "by unilaterally changing the opening date of the school year for the purpose of influencing the collective bargaining negotiations" with the Association, the MERC examiner explained:

> In the instant case there was no evidence of any indication that the [Association] threatened or intended to strike or "withhold its services" in the event that a collective bargaining agreement was not reached. Nor was there any evidence that the parties had yet engaged in any extensive negotiations over the 1969-70 school calendar, or that any particular issue had arisen over the employer's setting of the traditional date for opening the school year . . . September 2. [I] find no justification in the record which would support a conclusion that the employer's decision to change the opening date of school was a necessary and proper act.
> In the employer's August 28 letter the cancellation of the September 2 opening date was explicitly based upon the failure of the parties to reach a collective bargaining agreement, despite the fact that there had been only two meetings between the parties, August 14 and 20, since the [Association] had completed the presentation of its proposals, and one of these two meetings was devoted in part to the presentation of the counter-proposals of the employer. The wording of the August 28 letter . . . lends substance to the conclusion that the employer's reason for cancellation of the opening day was for the purpose of influencing the collective bargaining negotiations. This conclusion is further reinforced by the September 2 memorandum to the staff members, in which the employer generously offered the use of its facilities in the hope that "deliberations will be fruitful," but reminding the staff members at the same time that without an agreement on contract items in dispute "it is difficult to see how the school year can officially be opened." Further, the resolution dated September [7], establishing the new opening date . . . couched as it is in terms of the failure of the parties to reach a collective bargaining agreement, does nothing to dispel the conclusion that the employer was attempting to begin the school year and the compensation of the staff on the traditional opening day.

On February 16, 1970, the examiner accordingly recommended that the district be ordered to cease its illegal conduct, and that all employees who were unable to work during the week of September 2 because of the change in the opening date be reimbursed for pay lost, with interest at 6 percent. A month later the MERC adopted the findings and recommendations of the trial examiner. NEW YORK

SEPARATE RADIO AND TELEVISION TEACHERS NEGOTIATING UNIT RULED INAPPROPRIATE

The New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) dismissed a bid by the Association of Teachers in Broadcasting for certification as exclusive bargaining representative of a unit comprised solely of 40 teachers assigned to the New York City education board's Bureau of Radio and Television. Noting that a conflict of interest must be established "in order to warrant fragmentation among employees having a substantial community of interest," the PERB ruled that the "basic community of interest between [the radio and television] teachers and teachers in the 'classroom teachers' negotiating unit is not overshadowed by any demonstrable conflict of interest."

During a formal hearing before a PERB trial examiner on May 6, 1969, both the New York City board and the intervening United Federation of Teachers, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 2, argued that the substantial community of interest between teachers assigned to station WNYE of the bureau and teachers in the city's over-all classroom teachers negotiating unit precluded separate representation. While conceding that the terms and conditions of employment of WNYE teachers were substantially the same as those of classroom teachers, the petitioning Association contended that WNYE teachers work longer hours than classroom teachers (and are compensated accordingly), and outlined several policy changes it would attempt to negotiate for WNYE teachers.

Noting that the city's deputy superintendent of instruction "is responsible for all 'classroom teachers' as well as WNYE teachers," and that WNYE teachers "are recruited from the employer's general body of 'classroom teachers' and assigned to the bureau for a minimum period of six months," the PERB determined that the unit sought "is not the most appropriate unit claimed in this proceeding":

The record before me makes it abundantly clear that the WNYE teachers who petitioner seeks to represent and teachers in the "classroom teachers" negotiating unit have a substantial community of interest inasmuch as their terms and conditions of employment are determined in the same manner and are substantially similar . . . . While WNYE teachers would seek to negotiate special items such as salary differential, seniority rights within the bureau, extension of the six-month period of guaranteed return to school of origin, and residual rights to programs, there is nothing in the record to indicate that their desire to negotiate these matters would establish a conflict of interest with the "classroom teachers" and thus, prevent meaningful negotiations as contemplated by the [Taylor] Act. Indeed, the existing collective agreement concerning "classroom teachers" is a veritable compilation of special provisions covering special groups of "classroom teachers."

WISCONSIN

INDIVIDUAL CONTRACTS MUST RECOGNIZE COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT

A Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) trial examiner found that the Elmbrook School District unlawfully required local teachers to sign individual contracts containing negotiable salary items when the contracts did not specify that such items would be superseded by any subsequent collective agreement negotiated by the Elmbrook Education Association (EEA). Moreover, the district illegally required teachers to sign their individual contracts on school premises, threatened teachers who did not sign with termination and no summer school employment, and actually denied a summer school position to one teacher who did not sign in time. Such conduct on the part of the school district undermined the EEA's position, created an atmosphere of intimidation, and generally interfered with teachers' statutory bargaining rights, according to the WERC examiner.

The EEA and the Elmbrook board engaged in 1969-70 contract negotiation from January to May of 1969. On March 13, however, the district notified local teachers that individual contracts for the ensuing year had to be signed by April 15 in compliance with state statute, although the teachers would benefit from any improvements negotiated by the EEA and the board. Then on April 14 some 350 of the district's 550 teachers informed the board in writing that they planned to accept 1969-70 employment under the terms of an EEA-negotiated agreement, but would not be coerced into signing individual contracts which might undermine negotiation.

As some confusion arose regarding the signing date, the district deferred the deadline to April 16, but said that any contracts not signed by that date "will be deemed unaccepted and a vacancy declared in the staff for that position which may thereafter be filled by a new staff member." In addition, the district required teachers to sign their contracts in the principal's office and not take them off school property, and required signed contracts as a condition of summer school employment.

When the EEA and the board reached a collective agreement in May, a form of the individual contract was incorporated in the collective settlement. This form, however, contained an additional sentence stating that "this contract may be subject to and/or supplemented by a collective bargaining agreement covering certified teaching personnel and/or board resolutions or policy statements not inconsistent therewith." The EEA accordingly urged that the individual contracts previously proffered by the board under threat of loss of employment were coercive and interfered with the teachers' statutory right to organize. Arguing that the issues in the case were not moot, the EEA contended that the teachers suffered a monetary loss which should be remedied, and said it was vital that the parties know their negotiation rights and obligations.

On the other hand, the school board argued that the issues were moot because the collective agreement signed on May 5 contained an amended form of the individual contracts, provided that the contracts be returned by April 15, and required signed contracts as a condition of summer school employment. The board further contended that its prior conduct was sanctioned by statutes regulating school operations, and that it had not interfered with the teachers' statutory organizing rights.

Noting that "this question is of first impression and of public importance since the propriety of individual contracts in the context of collective bargaining is of concern to school districts throughout the state, and the problem is of a recurring nature," the examiner held that the statutes in question can be construed together to allow individual contracts to be proffered in such a manner as not to interfere with teachers' organizing and representation rights. But he cited a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in the case of J. I. Caso Co. v. NLRB which held that "the individual contract cannot be effective as a waiver of any benefit to which the employee otherwise would be entitled under the trade agreement. The very purpose of providing by statute for the collective agreement is to supersede the terms of separate agreements of employees with terms which reflect the strength and bargaining power and serve the welfare of the group." And he found that the Elmbrook district's conduct in the instant case did constitute interference with teachers' rights:

> The requirement that the employees sign an individual contract containing negotiable items [wages] which does not mention the collective bargaining representative or that said items will be superseded by any collective bargaining agreement impedes and has a debilitating effect on the right of teachers to organize and be represented in collective negotiations. The employer informed the individual teachers in its letter of March 13, 1969 that if negotiations with the Association resulted in further improvements, the teachers would receive those benefits, but said letter does not have the binding effect of a contract, and the fact remains that the illegal document the employee was required to sign made no reference to the collective bargaining representative or the possibility of a collective bargaining agreement which would supersede the terms of the individual agreement. An employee should not be required to understand the intricacies of labor law to know that any agreement reached collectively would supersede the terms contained in his individual contract. This fact should be stated not in a mere letter but in the contract itself.

The examiner further determined that state law sanctions neither the district's requirement that individual contracts be signed in the principal's office, nor the district's threats to vacate staff positions and deny summer school employment to teachers who refused to sign. He accordingly recommended that the Elmbrook district be ordered to cease its illegal conduct, and that the teacher who was denied a summer school position be reimbursed for pay lost during summer school minus any compensation he may have received during that period. The examiner finally held that the collective agreement did not render the issues moot because there was a monetary loss "which must be remedied," and the contract in question "covers the 1969-70 school year and not the 1970-71 school year, so the problem could recur again." (Elmbrook Education Association v. Elmbrook Schools, Joint Common School District No. 21, Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, March 10, 1970.)

NLRB ASSERTS JURISDICTION OVER A UNIT OF THE NEW YORK CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

In a decision made public in late March the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) asserted jurisdiction over the Field Staff Association, a unit of field representatives and collective bargaining specialists employed by the New York Civil Service Employees Association (CSEA), and directed that an election be held. Citing previous findings and definitions furnished by the 1957 Oregon Teamsters case and the 1958 Siemons case, the NLRB ruled that the CSEA is an employer who, by virtue of its group insurance program, is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Taft-Hartley Act, and, therefore, is subject to NLRB jurisdiction.

The CSEA, a New York state labor organization representing some 175,000 public employees, provides a group insurance program with premiums amounting to about $6 million annually. As the insurance policies originate outside New York state, and the premiums are deducted from the employee-members' wages, transmitted to a local agent, and then transmitted to a Connecticut carrier, the NLRB found that such activity constitutes "indirect inflow."

This term was defined by the Siemons case (which involved an integrated nonretail enterprise) as "the purchase of goods or services which originated outside the employer's state but which he purchased from a seller within the State who received such goods or services from outside the state." And the term was incorporated in a 1958 NLRB jurisdictional yardstick, whereby the NLRB could no longer refuse to hear cases involving nonretail businesses where yearly outflow or inflow, whether direct or indirect, amounted to $50,000.

In the Oregon Teamsters case the NLRB asserted jurisdiction over the union's security fund on grounds that "indirect outflow" was evidenced in the union's direct, annual transmittal of $2 million in premium payments to an out-of-state insurance carrier. Citing that case as a basis for its assertion of jurisdiction in the instant case, the NLRB concluded that the CSEA-purchased insurance policies constitute indirect inflow, that the amount involved meets the NLRB's $50,000 outflow-inflow standard for nonretail enterprises, and that the CSEA therefore is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Taft-Hartley Act. Negotiation Notes

AMNESTY AGREEMENT FOUND TO BAR BONUS BENEFITS FOR NON-STRIKING EMPLOYEES

An arbitrator determined that an October 1969 ordinance which provided bonuses for Vallejo police and firemen who remained on the job during a July 1969 walkout violated the "sweeping provisions" of an amnesty agreement which ended the walkout. Finding that the city council "had never before awarded a cash or vacation bonus for 'meritorious and outstanding service,' and that it had never before even made a commendation for 'meritorious and outstanding service' for merely working overtime, on holidays, or for extended periods of service," the arbitrator held that the council's enactment of the ordinance in the face of the amnesty agreement constituted a punitive action which should be restrained.

A four-day strike called by Vallejo police and firemen last summer ended on July 21, 1969, with an amnesty agreement providing a 7 percent salary increase and other fringe benefits. Stating that it would "do or perform no acts contrary to the letter and spirit of this agreement," the city council agreed to two amnesty provisions:

> (a) No punitive, repressive, harassing, intimidating or coercive act or activity shall be taken, initiated, or sanctioned against any member by the Council, or its servants, agents, officers, or employees because of or on account of the members' concerted economic activities;
> (b) No disruption, alteration or change shall be made or sanctioned by the Council, or its servants, agents, officers, or employees in respect to any member's seniority, vacation, sick leave, pay scale probationary status, or any other facet of the employment status because of the member's concerted economic activities.

Then on October 27, 1969, the city council enacted the contested ordinance, which provided a five-day vacation or annual leave bonus for non-striking police and firemen due to their "meritorious and outstanding service." To support its bonus ordinance, the city council cited the case of Social Workers' Union Local 535 v. County of Los Angeles in which the California Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District upheld an ordinance providing a one-time bonus for social workers who manned their jobs during a strike. In that case the amnesty provision held that "employees who have been absent from their work assignment, without prior approval . . . will not incur disciplinary action because of their absence. Such employees will be entitled to promotional opportunities and other employment considerations without prejudice." The appellate court approved the bonus ordinance because the amnesty provision "was concerned solely with how the strikers and other employees remaining away from work during the strike would be treated on their return to work; it did not concern itself in any way whatsoever with the future treatment of the nonstrikers."

Questioning whether the appellate court's holding was controlling of the Vallejo situation, the arbitrator explained that > the court's statement that the [amnesty provision] did not concern itself "in any way whatsoever" with future treatment of nonstrikers must be construed very carefully. Suppose the nonstrikers had been promoted ahead of strikers on the basis of their having remained on the job. Surely the court did not intend to hold that such action would be valid in face of the agreement that returning strikers should enjoy "promotional opportunities . . . without prejudice." Similar situations could be posited wherein treatment of nonstrikers would clearly be controlled by limitations set forth or implied in the amnesty agreement. One of the chief purposes of an amnesty agreement is to control the relationship between two groups of workers, strikers and nonstrikers, and to assure equality of treatment in certain respects between the two groups.

Finding that the Vallejo amnesty agreement "is considerably more detailed, and extends far greater protection to returning strikers" than the Los Angeles agreement, the arbitrator concluded that the "total effect of all of the provisions of the Vallejo Agreement is to place a very heavy burden of justification on the Respondent City Council for any act which in any way treats returning strikers differently from those who remained at work during the strike." He especially noted the "particular significance" of the last clause of the Vallejo amnesty agreement:

> Its prohibition of any change in "employment status" recognizes that it is the relationship between strikers and nonstrikers which is involved in any meaningful amnesty agreement. Just as nonstrikers could not henceforth be paid more than strikers, on the basis of their having remained on the job, so other treatment of both groups must be equal in order to maintain their existing employment status. No such provision appeared in the Los Angeles amnesty agreement.

The arbitrator accordingly held that the Vallejo bonus ordinance violated the strike settlement, and that the city should be restrained from implementing the ordinance, explaining:

To say in these circumstances that the bonus vacation is being given to some employees, while it is withheld from others, on the basis of "meritorious and outstanding service" does nothing to disguise the resulting discrimination against those who do not receive the bonus. On the contrary such terminology emphasizes the fact that those who did not strike are being rewarded, and those who did strike are, by comparison, being penalized.

The necessary and natural effect of the Council's action is punitive. The natural consequence of such action is to harass and intimidate the returning police officers and fire fighters on account of their strike activities, with the effect of repressing Union activity in the future. This is prohibited by paragraph (a) of the Amnesty Agreement.

KANSAS

PROFESSIONAL NEGOTIATION STATUTE ENACTED

A mandatory Professional Negotiations Act for Teachers was signed into law by the Kansas governor on March 23, 1970. The act grants "professional employees" of a school district or community junior college the right "to form, join or assist professional employees' organizations, to participate in professional negotiation with boards of education through representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of establishing, maintaining, protecting or improving terms and conditions of professional service." "Professional negotiation" is defined by the act as "meeting, conferring, consulting and discussing in a good faith effort by both parties to reach agreement with respect to the terms and conditions of professional service." Once an employee organization duly has been recognized as exclusive representative of an employee unit, an education board and the representative organization are mandated to "enter into professional negotiations prior to issuance of the annual teachers' contracts or renewal of the same on request of either party."

An organization seeking certification as exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit by the state board of education must demonstrate "majority support through verified membership lists." Any organization wishing to intervene in a representation election must file a competing claim of majority support within 10 calendar days after notice of the original request for recognition is posted, and must be supported by at least 30 percent "of the professional employees in the appropriate negotiating unit." A request for recognition is barred if a lawful, negotiated, written agreement currently is in effect (unless the expiration date of the agreement is less than 60 days after the filing of the recognition request), or if an education board has, within the previous 36 months, "lawfully recognized a professional employees' organization other than the petitioner as the exclusive representative of any professional employees included in the unit described in the petition."

The act stipulates that "a unit including classroom teachers shall not be appropriate unless it includes all such teachers employed by the board of education, except administrative employees. A unit including administrative employees shall include all administrative employees employed by the board of education." If unit determination questions arise, the state board of education will decide the appropriate unit, according to the community of interest of the professional employees involved, established practices, the nature of the employees' duties, and the extent to which employees have joined a professional organization. The act emphasizes, however, that nothing shall prevent professional employees, "individually or in concert . . . from presenting or making known their positions and/or proposals to a board of education, a superintendent of schools or other chief executive officer employed by a board of education."

Once the exclusive representative of an appropriate negotiating unit is selected, an education board and the representative "may enter into an agreement covering terms and conditions of professional service." The agreement becomes binding when ratified by a majority of the members of both parties, and shall be effective for a period not to exceed two years. In addition, such an agreement may include "procedures for final and binding arbitration of such disputes as may arise involving the interpretation, application or violation of such agreement." If either party to an agreement "is aggrieved by the failure, neglect or refusal of the other party to proceed to arbitration in the manner provided . . . such aggrieved party may file a complaint in court for a summary action without jury seeking an order directing that the arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement."

Although the act mandates professional negotiation, it emphasizes that nothing "shall be construed to change or affect any right or duty conferred or imposed by law upon any board of education." It also provides that written notices to negotiate new items or amend an existing contract must be filed by either party on or before December 1 of any school year, and must contain "in reasonable and understandable detail the purpose of the new or amended items desired." Strikes by professional employees specifically are prohibited by the act.

MICHIGAN

FIRST NEA LOCAL ASSOCIATION CONTRACT WITH FOUR-YEAR COLLEGE NEGOTIATED

Faculty members at Central Michigan University have negotiated the first agreement with a four-year college involving an NEA local association. This agreement reportedly is only the second such contract in the country. The contract covers all 547 members of the university faculty from instructors to full professors (including department chairmen), and provides an average salary increase of more than 12 percent. In addition, a number of special features which reportedly are unique in higher education negotiation are contained in the contract. One such feature creates a series of joint committees which will study various problems and submit findings to the faculty and administration bargaining teams for use in future negotiation.

The local association representing Central Michigan University faculty members is affiliated with the Michigan Higher Education Association, a unit of the Michigan Education Association and the NEA's National Society of Professors.

NEW YORK

CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING EXCUSED EMPLOYEE ABSENTEEISM CAUSE COURT TO ANNUL STRIKE PENALTY

The New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division found that state hospital employees who absented themselves from work for several days in March of 1968 and subsequently received excused leave with full compensation from their supervisors for the period of absence had not engaged in a strike within the meaning of the Taylor Law. As a result, the court annulled an "excessive" penalty imposed by the state's Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) upon the employee's representative organization, the Civil Service Employees Association (CSEA). Noting, however, the "other perplexing features of this administrative proceeding," the court held that "under different circumstances, absenteeism, as such, might constitute the basis for a finding of 'strike' under the statute."

On November 15, 1967, shortly after the Taylor Law was enacted, the New York state governor recognized the CSEA as representative of a "general unit" of state hospital employees, which included some of the allegedly striking employees in the present case. Then on November 30 the PERB issued an order which interrupted negotiations between the governor and the CSEA, and which effectively precluded the CSEA from acting as representative of its members; this order was annulled by the court in the present case on February 14, 1968, following an Article 78 proceeding brought by the CSEA. While the PERB was appealing the annullment of its order to the state court of appeals, the state division of classification handed down a March 1 decision on the appeal of some 30,000 clerical and stenographic employees seeking reallocation to higher salary grades.

When this decision of the division of classification became known to some 129 clerks, stenographers, and telephone operators employed at the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Manhattan State Hospitals, these employees absented themselves from work for three days (March 5-7) to express their dissatisfaction with the decision. According to the court, > many of the employees obtained permission to be absent from work prior to leaving and it is not disputed that following the absences nearly all of the employees involved were permitted by their supervisors and the Department of Mental Hygiene to charge the absences as [various excused leaves] and that with such excused leave, nearly all of the employees received full compensation for the period of absence.

Some two months after the excused absenteeism, however, the Department of Mental Hygiene decided that the incident had been a strike, accordingly docked the employees' pay, and directed that disciplinary proceedings be instituted against the individual employees. At a hearing relative to the disciplinary proceedings a hearing officer determined that the employees' absences "were not unauthorized or otherwise contrary" to the Taylor Law.

In the interim the PERB filed charges alleging that the CSEA had violated Section 210, Subdivision 1, of the Taylor Law in that "'it caused, instigated, encouraged, condoned and engaged in strikes' by certain employees in the named hospitals in the City of New York." Noting that the pertinent section of the statute specifies a strike, the court held that > unless upon the present record it can be found that there was a strike by the employees as charged, there can be no penalty imposed in this proceeding because of the familiar rule that the scope of a punishment or penalty proceeding before an administrative board is limited to the charges and specifications as served upon the alleged wrongdoer prior to a hearing.

The hearing officer in this case found that the evidence was insufficient to establish that CSEA either caused or instigated the strike, however, PERB reversed this finding and found that there was sufficient participation by the officials of CSEA to hold that CSEA did instigate or encourage the employees' actions. The activities relied upon by PERB were not conducted or condoned by the officials of CSEA at a State level. Beyond doubt the local chapter officials of CSEA did participate in the employee meetings and did convey to the employees the fact that CSEA members are entitled to legal representation from CSEA in any disciplinary proceeding. Upon the record in its entirety, there are no inferences available that responsible officials of CSEA at the State or local level actually participated by way of instigation in the absenteeism. Such activity as might be termed encouragement is remote from the absenteeism and cannot be considered as being a precipitating factor in the absenteeism.

The court additionally emphasized that since the disciplinary proceedings against the individual employees were determined in their favor, "the finding that CSEA instigated or encouraged a strike would be a non sequitur," and the imposition of sanctions in the face of such a favorable determination "would be an inequitable result." Moreover, since the "limbo in which CSEA was cast" by PERB intervention in the union's negotiations with the state was not removed until the March 7 decision of the court of appeals, the court found that during the period of the employees' absenteeism

CSEA was not in a position to act as a union under the Taylor Law to secure employment benefits to its members... [and] it is difficult to perceive the basis by which PERB can consider [the CSEA] to have been the recognized employee organization of the subject employees... within the meaning of subdivision 1 of section 210 of the [Taylor Law] for purposes of instigating or encouraging a strike. We do not, however, pass upon this particular preliminary question.

In addition... it is established that not all of the employees were members of CSEA, but that in fact some were members of a competing union and some were not members of any union.

In light of the background of the case and the fact that the Taylor Law was quite new when the employees' absenteeism occurred, the court ruled that the six-month dues deduction forfeiture imposed by the PERB upon the CSEA was excessive and should be annulled without costs.

TAYLOR LAW AMENDED

An amendment which became effective February 27, 1970, extends Section 205, subdivision five, paragraph (d), of the Taylor Law to provide that the "exclusive nondelegable jurisdiction" granted to the Public Employment Relations Board in establishing "procedures for the prevention of improper employer and employee organization practices" shall not apply to New York City prior to March 1, 1971.

OREGON

ATTORNEY GENERAL CLARIFIES TEACHERS' CONSULTATION RIGHTS, COMPENSATION, AND BENEFITS

In response to a question submitted by a state senator, the Oregon attorney general held that the consultation rights of certified school personnel below the rank of superintendent statutorily are limited to "matters of salaries and related economic policies affecting professional services." Noting that ORS 342.460 "is rather narrowly drawn" in comparison to other state and federal bargaining statutes, the attorney general explained that items such as paid holidays, the amount of severance pay, school calendar, and in-service days could be subjects for consultation under the statute, because they "are generally considered to be closely related to salaries," or comprise economic policies related to salaries. Working conditions, class size, grievance procedures, and the phraseology of employment contracts, however, "would appear to be only remotely related to salaries," and the possibility of their being matters for consultation under the statute "would depend on the particular facts under consideration."

Another question raised by the state senator was whether teachers must be paid for the Christmas and New Year's Day holidays. The attorney general referred to ORS 336.010(5), which provides that "when a holiday occurs on what would otherwise be a school day, teachers shall be allowed full pay for the holiday." Explaining that most school calendars provide a Christmas vacation beginning before Christmas and extending beyond New Year's Day, the attorney general held that this period "is not considered to be a part of the school year under the teacher's contract." As the two holidays "do not occur on days which 'would otherwise be a school day,'" he concluded that "in school districts which observe 'Christmas vacation'... as part of the school calendar, a teacher would not be entitled to pay for Christmas day and New Year's day."

In response to a question raised by an official of the state education department, the attorney general determined that school boards may pay premiums on life insurance policies for community college employees, because such payments "can properly be considered as part of the employe's compensation." ORS 332.505 allows district school boards to "define the duties, terms and conditions of employment and fix the compensation" of its employees; the word "compensation," according to the attorney general, "is a term broader than 'salary' or 'wages,' and clearly includes various non-monetary fringe benefits such as payment of life insurance premiums."

While earlier attorneys general opinions had held that a school board could not pay various benefits without specific statutory authority, the attorney general found that such a "strict construction . . . is inconsistent with the legislative grant giving broad discretion to school districts to fix the terms of compensation for their employes." He cited Hendryx v. School District No. 4 in which a court upheld "reasonable exercises of discretion within the broad framework of enabling statutes." Applying that philosophy to the instant matter, the attorney general concluded that a school district's authority "to fix the terms of compensation for its employes . . . includes the discretion to pay life insurance premiums as a part of that compensation."

SOUTH DAKOTA

BARGAINING STATUTE AMENDED TO ALLOW NEGOTIATION OF GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES

Two amendments to the South Dakota bargaining statute define grievances and grievance procedures, allow public employees to negotiate grievance procedures, further clarify the word "strike" as applied to public employees, and establish a procedure for the resolution of contract negotiation impasses. S.B. 89 was signed by the South Dakota governor on February 18, 1970, and S.B. 108 was signed into law on February 24, 1970.

S.B. 89 amends SDCL 3-18-2 to provide that public employees or their representatives and governmental agencies or their representatives shall have the right to meet and negotiate "with respect to grievance procedures and conditions of employment." The bill also amends item 3-18-3 of the bargaining statute to provide that "formal recognition shall give an organization the right to meet with, negotiate and otherwise communicate with the governmental agency or its designated representatives with the object of reaching a settlement applicable to all employees of the unit" [emphasis added]. S.B. 89 finally adds a new section to the statute which allows either party to a contract negotiation impasse to "request the commissioner of labor to intervene under the provisions of 60-10-1 to 60-10-3," although neither party is prohibited "from adopting any other procedure to facilitate a settlement that may be mutually agreeable."

The second amendment to the bargaining statute, S.B. 108, adds a new section to the statute defining a grievance as "a complaint by a public employee or group of public employees based upon an alleged violation, misinterpretation, or inequitable application of any existing agreements, contracts, ordinances, policies, rules or regulations of the government of the state . . . or the government of any one or more of the political subdivisions thereof . . . as they apply to the conditions of employment." Excluded from the definition are "negotiations for, or a disagreement over, a nonexisting agreement, contract, ordinance, policy, rule or regulation." The governing officer of each governmental agency is required by the amendment to enact "a procedure which its employees may follow for prompt informal dispositions of their grievances." If an employee grievance remains unresolved following enactment of a grievance procedure, it may be appealed to the labor commissioner, who shall conduct an investigation and hearing and render a binding order. And if no grievance procedure is enacted as required by the amendment, the labor commissioner may be asked to enter the grievance. Finally, the amendment stipulates that nothing shall prevent "a governmental agency from legally changing any ordinance, policy, rule or regulation which is currently the subject matter of a grievance procedure. However, any prior contractual rights shall not be affected by a subsequent change of any ordinance, policy, rule, or regulation."

S.B. 108 additionally amends SDCL 3-18-8 to provide that the implementation of any agreement reached between a labor organization and a governing body shall be "consistent with the powers of the governing body." And SDCL 3-18-9 was amended by the new act to provide that the word "strike" as used in the statute refers to "coercing a change in the conditions or compensation or the rights, privileges or obligations of employment," rather than "inducing, influencing or coercing a change."

Both amendments to the South Dakota bargaining statute are reprinted in their entirety in the "Texts" section of this DIGEST. Additions to the statute are italicized; deletions are indicated by strike-overs.

VERMONT

EXPIRATION DATE OF STATE EMPLOYEES' BARGAINING STATUTE REPEALED

Effective March 5, 1970, a provision which originally held that the Vermont State Employees Labor Relations Act would expire on July 1, 1970, was repealed by H.B. 409, L. 1970. The statute, which became effective July 1, 1969, grants collective bargaining rights to state employees and employees of Vermont state colleges. Teachers employed in quasi-public or private elementary and secondary schools are granted bargaining rights under another statute which became effective September 1, 1969, and is entitled "Labor Relations for Teachers."

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, APRIL AND MARCH 1970

Figures reported by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) indicate that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure for April 1970 stood at 134.0 (1957-59=100), an 0.6 percent rise above the previous month. BLS attributed about 40 percent of the rise in the April all-items index to increased consumer service charges associated with housing, mortgage interest, and utilities. The April figure represented a 6.0 percent rise above the all-items figure of a year ago. BLS also reported that the purchasing power of the consumer dollar stood at $.746 in April, based upon its average buying power in 1957-59.

The CPI all-items figure for March 1970 was reported as 133.2 (1957-59=100), an 0.5 percent rise above February 1970, and a 6.1 percent increase over the all-items index of March 1969. BLS attributed about 70 percent of the March CPI advance to increased consumer service charges associated with home mortgage interest payments, property taxes, home repair service, and residential telephone, water, and sewerage services. BLS additionally noted that charges for medical care services posted their largest monthly rise since 1966 in March.

GOVERNMENT WORK STOPPAGES, 1958 TO 1968

A report produced by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) reveals that from 1958 to 1968, government employee strikes rose from 15 to 254, as the workers involved increased from 1,700 to 202,000, and the resultant man-days of idleness increased from 7,500 to 2.5 million. In providing an over-all picture of government work stoppages during the 11-year span and comparing activity in the public sector with that in the private sector, BLS reported that by 1968 government employee strikes comprised 4.9 percent of all strikes, involved 7.6 percent of all workers, and resulted in 5.2 percent of all man-days of idleness.

In 1968, school employee strikes accounted for 34.6 percent of all government employee strikes, involved 71.8 percent of all government employees who engaged in strikes, and comprised 85.6 percent of all man-days of idleness lost during government strikes that year. The size of the latter two figures partially is attributed to the intensity and duration of the 1968 New York teachers' strike, which was included in BLS computations.

BLS noted that although teachers were once "less likely to leave their jobs than were other school employees," since 1964 "the majority of all public school stoppages have involved teachers, who made up over 80 percent of school employees involved in stoppages and 75 percent or more of the idleness in public schools." According to BLS, the two major issues contributing to school employee strikes during the 11-year period were general wage changes and supplementary benefits, and union organization and security matters.

Other data reported by BLS included:

- Strike activity in the public sector has increased at a "gradual but erratic" rate, although BLS found that such activity "is still low relative to that in the private sector." More government employees engaged in stoppages in 1968 than in any previous year, but these employees comprised only 1.7 percent of all public employees; workers involved in all strikes that year constituted 3.8 percent of total employment, a figure more than twice the government figure. BLS noted, however, that individual "work stoppages directed against public agencies are, on the average, larger than those involving private firms."
- Public employees "lag well behind the private sector" in terms of man-days of idleness figured as a percent of estimated total working time. Although the average days of idleness in the public sector increased from 2.6 days to 9.8 days from the 1958-64 period to the 1965-68 period, BLS found that the measure of duration for public employee strikes "has remained substantially below that for private industry, although the variation has not been consistent."

- In regard to the major issues contributing to work stoppages, BLS reported that the longest government stoppages usually are caused by general wage change disputes, while union organization disputes cause the longest strikes in private industry. During the 11-year period, government stoppages resulting from wage disputes registered an average of 6.8 days of idleness per worker; in private industry, however, the rate was 20.5 days. Although stoppages caused by interunion or intraunion disputes are relatively few in the government sector, they tend to result in relatively long periods of idleness per worker, an average of 5.8 days during the 11-year span. Stoppages caused by union organization and security disputes have resulted in about 4.2 days of idleness per worker in the government sector, as compared to an average of 26 days in the private sector.
- During the 1966-1968 period the Midwest, Northeast, and West experienced large increases in idleness per worker rates resulting from government stoppages, in comparison to the 1958-65 period. Government stoppages in the Midwest increased from 3.8 days of idleness to 6.3 days between the two periods; in the Northeast, average days of idleness per government worker increased from 3.5 days to 13.2 days; in the West, days of idleness caused by government stoppages increased from 2.9 days to 5.2 days. In the South, however, BLS found that the average days of idleness resulting from government stoppages was "considerably higher" during the 1958-1965 period (5.7 days) than during the 1966-68 period (6 days).

Copies of BLS Report 348, entitled Work Stoppages in Government, 1958-68, are available from the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington, D.C. 20212.

Statistics

CLASSROOM TEACHER NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: THREE YEARS' EXPERIENCE

National surveys of teacher-board negotiation were conducted by the NEA Research Division during the 1966-67, 1967-68, and 1968-69 school years. In each year all school systems with enrollments of 1,000 or more were sent survey questionnaires which they were asked to return with copies of their agreements. The surveyed systems comprised approximately one-third of all U.S. school systems, and employed approximately 90 percent of all professional public-school personnel. Systems reporting negotiation in 1966-67, and all systems reporting negotiation for the first time in each subsequent survey were required to validate such negotiation by sending a copy of their agreement to the NEA Research Division's depository. In the 1968-69 survey school systems which previously filed agreements validated those agreements which were still in effect.

Table 1 presents year-by-year totals of the number of systems surveyed, the number of systems with classroom teacher agreements, the number of systems with comprehensive classroom teacher agreements, and the number of personnel covered by classroom teacher agreements. Table 2 indicates the number of systems in each state which reported classroom teacher agreements at least once during the three years surveyed. The figures presented in these tables differ somewhat from those published in previous tables, for they represent the first accounting of classroom teacher agreements found in all systems surveyed during the three-year period.

A classroom teacher agreement is one to which a classroom teacher bargaining unit is party, whether this unit consists exclusively of classroom teachers or includes classroom teachers and other school-board employees, such as central-office administrators or principals. Agreements for both inclusive and exclusive classroom teacher units are shown in the tables.

As Table 1 indicates, the number of systems surveyed changed little over the three-year period. In addition, the survey response rate remained substantially the same: 85.4 percent in 1966-67, 88.5 percent in 1967-68, and 84.5 percent in 1968-69. A comparison of the data derived from the three surveys, therefore, provides a reliable indication of the growth in the number of school systems having classroom teacher negotiation agreements.

The number of systems reporting classroom teacher agreements in each survey increased 71.4 percent between the school years 1966-67 and 1968-69, as the number of personnel covered by these agreements increased 71.3 percent. Over the same three-year period the number of systems with comprehensive classroom teacher agreements grew 167.4 percent, and the number of personnel covered by these agreements increased 144.1 percent. A comprehensive agreement is one which contains some or all of the provisions found in procedural agreements (recognition of an employee organization, negotiation procedures, and procedures for the resolution of impasse), as well as specific items relating to personnel and conditions of employment which are negotiated and agreed upon by the parties involved. The number of states reporting school systems with comprehensive classroom teacher agreements increased from 13 to 25 over the three-year period.

A study of the individual school systems recorded in each survey reveals that 3,045 systems filed at least one classroom teacher agreement for one of the three years surveyed. During the 1966-67 school year, 1,531 school systems reported agreements; in the 1967-68 survey 809 systems reported agreements for the first time; systems reporting agreements for the first time in the 1968-69 survey numbered 705.

The number of systems reporting agreements in the 1967-68 and 1968-69 surveys falls short of the number of systems with negotiation experience because a number of systems which previously reported agreements had to be eliminated from the statistics. Some were eliminated because their agreements had been rescinded, others were eliminated by mergers or consolidations, and still other systems were eliminated for failure to respond to the survey questionnaires. In addition, some systems were unable to verify the existence of a current agreement because of the passage of new or revised negotiation legislation, bargaining impasses, representation disputes, the extension of an expired agreement, or uncompleted negotiation. Thus, while the number of school systems reporting classroom teacher agreements increased 71.4 percent over the three-year span, the number of systems which had experienced negotiation at least once during the same period rose 98.9 percent.

[a]As the 1966–67 school year was the first year in which the NEA Research Division conducted a negotiation survey, the figures in this column represent all systems reporting negotiation for the first time.

[b]Forty-seven school systems which were late in their response to the survey have been added to the compilation of survey statistics since the preliminary report on the status of negotiation agreements published in the June 1969 DIGEST.

[c]The figures for these school years exclude agreements which do not cover classroom teachers.

[d]The figures for this school year include all school systems which verified the existence of a comprehensive agreement in their system. Although 1,040 systems negotiated a comprehensive agreement for the 1968–69 school year, only the 978 systems which filed a copy of their 1968–69 comprehensive agreement in the NEA depository were analyzed in the Negotiation Agreement Provisions.

1969-70 SURVEY OF WRITTEN NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS

Preliminary results of the NEA Research Division's annual survey of written negotiation agreements indicate that 3,294 public school systems with an enrollment of 1,000 or more were operating under a written negotiation agreement during the 1969-70 school year. Of the 7,142 school systems surveyed, 6,182 systems employing 1,894,301 instructional personnel responded to the survey, an 86.4 percent response rate. The number of systems with negotiation agreements comprised 53.2 percent of all responding systems, and employed 66.2 percent of all instructional personnel employed in responding systems.

Systems responding in the survey were required to validate the existence of a written teacher-school board conferral procedure, or a negotiation agreement meeting established minimum criteria by filing a copy of that document in the NEA depository.

An increase of 670 systems with negotiated agreements was noted in the 1969-70 survey. A portion of this increase can be attributed to the 1969 enactment of teacher negotiation statutes in Maine, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Vermont. In addition, the Oregon statute was amended during that year to allow certificated school employees exclusive representation rights, the Connecticut statute was amended in the areas of representation and duty to negotiate, and a PN law for teachers affecting only one county was enacted in Florida. Delaware enacted a teacher negotiation statute in late October 1969, and Kansas and Alaska enacted new statutes in March 1970, but these recent laws exerted no significant influence upon the survey results. Alabama, Georgia, Hawaii, Louisiana, and Mississippi have no school systems reporting negotiated agreements.

Highlights of the preliminary survey results include:

- The number of systems with negotiated agreements rose from 2,624 in 1968-69 to 3,294 in 1969-70, a 25.5 percent increase.
- Instructional personnel employed in systems with agreements increased from 1,043,565 in 1968-69 to 1,255,364 in 1969-70, a 20.3 percent rise.
- Of the 3,294 systems which validated written negotiation agreements in the 1969-70 survey, 3,257 systems (98.9 percent) indicated organizational representation with a national affiliation. NEA affiliates were the exclusive bargaining representatives in 2,974 systems with negotiated agreements; American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, locals represented instructional personnel in 91 systems with agreements; a mixed affiliation of two or more representative organizations negotiated agreements in 184 school systems.
- National teacher representation figures indicate that the NEA represented 176,208 more teachers in 1969-70 than in the previous year, while representation by American Federation of Teachers locals increased by 22,335 over the same period. Considered in conjunction with the greater number of school systems responding in the 1969-70 survey, the rise in NEA representation pushed the NEA's share of total national teacher representation up to 81.1 percent.
- More than 75 percent of all instructional personnel employed in the nation's largest school systems (enrollments of 12,000 or more) were working under negotiation agreements, according to the 1969-70 survey.
- The Far West remains the region with the greatest proportion of instructional personnel employed in systems with negotiation agreements (93.8 percent). But the 1969-70 survey revealed that only the Southeast and Southwest regions now have less than 60 percent of their professional public school personnel employed in systems with negotiation agreements.

PROFESSIONAL NEGOTIATIONS ACT FOR TEACHERS

House Bill No. 1647

An Act concerning public schools and community junior colleges; collective negotiation and conferences concerning terms and conditions of employment; making arbitration provisions; amending K.S.A. 72-5411 and repealing the existing section.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF KANSAS:

New Section 1.

When used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) The term "person" includes one or more individuals, organizations, associations, corporations, boards, committees, commissions, agencies, or their representatives.

(b) "Board of education" means any board of education of any school district or the board of trustees of any community junior college of Kansas.

(c) "Professional employee" means any person employed by a board of education in a position which requires a certificate issued by the state board of education or employed in a professional educational capacity by a board of education.

(d) "Administrative employee" means any professional employee who is employed by a board of education in an administrative capacity.

(e) "Professional employees' organizations" means one or more organizations, agencies, committees, councils or groups of any kind in which professional employees participate, and which exist for the purpose, in whole or part, of meeting, conferring, consulting and discussing with boards of education with respect to the terms and conditions of professional service.

(f) "Representative" means any professional employees' organization or person it authorizes or designates to act in its behalf.

(g) "Professional negotiation" means meeting, conferring, consulting and discussing in a good faith effort by both parties to reach agreement with respect to the terms and conditions of professional service.

New Section 2.

Professional employees shall have the right to form, join or assist professional employees' organizations, to participate in professional negotiation with boards of education through representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of establishing, maintaining, protecting or improving terms and conditions of professional service. Professional employees shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of the foregoing activities. In professional negotiations under this act the board of education may be represented by an agent or committee designated by it.

New Section 3.

The representative designated or selected for the purposes of professional negotiation by the majority of the professional employees, except administrative employees, in an appropriate negotiating unit shall be the exclusive representative of all the professional employees, except administrative employees, in such unit for such purpose. The representative designated or selected for the purpose of professional negotiation by the majority of the administrative employees in an appropriate negotiating unit shall be the exclusive representative of all the administrative employees in such unit for such purpose. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent professional employees, individually or in concert or through such representatives as they may choose collectively or individually, from presenting or making known their positions and/or proposals to a board of education, a superintendent of schools or other chief executive officer employed by a board of education.

New Section 4.

Any professional employees' organization may file a request with a board of education alleging that a majority of the professional employees in an appropriate negotiating unit wish to be represented for the purposes of professional negotiation by such organization and asking such board of education to recognize it as the exclusive representative under section 3 of this act. Such request shall describe the grouping of jobs or positions which constitute the unit claimed to be appropriate and shall include a demonstration of majority support through verified membership lists. Notice of such request shall immediately be posted by the board of education on a bulletin board at each school or other facility in which members of the unit claimed to be appropriate are employed. Such request for recognition shall be granted by the board of education unless:

(a) The board of education has a good faith doubt as to the accuracy or validity of the evidence demonstrating majority support; or

(b) another professional employees' organization files with the board of education a competing claim of majority support within ten (10) calendar days after the posting of notice of the original request and submits as evidence of its claim of majority support verified membership lists demonstrating support of at least thirty percent (30%) of the professional employees in the appropriate negotiating unit; or

(c) there is currently in effect a lawful written agreement negotiated by the board of education and a professional employees' organization, unless the expiration date of such agreement is less than sixty (60) days after the filing of the request for recognition; or

(d) the board of education has, within the previous thirty-six (36) months, lawfully recognized a professional employees' organization other than the petitioner as the exclusive representative of any professional employees included in the unit described in the petition.

New Section 5.

A petition may be filed with the state board of education, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe for such filings, asking it to investigate and decide the question of whether professional employees of an appropriate negotiating unit have selected or designated an exclusive representative under section 3 of this act, by:

(a) A board of education alleging that it has received a request for exclusive recognition from a professional employees' organization and has a good faith doubt as to the accuracy or validity of the claims made in such request; or

(b) by a professional employees' organization alleging that it has filed a request for recognition as exclusive representative with a board of education and that such request has been denied.

New Section 6.

Upon receipt of such a petition the state board of education or its agents shall conduct such inquiries and investigations or hold such hearings as it shall deem necessary in order to decide the questions raised by the petition. The state board of education's determination may be based upon the evidence adduced in such inquiries, investigations, or hearings as it or its agents shall make or hold, or upon the results of a secret ballot election that it shall direct and conduct if deemed necessary: Provided, That the state board of education shall dismiss, without determining the questions raised therein, any petition filed pursuant to subsection (b) of section 5 of this act if:

(a) The petition is not supported by credible evidence that at least thirty percent (30%) of the professional employees in the unit described therein are members of the organization seeking recognition; or

(b) the board of education has, within the previous twelve (12) months, lawfully recognized a professional employees' organization other than the petitioner as the exclusive representative of any professional employees included in the unit described in the petition.

New Section 7.

If the state board of education decides that it is necessary to direct and conduct a secret ballot election in order to resolve the questions raised by such petition, it shall order such election held, but in no event shall the name of a professional employees' organization appear on such ballot unless it has submitted to the state board of education satisfactory evidence demonstrating that at least thirty percent (30%) of the professional employees in the appropriate unit are members in good standing of such organization.

New Section 8.

In each case where the question is in issue, the state board of education shall decide, on the basis of the community of interest between and among the professional employees of the board of education, except administrative employees, their wishes and/or their established practices including, among other things, the extent to which such employees have joined a professional employees organization, whether the unit appropriate for the purposes of professional negotiation shall consist of all persons employed by the board of education who are engaged in teaching or performing other duties of an educational nature, except administrative employees, or some subdivision thereof: Provided, That a unit including classroom teachers shall not be appropriate unless it includes all such teachers employed by the board of education, except administrative employees. A unit including administrative employees shall include all administrative employees employed by the board of education.

New Section 9.

A board of education and a representative selected or designated pursuant to the provisions of sections 3 to 8 of this act may enter into an agreement covering terms and conditions of professional service. Such agreements become binding when ratified by a majority of the members of the board of education and a majority of the members of the applicable negotiating unit.

New Section 10.

Except as otherwise expressly provided herein, this act shall not operate so as to annul, modify or preclude the renewal or continuation of any lawful agreement heretofore entered into between a board of education and a professional employees' organization covering terms and conditions of professional service.

New Section 11.

(a) Nothing in sections 1 to 12, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to change or affect any right or duty conferred or imposed by law upon any board of education, except that boards of education are required to comply with this act in recognizing professional employees' organizations, and when such an organization is recognized, the board of education and the professional employees' organization shall enter into professional negotiations prior to issuance of the annual teachers' contracts or renewal of the same on request of either party: Provided, That notices to negotiate on new items or to amend an existing contract must be filed on or before December 1 in any school year by either party, such notices to be in writing and delivered to the superintendent of schools or to the representative of the bargaining unit and containing in reasonable and understandable detail the purpose of the new or amended items desired.

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize a strike by professional employees.

(c) Any agreement lawfully made under the provisions of this act may be adopted by reference and made a part of the employment contract between any professional employee of the applicable negotiating unit and a board of education for a period of not to exceed two years.

New Section 12.

(a) A board of education and a professional employees' organization who enter into an agreement covering terms and conditions of professional service may include in such agreement procedures for final and binding arbitration of such disputes as may arise involving the interpretation, application or violation of such agreement.

(b) Where a party to such agreement is aggrieved by the failure, neglect or refusal of the other party to proceed to arbitration in the manner provided for in such agreement, such aggrieved party may file a complaint in court for a summary action without jury seeking an order directing that the arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement.

Section 13.

K.S.A. 72-5411 is hereby amended to read as follows: All contracts of employment of teachers in the public schools in the state, shall continue in full force and effect during good behavior and efficient and competent service rendered by the teacher, and all such contracts of employment shall be deemed to continue for the next succeeding school year unless written notice of intention to terminate the contract be served by the governing body upon any such teacher on or before the fifteenth day of March or the teacher shall give written notice to the governing body of the school district on or before the fifteenth day of April that the teacher does not desire continuation of said contract: ~~Provided, That in common school districts and rural high school districts the continuation of such contracts shall be subject to the annual school meeting voting to maintain school for the next succeeding year, and subject to the adoption of a sufficient budget: Provided further, That.~~ Terms of a contract may be changed at any time by mutual consent of both the teacher and the governing body of the school district.

New Section 14.

If any provision of this act shall be held invalid, other provisions of this act shall not be affected thereby.

Section 15.

K.S.A. 72-5411 is hereby repealed.

Section 16.

This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the statute book.

AMENDMENTS TO THE SOUTH DAKOTA BARGAINING STATUTE

An Act

ENTITLED, An Act to amend SDCL 3-18-2, 3-18-3, and 3-18 by adding a new section thereto, all concerning public employees' unions.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA:

Section 1.

That SDCL 3-18-2 be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

3-18-2. Public employees shall have the right to form and join labor or employee organizations, and shall have the right not to form and join such organizations. Public employees shall have the right to designate representatives for the purpose of meeting and negotiating with the governmental agency or representatives designated by it with respect to grievance procedures and conditions of employment. It shall be unlawful to discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee for the exercise of such rights, and the governmental agency or its designated representatives shall be required to meet and negotiate with the representatives of the employees at reasonable times in connection with such grievance procedures and conditions of employment. It shall be unlawful for any person or group of persons, either directly or indirectly to intimidate or coerce any public employee to join, or refrain from joining, a labor or employee organization.

Section 2.

That SDCL 3-18-3 be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

3-18-3. Organizations of public employees shall be granted recognition by a governmental agency according to the extent to which they represent employees of the governmental agency. Informal recognition shall be granted to any labor or employee organization regardless of the recognition granted to any other labor or employee organization. Informal recognition shall give an organization the right to meet with, confer, and otherwise communicate with the governmental agency or its designated representatives on matters of interest to its members. Formal recognition shall be granted to any labor or employee organization representing a majority of the employees in an appropriate unit. Formal recognition shall give an organization the right to meet with, negotiate and otherwise communicate with the governmental agency or its designated representatives with the object of reaching a settlement applicable to all employees of the unit.

Section 3.

That SDCL 3-18 be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto a new section reading as follows:

In case of an impasse or failure to reach an agreement in negotiations conducted under the provisions of this chapter, either party may request the commissioner of labor to intervene under the provisions of 60-10-1 to 60-10-3. Nothing in this section shall prohibit the parties to such an impasse from adopting any other procedure to facilitate a settlement that may be mutually agreeable.

An Act

ENTITLED, An Act relating to SDCL 3-18 and providing for grievance procedures and their enactment by the political subdivisions of, and the state of, South Dakota, and amending 3-18-8 and 3-18-9 relative to public employees' unions.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA:

Section 1.

The word "grievance" as used in this Act and SDCL 3-18 shall mean a complaint by a public employee or group of public employees based upon an alleged violation, misinterpretation, or inequitable application of any existing agreements, contracts, ordinances, policies, rules or regulations of the government of the state of South Dakota or the government of any one or more of the political subdivisions thereof, or of the public schools, or any authority, commission, or board, or any other branch of the public service, as they apply to the conditions of employment. Negotiations for, or a disagreement over, a nonexisting agreement, contract, ordinance, policy, rule or regulation is not a "grievance" and is not subject to this section.

The governing officer or board of each governmental agency shall enact, by agreement, ordinance, regulation, rule or resolution, and make known to its employees a procedure which its employees may follow for prompt informal dispositions of their grievances.

If, after following the grievance procedure enacted by the governing body, the grievance remains unresolved, it may be appealed to the labor commissioner, who shall conduct an investigation and hearing and shall issue an order covering the points raised, which order shall be binding on the employees and the governmental agency.

If no grievance procedure is enacted as provided in this section, the labor commissioner may be requested to enter the grievance pursuant to SDCL 60-10.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed as preventing a governmental agency from legally changing any ordinance, policy, rule, or regulation which is currently the subject matter of a grievance procedure. However, any prior contractual rights shall not be affected by a subsequent change of any ordinance, policy, rule, or regulation.

That SDCL 3-18-8 be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

3-18-8. If a settlement is reached with a labor or employee organization or organizations and the governing body, such governing body shall implement the settlement in the form of an ordinance, resolution, or memorandum of understanding as may be appropriate and consistent with the powers of the governing body. If the settlement requires the adoption of a law or charter amendment to implement it fully, the governmental agency shall make every reasonable effort to propose and secure the enactment of the law or charter amendment.

Section 3.

That SDCL 3-18-9 be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

3-18-9. The word "strike" as used in this chapter shall mean the failure to report for duty, the willful absence from one's position, the stoppage of work, or the abstinence in whole or in part from the full, faithful and proper performance of the duties of employment by concerting action with others, and without the lawful approval of one's superior, or in any manner interfering with the operation of government of the state of South Dakota, the government of any of the political subdivisions thereof, the public schools or any authority, commission, board or branch thereof, for the purpose of ~~inducing, influencing or~~ coercing a change in the conditions or compensation or the rights, privileges or obligations of employment.

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES GRANTED TO BARGAINING REPRESENTATIVE UPHELD

A constitutional challenge to the Denver County School District's grant of exclusive privileges to the Denver Classroom Teachers Association (DCTA) was rejected by the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado in finding that such a grant did not violate the minority organization's First and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Noting that the challenge brought by the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 858, presented "a departure from classic labor law in that the employer is a public entity . . . and the place of employment is a public institution of a character presenting special yet distinct opportunities for the exercise of First Amendment rights," the court essentially concluded that the issue involved labor relations, rather than impairment of constitutional rights.

After the DCTA again was elected bargaining representative of Denver teachers in the spring of 1969, the DCTA and the district began negotiating a renewal agreement. Local 858 subsequently filed suit against the district for injunctive and declaratory relief, claiming that the district's grant of check-off and other exclusive privileges to the DCTA and its denial of the same to Local 858 violated the local's rights of free speech and equal protection under the law.

The court initially determined that three questions were at issue: whether the court had jurisdiction over the action, whether the denial of exclusive privileges to Local 858 violated the First Amendment, and whether the denial violated the local's right to equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment. In examining case law and emphasizing that the suit was an action for injunctive and declaratory relief rather than damages, the court ruled that the district was a "person" within the meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. 1983, and that the court had subject-matter jurisdiction over the cause of action.

Plaintiffs' contention that the district's grant of exclusive privileges to the DCTA violated plaintiffs' rights of free speech and association under the First Amendment was not supported "with convincing authority," according to the court. Explaining that "we must carefully distinguish the exercise of those rights peculiarly involved in the employer-employee relationship from broader rights of speech and association," the court found that plaintiffs' brief "generally alleges . . . interference with organizational rights [while] their argument . . . is directed to a claim of impairment of broader rights of free speech." The court rejected the latter claim, explaining:

> The parties are so situated and the controversy arose under such circumstances that plaintiffs seek to utilize certain facilities that are clearly distinct from pure speech rights. This case presents a problem of labor relations, and although the problem is in the context of public employment, this does not alter its essential character. Plaintiffs are a labor union and its officials and members, and they are seeking to utilize only those internal channels of school communication which are not traditionally of a public nature for the purpose of furthering the goals of their union. The privilege of dues check off which they claim is peculiarly a matter of labor relations. Thus, we do not accept plaintiffs' characterization of the issue as one of alleged impairment of broad First Amendment rights. Rather, the case presents the precise issue of whether or not the granting of . . . exclusive privileges to the DCTA impairs the right to organize and form unions of Denver teachers who are not members of the DCTA.

Freedom of association, according to the court, is a First Amendment freedom "which may be impaired by state action when the state can show a compelling interest which, when balanced against the substantive right to be protected, outweighs that right." In finding that plaintiffs proved no "significant interference" with their freedom of association, the court elaborated upon the balancing of state interests and individual constitutional rights:

> The grant of exclusive privileges to one of two competing unions after that union has won a representation election serves several interests. It allows the effective exercise of the right to form and join unions in the context of public employment. It provides the duly elected representative ready means of communicating with all teachers, not just the DCTA membership. This is essential, since the DCTA represents all teachers, not just its membership. It eliminates inter-union competition for membership within the public schools except at time of representation elections. This has several salutary aspects. Orderly functioning of the schools as education institutions is insured through the limiting of the time span when they may become a labor battlefield.

The representative union is not subjected to competition within the schools, and thus is better able to function as a representative, its efforts not spent in constant competition with the union that lost the representation election. The fact that the representative's strength is not bled away by such constant high intensity inter-union conflict allows the public employees better representation, providing a more beneficial exercise of the right of association. Finally, all of these benefits resulting from the grant of exclusive privileges to the elected representative serve the principal policy of insuring labor peace in public schools. . . .

Against these interests we must balance the limited interference with plaintiffs' right to associate. The interference is that they are not granted equal access to internal channels of communication, nor are they granted a check off. There is no allegation that plaintiffs' normal means of communication with teachers is impaired. Defendant and intervener argue that if in fact the defendant can lawfully deny access to these facilities to all persons, then there exists no right to their use. We find this argument compelling. Plaintiffs do not contend that they have a right to a dues check off as a part of their right to associate. . . . We find no action on the part of the defendant denying the plaintiffs' right to meet, to speak, to publish, to proselytize or to collect union dues. Plaintiffs have the right to do these things through the means employed by other organizations. We agree with . . . Baruch v. City of New York . . . that neither the First Amendment nor any other constitutional provision entitles a public employees' union which has lost a representation election to the special aid of a public employer's collection and disbursing facilities.

Plaintiffs' Fourteenth Amendment claim alleged that the grant of exclusive privileges to the DCTA amounted to granting special privileges to certain members of the teaching profession while arbitrarily denying them to others and thereby constituting a denial of equal protection of the law. Acknowledging that a distinction between the DCTA and Local 858 was created when the DCTA won the representation election, the court nevertheless held that "the facts do not show that the distinction exists among members of the teaching profession in Denver schools. All members of the profession are represented by the DCTA in dealings with the School District and none are represented by [Local 858], since [Local 858] does not deal with the District." Even assuming that some distinction among members of the Denver teaching profession results from different union membership, the court concluded that the grant of exclusive privileges to the duly elected bargaining representative "promotes a compelling government interest . . . [and] satisfies the strictest test for constitutional equal protection."

The court accordingly denied a motion for summary judgment entered by plaintiffs, and granted like motions entered by the district and the DCTA. (Local 858 of the American Federation of Teachers, et al. v. School District No. 1, et al., U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, June 3, 1970.)

FLORIDA

TEACHERS' CHALLENGE TO STATE STATUTE REMANDED FOR DETERMINATION OF MERITS

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed and remanded a decision of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida which dismissed an action for damages filed by a group of public-school teachers seeking to have a Florida statute declared unconstitutional. Unable to determine from the record whether the statute excluding Palm Beach County administrators and supervisors from union representation also deterred public-school teachers from joining labor organizations, the appeals court remanded the case "for the normal process of development of the facts and determination of the real merits of the case."

In the prior civil rights action, plaintiffs sought declaratory and injunctive relief from enforcement of a state statute which "in substance [authorized] dismissal of any administrative or supervisory personnel of Palm Beach County who [joined] professional organizations whose function [was] the collective representation of the teaching profession with regard to terms, tenure, or conditions of employment" (NRD, 1-70, 10). At that time, the lower court determined that the action was also a class action, members of which class included "all organizations whose activities include the collective representation of Palm Beach County, Florida, with regard to terms, tenure or conditions of employment, and all individuals who may be prohibited from participation or membership in any such organization by the provisions of [the contested statute]."

Asserting jurisdiction over the case, the lower court determined that the contested statute was "a classic example of a Fourteenth Amendment denial of equal protection claim"; since it applied only to members of the Palm Beach County teaching profession, defendants could not justify separating Palm Beach County teachers from teachers in other counties of the state, and no "compelling State concern [was] shown to underly this statute." Furthermore, the district court held that the statute violated "the basic freedoms of expression and association protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments." But the lower court dismissed the teachers' complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

In the instant case, the appeals court examined relations between the Palm Beach County Board of Public Instruction (defendant in the case), and the local representative organization, the Palm Beach County Teachers Association. Following a controversy between the two bodies in early 1968 which resulted in a work stoppage and mass resignations, the board began to develop its "Professional Affairs Policy, Number 8342.2," which provided that the board would hear representations only by individual teachers or committees established by the policy, but not by organizations such as the Association.

The Association alleged that board members had conceded that the policy was created to destroy the Association. Moreover, Association members could no longer obtain paid or unpaid leave to attend meetings of their parent associations (the Florida Education Association and the National Education Association), while non-Association members still received such permission. The Association also alleged that it could no longer perform its usual function of welcoming new teachers to the system, informing them of various benefit programs, and inviting them to join the Association, that agents for the board had threatened Association members with discriminatory treatment, and that they actually had fulfilled such a threat in one instance. Finally, one plaintiff whose name was on a promotion list alleged that the superintendent told him he would not be promoted because he was "a leader of an 'antagonistic' organization," and that when racial unrest was threatened he eventually received a position lower than expected.

Under the circumstances, the court reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings, explaining:

> We cannot escape the conclusion that the plaintiffs have alleged discrimination that could significantly deter freedom of association. It may be that there is adequate explanation and justification for each of these alleged actions, but in this posture of the case we cannot tell. It is equally possible that [Association] members are being unnecessarily penalized for their choice of organization. We have no doubt that teachers possess constitutionally protected rights of free association and that section 1983 provides a remedy against state interference. . . . The fact that here the discrimination has not extended to actual discharge does not preclude a remedy for the discrimination that has occurred.
> We expressly preclude discussion of what remedy is appropriate if the plaintiffs prove their case. The remedy will vary with what they prove, and we consider it unwise to speculate about appropriate action on such a sparse record.
> The defendants argue that we should sustain the district court's dismissal for three other reasons: that the members of the school board acting in their official capacities are not within the coverage of section 1983; that the plaintiffs' true remedy is in the Florida courts under Florida statutes and the federal courts should therefore abstain; and that the complaint does not meet the standards for a class action. We reject each of these contentions. . . . The plaintiffs have stated a federal cause of action and do not seek to interpret or attack Florida statutes. Finally, the defendants have shown no good reason why this action should not be sustained as a proper class action.

MINI-PERB'S REPRISAL RULING UNFOUNDED

The New York Supreme Court for Westchester County annulled a determination of the Westchester County Public Employment Relations Board (a mini-PERB) in finding that the mini-PERB's ruling on an alleged reprisal charge was not supported by the record. Denying the mini-PERB's petition for enforcement of its order, the court held that it clearly was not the intent of Article 14 of the state's Civil Service Law to require a county "to establish 'good cause' every time it elected not to renew the contract of a teacher who also happened to be an active member of the union."

An assistant professor at Westchester Community College who was hired in 1965 and employed on a year-to-year basis through the 1968-69 academic year filed a reprisal charge with the mini-PERB when the college did not renew her contract for the 1969-70 school year. A charter member of the United Federation of College Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1460, the teacher alleged that the nonrenewal of her contract was in retaliation for her organizational activities.

On May 21, 1969, counsel to the mini-PERB filed a complaint alleging in part that the teacher was informed of the nonrenewal of her contract after she had actively participated in representation proceedings at which Local 1460 was designated bargaining representative for the college's employees, and that the college's action constituted an act of reprisal. The college answered that its decision was not motivated by the teacher's union activity.

Following a hearing, a mini-PERB hearing officer determined that there was no evidence of reprisal in the college's decision and recommended that "the action of the College administration in not offering reemployment be left undisturbed." The mini-PERB, however, rejected the hearing officer's findings, determined that reprisal was evident in the college's action, and ordered the college to reinstate the teacher with back pay.

When the college failed to comply with the order, the mini-PERB instituted the present proceeding seeking enforcement of its order. The college argued that the mini-PERB lacked power to issue the order because pertinent statutes did not grant the mini-PERB jurisdiction "to hear and determine claims that a public employer was guilty of an unfair labor practice or of reprisal against a public employee." In addition, the college contended that the mini-PERB's findings and order were "arbitrary and capricious and unsupported by any evidence."

After reviewing the record and assuming that the mini-PERB possessed jurisdiction to hear the reprisal proceeding and issue the order, the court concluded that the order could not stand because it was unsupported by the record:

> In a proceeding such as this, the employer is not required to exonerate himself of the unfair labor practices charged. Rather, the burden of proof rests with the board, which must prove the charges affirmatively and by substantial evidence. . . . There is no dispute herein but that [the teacher] was engaged in organization activities on behalf of the union of which she was a charter member. PERB seized upon that fact and reasoned that since there had been no showing to its satisfaction that good cause existed for letting [the teacher] go, that therefore the decision to renew her contract must have been based upon her union activities. PERB concedes that [the teacher] did not hold a tenured position on the College teaching staff. It follows that the duration of her employment was solely for the limited annual periods for which she and the College contracted. She had no right or claim either to continued employment beyond the contractual periods, to the extension or renewal of such periods, or to any specification of reasons for the non-renewal of her contract.

PROCEDURAL SAFEGUARDS NECESSARY TO PROTECT NONTENURED TEACHER FROM UNJUST DISCHARGE

A nontenured assistant professor who brought suit for alleged violation of his constitutional rights of free speech and due process when Wisconsin State University decided not to retain him was granted partial summary judgment by the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin. Explaining that "substantive constitutional protection . . . is useless without procedural safeguards," and that the university's decision not to rehire "may not rest on a basis wholly unsupported in fact, or on a basis wholly without reason," the court ordered the university to give the professor a statement of reasons for nonretention and a hearing on the merits of the decision, or offer him a contract for the ensuing year.

The professor, a critic of the university administration and the board of regents during school disturbances, was told after the 1968-69 academic year of the university's decision not to rehire him. The university offered no reasons for its decision, and failed to hold a hearing on the merits. Alleging violation of his First Amendment right of free speech, and his Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment right to due process, the professor brought suit seeking summary judgment and an order directing the university to re-employ him. He additionally contended that the university's decision would damage his professional reputation and standing.

In denying violation of a constitutional right, the university said it had not acted against the professor for his expressions of opinion, and alleged that the professor was guilty of neglect, violation of duty, violation of university rules, and insubordination. It further argued that under state law a university may remove a nontenured teacher "at pleasure," that a decision not to rehire may be based upon "no reason or any reason," and that university discretion in such matters is necessary to maintain high levels of faculty "competency, responsibility, and devotion to duty."

At issue was whether the Constitution requires procedural safeguards (in the form of due process) against nonretention based on First Amendment rights, and "arbitrary" nonretention. The court found it "crystal clear" that observance of a professor's substantive First Amendment rights demands procedural protection so that "the employment of a teacher in a public school cannot be terminated because he has exercised that freedom secured to him by the Constitution." Arbitrary nonretention, however, assumes a situation where the basis for nonretention does not involve the exercise of constitutional freedoms. As such, the question becomes "whether the Fourteenth Amendment permits non-retention on a basis wholly without factual support, or wholly unreasoned."

Finding itself bound by the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Cafeteria Workers v. McElroy, the court proceeded to "undertake the balancing process described there: that is, to determine 'the precise nature of the government function involved as well as of the private interest that has been affected by governmental action.' " Noting that the "interest of the university in assembling and preserving a community of teachers and scholars" necessarily demands that the university be arbitrarily free to decide whether to retain a nontenured professor, the court pointed out that > if the university is forbidden, constitutionally, to rest its decision [not to retain a professor] on . . . an arbitrary basis, the question arises: in practice will the university become so inhibited that the available spectrums of reasons for non-retention in the two situations will merge, the distinction between tenure and absence of tenure will shrink and disappear, and the university will be unable to rid itself of newcomers whose inadequacies are promptly sensed and grave but not easily defined?

Counterposed to this danger are the interests of the individual new professor. According to the court, "there can be no question that, in terms of money and standing and opportunity to contribute to the educational process, the consequences to [a professor exposed to nonretention because of a mistaken point of fact, or a decision which is wholly without reason] will be serious and prolonged and possibly will be severe and permanent." While the balancing test employed in Cafeteria Workers v. McElroy binds a court to "respect bases for non-retention enjoying minimal factual support and bases for non-retention supported by subtle reasons," the court explained that the case "compels the conclusion that under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment the decision not to retain a professor employed by a state university may not rest on a basis wholly unsupported in fact, or on a basis wholly without reason."

In concluding that procedural safeguards are necessary to ensure protection against nonretention in violation of First Amendment rights and arbitrary nonretention, the court held that minimal procedural due process > includes a statement of the reasons why the university intends not to retain the professor, notice of a hearing at which he may respond to the stated reasons, and a hearing if the professor appears at the appointed time and place. At such a hearing the professor must have a reasonable opportunity to submit evidence relevant to the stated reasons. The burden of going forward and the burden of proof rests with the professor. Only if he makes a reasonable showing that the stated reasons are wholly inappropriate as a basis for decision or that they are wholly without basis in fact would the university administration become obliged to show that the stated reasons are not inappropriate or that they have a basis in fact.

Since the university neither informed the professor of the reasons for his nonretention nor provided a hearing, the court dismissed the university's motion for summary judgment. The court also denied the professor's motion for complete summary judgment and an order compelling the university to offer him a contract for the following year due to the professor's contention that a nontenured employee "is constitutionally entitled to be told in advance that . . . if he does abide by . . . previously announced standards of conduct, he will be entitled to a contract for the following year." Emphasizing that a university "should enjoy the widest possible latitude consistent with protection against arbitrariness and . . . invasion of . . . First Amendment rights" in deciding whether to retain a nontenured teacher, the court held:

> To accept the plaintiff's contention would be to erect a constitutional requirement even more severe than the showing of "cause" now required by Wisconsin law in the case of tenured professors. So far as the federal constitution is concerned . . . I have held that due process affords professors (tenured or nontenured) protection only against nonretention based on arbitrariness. To provide this limited protection it is not necessary to require that the university enunciate in advance a code of conduct for professors, violation of which will result in nonretention and compliance with which will result in retention.

However, the court granted the professor's motion for partial summary judgment, and stayed the proceedings and a determination of whether the professor's nonretention was based upon his criticism of the administration or was arbitrary pending the university's response to the court order. Board Findings and Rulings

CONNECTICUT

SCHOOL BUS DRIVERS COMPRISE APPROPRIATE UNIT

In rendering a modified interpretation of the definition of "employee" as found in the Connecticut Municipal Employee Relations Act, the State Board of Labor Relations held that "all regular school bus drivers employed by the Thompson Board of Education . . . constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining in fact and within the meaning of . . . the Act." Although eight of the 11 bus drivers involved were not considered employees under the act, the state board decided that "no legitimate interest would be protected and no apparent purpose of the Act would be served by disfranchising the overwhelming majority of the school bus drivers."

When the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 1303, petitioned for an election in a unit of bus drivers employed under annual contract by the Thompson education board, the state board found that the drivers' tasks did not demand 20 hours per week, and that only three of the drivers worked an average of 20 or more hours per week.

State statute defines an "employee" as "any employee of a municipal employer . . . except . . . part-time employees who work less than twenty hours per week . . . ." This 20-hour rule originated entirely with the state labor board, and was created to protect (when necessary) the voting strength of a large group of full-time workers from dilution or distortion by the votes of part-time workers whose stake in the job was relatively slight compared with that of the full-time workers. Emphasizing the fact that the rule was not developed to disfranchise part-time workers, the state board added that exceptions to the rule have been adopted whereby it is not applied when all or a majority of the employees are part-time, or where employment practices dictate a different number of hours as the proper determining factor.

Local 1303 argued that the 20-hour rule does not apply to full-time employees who work less than 20 hours per week, and that the bus drivers are full-time employees because the task assigned to each is measured not in time, but in performance of the whole of the task. While finding this argument "ingenious," the state board felt that it did not reflect legislative intent:

> The question here is whether the language of the Municipal Employee Relations Act is to be interpreted rigidly and literally or . . . as embodying the exceptions and limitations which had been built into the rule by the very sort of common law process that gave it birth. Where a legislature intends to adopt or modify a rule which has evolved from custom or some other kind of common-law process, its reference to the rule in summary fashion (without specifically detailing all the exceptions and limitations) should be read in the light of the rule's history and not with literal rigidity . . . .
> We believe that in the language of . . . the Act, the legislature intended to incorporate the Board's administratively adopted 20-hour rule and thus to provide for uniform administration (in this respect) of the state's twin labor relations statutes. This intent can be fulfilled only if the same flexibility is given to the rule in the public sector as in the private sector.

Applying the rationale and spirit of the 20-hour rule to the instant case, the state board found that the bus drivers' situation fell within the "majority part-time" exception, rather than the 20-hour cut-off rule. The board accordingly directed an election within the unit of bus drivers "in order to insure to the employees concerned the full benefit of their right to self-organization, to collective bargaining, and otherwise to effectuate the policies of the Act." (Thompson Board of Education and AFSCME, Local 1303, Council 4, Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations, May 12, 1970.)

EXTENSION OF EXISTING CONTRACT INEFFECTUAL AS CONTRACT BAR

When the Billerica School Committee and the Billerica Federation of Teachers, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1677, agreed to extend their existing contract after a rival union filed a representation petition supported by a sufficient showing of interest, the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) ruled that the extended contract did not create a new contract barring the petition.

According to the MLRC, an existing contract with a fixed duration constitutes a bar to a representation petition for as much of its term as does not exceed three years. Contracts with a fixed term exceeding three years are regarded for purposes of contract bar as having a fixed term of three years. Timely representation petitions must be filed more than 60 days but less than 120 days before the terminal date of an existing contract.

In the present case, the MLRC found that the school committee and Local 1677 did not terminate their old contract, and that their attempt to create a new contract was ineffectual, because the rival representation petition was timely filed. (Matter of Town of Billerica School Committee and Billerica Federation of Teachers, Local 1677, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, et al., Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, April 13, 1970.)

OVER-ALL UNIT OF SUPERVISORY AND ADMINISTRATIVE PERSONNEL IN INSTRUCTIONAL SERVICES RULED APPROPRIATE

An over-all unit of instructional supervisory and administrative personnel employed by the Birmingham School District was ruled appropriate by the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC), despite the employer's contention that the supervisors did not share a community of interest because some unit members exercised supervisory control over others. Noting that the employer's contention might be arguable in a smaller district where greater authority would be concentrated in the highest levels of supervisors, the MERC found the community of interest among the supervisors sufficient to preclude invocation of the prohibition against including supervisors and nonsupervisors in a single unit.

According to the MERC, the chief administrative officer of the Birmingham district was the superintendent. Reporting to him were two deputy superintendents, and several assistant superintendents. The deputy superintendent for instructional services supervised four directors, one each for elementary education, secondary education, curriculum, and pupil services. Instructional supervisory personnel below the directors' level included individual school principals and department heads, and various administrative personnel responsible for particular subject-matter areas or activities in more than one school or throughout the district.

Both parties agreed that noninstructional supervisors under the direction of the deputy superintendent for administrative services did not share a community of interest with the supervisors in the unit sought.

Noting that supervisors on all but the highest level are accorded recognition rights under the Michigan Public Employment Relations Act and that previously-determined appropriate units have included all supervisory personnel within a single unit, the MERC held that in the instant case the differences between supervisors and nonsupervisors were greater than the differences between higher and lower levels of supervisors. Moreover, the MERC found a highly complex, structured administrative organization with numerous checks and balances in the Birmingham district. As such, an election was directed in the over-all instructional supervisory and administrative unit. (Matter of Birmingham School District and Association of Birmingham School Administrative and Supervisory Personnel, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, April 14, 1970.)

UNILATERAL CHANGE IN COUNSELORS' POSITION RULED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

The Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) ruled that the Gibraltar School District committed an unfair labor practice in violation of the state's Public Employment Relations Act by refusing to bargain a change in the terms and conditions of employment relative to school counselors. Pointing out that a change in title and job description do not change a nonsupervisory position into a supervisory one, the MERC held that the district had the duty to bargain the change, rather than take unilateral action.

A collective agreement negotiated by the district and the Gibraltar Federation of Teachers covered all nonsupervisory district personnel; as nonsupervisors, counselors were included in the bargaining unit prior to April 7, 1969. On that date, the district eliminated the position of counselor, and afterwards referred to the position as that of "counselor-supervisor." In addition, the job description was rewritten to include the added duty of attendance program administration.

The Federation consequently charged the district with unilaterally changing the counselors' conditions of employment. A MERC trial examiner determined that a representation question existed, concluded that the counselors were not supervisors, and ordered the district to negotiate the counselors' wages and conditions of employment.

While agreeing that counselor-supervisors are not supervisors, the MERC determined that the issue in question was whether the district had committed an unfair labor practice by its unilateral action. As counselor-supervisors performed the same duties as counselors, even though the work was now done by counselors acting as supervisors and outside the bargaining unit, the MERC held that the change in title and job description constituted a change in terms and conditions of employment which the district had a duty to bargain. OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

NLRB ASSERTS JURISDICTION OVER PRIVATE NONPROFIT UNIVERSITIES

In a unanimous decision rendered on June 12, 1970, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) asserted jurisdiction over private, nonprofit colleges and universities, and directed an election among a state-wide unit of nonsupervisory, nonprofessional employees of Cornell University. Documenting the highly commercial nature of higher education institutions, the NLRB determined that "assertion of jurisdiction is required over those private colleges and universities whose operations have a substantial effect on commerce to insure the orderly, effective and uniform application of the national labor policy." The board accordingly overruled its 1951 Columbia University decision, stating that "the underlying considerations [existing then] no longer obtain two decades later."

Cornell University and Syracuse University filed representation petitions before the NLRB seeking elections among certain of their nonacademic, library, and professional employees. Urging the NLRB to reconsider its Columbia University doctrine, they argued that > the operations and activities of educational institutions as a class, and of Cornell and Syracuse in particular, have an overwhelming impact and effect on interstate commerce, that the operations of universities and colleges have increasingly become matters of Federal interest, and that this interest coupled with the failure of the States adequately to recognize and legislate for labor relations affecting these institutions and their employees now justifies the Board in asserting jurisdiction.

Prior to the Columbia University decision, Section 2(2) of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) was amended by the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act specifically to exclude nonprofit hospitals from the NLRA's coverage. While private, nonprofit educational institutions were not excluded from NLRA coverage and Columbia University's activities satisfied the NLRB's requirements for "normal exercise of its jurisdiction, the NLRB declined asserting jurisdiction over the university "as a discretionary matter." The NLRB's resultant decision in Columbia University was that it would not "effectuate the policies of the [NLRA] for the Board to assert its jurisdiction over a nonprofit, educational institution where the activities involved are noncommercial in nature and intimately connected with the charitable purposes and educational activities of the institution."

In the instant case, however, the NLRB found that "to carry out its educative functions, the university has become involved in a host of activities which are commercial in character." In 1969, the operating budgets of the country's approximately 1,450 private institutions totaled an estimated $6 billion, with income derived not only from traditional sources, but from "the purely commercial avenues of securities investments and real estate holdings." During the 1966-67 fiscal year, revenues of private institutions amounted to over $6 billion ($1.5 billion of which came from government appropriations), and such institutions realized a commercial profit of nearly $71 billion from housing and food services, many of which were obtained through interstate commerce channels.

The NLRB pointed to the expanded role of federal aid to education as "another phenomenon clearly distinguishing the current situation from the one which existed in 1951." Federal outlays for private and public education in 1969 totaled $5 billion, and the NLRB noted that such federal financial involvement > is paralleled by an expanding congressional recognition that employees in the nonprofit sector are entitled to the same benefits which Federal statutes provide to employees in the profitmaking sphere. Of particular pertinence here is the amendment of the Fair Standards Act [FLSA] in 1966 extending coverage to nonprofit private universities and hospitals. In 1968, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the amendments, holding that such institutions are engaged in commerce . . . .

> Given the congressional amendments to the FLSA and the Supreme Court decision upholding them, it is no longer sufficient to say that merely because employees are in a nonprofit sector of the economy, the operations of their employers do not substantially affect interstate commerce.

Emphasizing the fact that "with or without Federal regulation, union organization is already a fait accompli at many universities," the NLRB additionally noted the inadequacy of state labor-management legislation. According to the board, 15 states have enacted such legislation to date, but "in only eight of these States has the legislation been written or interpreted so as to expressly cover employees of private educational institutions . . . . To put it another way, there are 35 states without labor codes under which matters such as union organization, collective bargaining, and labor disputes may be determined."

The NLRB also examined legislative history subsequent to the Taft-Hartley Act and found that while the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act is completely silent on the matter of nonprofit employers, we are not persuaded . . . that congressional silence may be construed as indicating continued congressional approval of either the 1947 legislative history or Board reliance on it. The fact remains that Section 2(2) [of the NLRA] contains no express exemption for nonprofit employers. More to the point is that in 1959 Congress enacted Section 14(c) which for the first time both authorized and set limits on the Board's discretionary refusal to exercise jurisdiction.

Two years before the enactment of Section 14(c), the Supreme Court ruled in Guss v. Utah Labor Relations Board that the States were powerless to entertain cases which fell within the NLRB's statutory jurisdiction, even though the Board had declined to assert such jurisdiction. Thus, a "no man's land" was created where employers and employees were denied a Federal forum for the resolution of labor disputes and yet were unable to turn to the States for alternative relief . . . . Ample evidence in the legislative history reveals that Section 14(c) was the congressional response designed to eliminate the "no-man's land." Toward this end, 14(c)(1) states that the Board in its discretion may "decline to assert jurisdiction over any labor dispute involving any class or category of employers, where, in the opinion of the Board, the effect of such labor dispute on commerce is not sufficiently substantial to warrant the exercise of its jurisdiction . . . ." Conversely, it impliedly confirms the Board's authority to expand its jurisdiction to any class of employers whose operations substantially affect commerce. Section 14(c)(2) further attempts to narrow the "no-man's land" gap by empowering the States to exercise jurisdiction when the Board declines to so assert.

Reiterating its belief that "the Board has statutory jurisdiction over nonprofit educational institutions whose operations affect commerce," the NLRB determined that it would "no longer decline to assert jurisdiction over such institutions as a class," and concluded:

Petitioners introduced extensive evidence at the hearing to document their claim that educational institutions as a class have not only a substantial, but massive impact on interstate commerce . . . . Consequently, we are convinced that assertion of jurisdiction is required over those private colleges and universities whose operations have a substantial effect on commerce to insure the orderly, effective and uniform application of the national labor policy.

In view of all the foregoing considerations, we can no longer adhere to the position set forth in the Columbia University decision. Accordingly, that case is overruled . . . . At this time, the Board is not prepared to establish jurisdictional standards for nonprofit colleges and universities as a class for the instant proceedings do not give us a sufficient basis for selecting an appropriate measure by which to determine whether the policies of the [NLRA] will be effectuated by the exercise of jurisdiction in a particular case. Therefore, we leave the development of an appropriate jurisdictional standard for subsequent adjudication.

Finally, the NLRB dismissed the representation petition filed by Syracuse University for lack of a representation question. Since the Service Employees International Union, AFL-CIO, Local 200, already had been certified by the New York State Labor Relations Board as representative of an appropriate unit of full-time and regular part-time service and maintenance employees of the university, the NLRB (according to its established policy) ruled that it would "accord the same effect to the results of the State election as we would attach to a determination of representatives based upon an election conducted by the Board."

The Cornell University petition, however, raised a question affecting commerce under the NLRA. While the university sought an election in a statewide unit of all nonacademic, nonsupervisory employees and the Civil Service Employees Association agreed that this unit was appropriate, two other unions requested separate units comprised of nonprofessional, nonsupervisory employees of the university libraries on the Ithaca campus, and professional and nonprofessional employees of the university's School of Industrial Relations located in New York City.

But the NLRB found "considerable evidence that the operations of Cornell's facilities scattered throughout the State are integrated and centralized . . . that a community of interests is shared by all of its nonprofessional employees . . . and that Cornell has developed uniform guidelines covering such matters as attendance, leaves of absence, vacations, holidays, tardiness, discipline, overtime, and seniority applicable to all its employees." The state-wide unit accordingly was ruled appropriate, and an election was directed among "all nonsupervisory, nonprofessional employees of Cornell University within the State of New York, excluding employees of the medical college and nursing school in New York City, skilled trades employees on the Ithaca campus who are currently represented, guards, confidential employees, professional employees and supervisors as defined in the Act." (Cornell University, et al., and Civil Service Employees Association, Inc., and Service Employees International Union, Local 200, National Labor Relations Board, June 12, 1970.)

FLORIDA

GOVERNOR ISSUES ORDER ON PUBLIC EMPLOYEE BARGAINING

An executive order issued by the Florida governor on May 13, 1970, held that "no agency of state government or any officer or employee of the state shall have the authority to negotiate or bargain with any labor organization . . . however organized or constituted, which represents or seeks to represent any public employee or group of public employees for the purpose of negotiating or bargaining."

As chief budget officer of the state, the governor declared that "union bosses cannot put themselves between the people and their employees nor usurp the power entrusted by the people in their duly elected officials, who are responsible to the people." And he served notice that any bargaining measure passed by the legislature "would be vetoed by the Governor in order to preserve the orderly processes of government." In addition, he required each state agency to cooperate fully with the secretary of administration and "to report to the Governor, through the Secretary of Administration, any efforts whatsoever to organize employees under its jurisdiction."

HAWAII

MANDATORY PUBLIC EMPLOYEE BARGAINING LAW ENACTED

A mandatory bargaining statute permitting public employee strikes under carefully defined conditions was signed into law by the Hawaii governor on June 30, 1970. Effective July 1, the new statute recognizes "the right of public employees to organize for the purposes of collective bargaining," mandates public employers "to negotiate with and enter into written agreements with exclusive representatives on matters of wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment," and creates a Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) to administer the law.

"Strike," as defined by the statute, is a public employee's "refusal, in concerted action with others, to report for duty, or his wilful absence from his position, or his stoppage of work, or his abstinence in whole or in part from the full, faithful, and proper performance of the duties of employment, for the purpose of inducing, influencing, or coercing a change in the conditions, compensation, rights, privileges, or obligations of public employment." While participation in a strike is unlawful for employees who are not members of a certified appropriate bargaining unit, or who are included in a unit for which the process of dispute resolution ends with final and binding arbitration, the law holds that > it shall be lawful for an employee, who is not prohibited from striking . . . and who is in the appropriate bargaining unit involved in an impasse, to participate in a strike after (1) the requirements of section -12 relating to the resolution of disputes have been complied with in good faith, (2) the proceedings for the prevention of any prohibited practices have been exhausted, (3) sixty days have elapsed since the fact-finding board has made public its findings and any recommendation, [and] (4) the exclusive representative has given a ten-day notice of intent to strike to the board and to the employer.

Employees covered by the statute include all persons employed by a public employer except > elected or appointed [officials, members] of any board or commission, [representatives] of a public employer; including the administrative officer, director, or chief of a state or county department or agency, or any major division thereof as well as his deputy, first assistant, and any other top-level managerial and administrative personnel, [individuals] concerned with confidential matters affecting employee-employer relations, part time [employees] working less than twenty hours per week, temporary [employees] of three months duration or less, or any commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Hawaii national guard.

Section 3 of the statute grants public employees > the right of self-organization and the right to form, join, or assist any employee organization for the purpose of bargaining collectively through representatives of their own choosing on questions of wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and to engage in lawful, concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, free from interference, restraint, or coercion. An employee shall have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities, except to the extent of making such payment of service fees to an exclusive representative as provided in section -4.

For purposes of unit determination, all employees throughout the state falling within a specific category are considered an appropriate bargaining unit.

Compensation plans, salary schedules, and appointment and classification procedures outlined in other sections of state law provide the bases for "differentiating blue collar from white collar employees, professional from nonprofessional employees, supervisory from nonsupervisory employees, teachers from educational officers, and faculty from nonfaculty." Teachers and other education department personnel under the same salary schedule comprise an appropriate bargaining unit, as do educational officers and other department personnel under the same salary schedule.

When an election petition is filed (after January 1, 1971) by an organization seeking certification by the PERB as exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit, the organization must show written proof that it represents at least 30 percent of the employees in the desired unit. The PERB shall direct that a secret ballot election be held among employees of the appropriate unit, and the ballot also shall contain the names of any organizations showing written proof of at least 10 percent representation of the employees within the desired unit, and a provision for "no representation." If no organization receives a majority of the votes cast, the PERB shall direct a run-off election, and shall certify as exclusive representative the organization receiving a majority of the votes in that election.

According to the statute, election bars will be effective in "any appropriate bargaining unit within which (1) a valid election has been held in the preceding twelve months; or (2) a valid collective bargaining agreement is in force and effect, except upon a petition as provided herein not more than ninety days, but not less than sixty days, prior to the expiration of the agreement." The PERB will develop rules and regulations defining contract bars.

Once an organization is certified as exclusive bargaining representative, "it shall have the right to act for and negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit and shall be responsible for representing the interests of all such employees without discrimination and without regard to employee organization membership." The employer and the exclusive representative are mandated to "meet at reasonable times, including meetings in advance of the employer's budget-making process," negotiate in good faith, and render a written agreement (subject to ratification by the employees concerned), provided that "such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal to make a concession."

Excluded from negotiation are "matters of classification and reclassification, retirement benefits and the salary ranges and the number of incremental and longevity steps now provided by law, provided that the amount of wages to be paid in each range and step and the length of service necessary for the incremental and longevity steps shall be negotiable." In addition, the parties > shall not agree to any proposal which would be inconsistent with merit principles or the principle of equal pay for equal work . . . or which would interfere with the rights of a public employer to (1) direct employees; (2) determine qualification, standards for work, the nature and contents of examinations, hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions and suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against employees for proper cause; (3) relieve an employee from duties because of lack of work or other legitimate reason; (4) maintain efficiency of government operations; (5) determine methods, means, and personnel by which the employer's operations are to be conducted; and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the missions of the employer in cases of emergencies.

The statute stipulates that a negotiated agreement may contain both "a grievance procedure and an impasse procedure culminating in final and binding arbitration," and that all cost items contained therein "shall be subject to appropriations by the appropriate legislative bodies." If a legislative body rejects any of the cost items submitted to it, those items are to be renegotiated by the parties to the agreement. The statute further declares it to be in the public interest for the parties to "make every reasonable effort to conclude negotiations, and include provisions for an effective date, a reopening date, and an expiration date, at a time to coincide, as nearly as possible, with the period during which the appropriate legislative bodies may act on the operating budget of the employers."

Dispute resolution machinery provided by the statute in the event of impasse and administered by the PERB includes mediation, fact-finding (followed by publication of any findings and recommendations if the dispute remains unresolved after a given period of time and is not referred to final and binding arbitration), and submission of any unresolved differences to final and binding arbitration by mutual consent of the parties involved. The PERB will bear the costs of mediation and fact-finding, while the parties to the dispute must share the costs of arbitration. If the parties do not agree to binding arbitration, "either party shall be free to take whatever lawful action it deems necessary to end the dispute; provided that no action shall involve the disruption or interruption of public services within sixty days after the fact-finding board has made public its findings of fact and any recommendations for the resolution of the dispute."

Other provisions of the statute define prohibited practices, authorize payroll deductions (including "reasonable service fees" requested by the exclusive representative as "necessary to defray the costs for its services rendered in negotiating and administering an agreement and computed on a pro rata basis among all [unit] employees"), and outline the nature, composition, powers, and functions of the newly-created PERB. The full text of the Hawaii statute is reprinted in the "Texts" section of this DIGEST.

IOWA

DUES DEDUCTIONS PROHIBITED

An opinion issued by the Iowa attorney general on April 13, 1970, held that in the absence of statutory authorization, school boards could not contract with their employees to withhold or deduct designated sums from teachers' pay checks for the purpose of returning such amounts to payees such as teachers' organizations and credit unions. The opinion was rendered in reference to Section 79.15 of the Iowa Code.

PROCEDURES FOR HEARINGS ON NO-STRIKE VIOLATIONS OUTLINED

In reference to Sections 179.51 to 179.58 of the Minnesota State Labor Relations Act which deal with public employee grievances, the Minnesota attorney general issued an April 29, 1970, opinion clarifying procedures to be used in hearings on absences which allegedly do not violate the state's anti-strike laws, but involve essentially that situation.

Specifically, a school board may hold joint hearings on such absences provided each individual teacher involved waives his right to an individual hearing. In determining whether the teachers involved have a common reason, the board may receive evidence in affidavit form, and then proceed with cases which can be considered jointly. The attorney general emphasized, however, that this initial hearing procedure is only a recommendation, and is not intended to be exclusive.

Holding that hearings need not be conducted before an entire school board, the attorney general explained that a committee consisting of only one board member may conduct a hearing. In addition, various committees may hold different hearings, and outsiders may be engaged as hearing examiners for the purpose of making findings of fact and recommendations to the board. The Board, however, independently must review evidence presented at a hearing, and has both the power and obligation to decide the case.

While the attorney general could find no statutory procedures for notifying the parties involved of the commencement of proceedings, he suggested that a satisfactory procedure meeting the requirement of fair play would consist of mailing a notice to each claimant informing him that his claim had been received, that arrangements were being made for an early hearing, and that he would be informed of the time and place of the proceedings in the near future. He additionally noted that time factors governing such procedures are contained in Section 179.56 of the Minnesota Statutes.

Both the school board and the claimants may be represented by counsel at the hearing. Counsel may present the school board's evidence, and cross-examine teachers and witnesses provided by the teachers. Explaining that the burden of proof that a teacher did not strike lies with the teacher, the attorney general held that the teacher's burden need only be established by a preponderance of the evidence, need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, and is met by a prima facie showing if no rebuttal evidence is offered. If there are doubts against a teacher, these must be resolved against him, and the school board may not waive, alter, or amend the statutory conditions of re-employment. Moreover, in the event of a doubtful case, the school board may not reach a compromise decision.

NEW JERSEY

PERC CHAIRMAN RESIGNS

Walter F. Pease, chairman of the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission since its 1968 inception, resigned his position effective July 1, 1970. Pease announced his resignation during testimony before a joint legislative committee considering changes in the statute establishing the commission, and examining budgetary matters affecting the commission's operation.

PENNSYLVANIA

TEACHERS TRADE PAY RAISE FOR KINDERGARTEN PROGRAM

Pennsylvania teachers belonging to the Apollo-Ridge Education Association swapped a pay raise for a local kindergarten program. In rejecting the Apollo school board's final offer of a $200 increase in pay per year, the 165-member Association approved a counter-proposal asking the board to utilize the estimated $45,000 in establishing a kindergarten program and facilities sought by a local citizens' group.

EDUCATION BOARD MAY NOT REQUIRE SECRET NEGOTIATING SESSIONS

An opinion issued by the South Dakota attorney general on April 15, 1970, held that while an education board may hold secret meetings during the consideration of employee and personnel matters, it has no right to require secrecy on the part of union representatives, and may not hold secret meetings with the joint negotiating committee. The opinion interpreted the recently amended Section 3-18-3 of the South Dakota Compiled Laws (NRD, 6-70, 37).

UTAH

COURT HOLDS SCHOOL EMPLOYEES MAY SUE STATE

Determining that the state of Utah waived its constitutional immunity to suit by private parties in its continued operation of a state-owned school for the mentally deficient after the effective date of amendments to the commerce clause of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that employees of the school may sue the state to recover overtime pay and liquidated damages.

As amended effective February 1, 1967, the FLSA partially defines an enterprise engaged in commerce as one "engaged in the operation of . . . a school for mentally or physically handicapped or gifted children, an elementary or secondary school, or an institution of higher education (regardless of whether or not such . . . institution, or school is public or private or operated for profit or not for profit)." Then in the 1968 case of Maryland v. Wirtz (NRD, 11-68, A-7), the Supreme Court of the United States upheld amendments to the FLSA which extended the act's coverage to certain state school employees.

In the instant case, four employees of the American Fork Training School brought suit against the state of Utah (which had operated the school since 1961) for themselves and others similarly situated. The U.S. District Court for the District of Utah dismissed the case on grounds that the state had not waived its immunity to suit in a federal court by its own citizens, and that the court, therefore, lacked jurisdiction under the Eleventh Amendment.

The appeals court, however, cited a 1964 Supreme Court decision in Parden v. Terminal Railway of the Alabama State Docks Department as controlling of the instant case. There the high court held that under the Federal Employers Liability Act, Congress intended "to condition the states' right to operate railroads in interstate commerce upon a waiver of the states' soverign immunity to private suits in a federal forum." The minority in Parden interpreted the majority to hold that "with regard to sovereign immunity, waiver of a constitutional privilege need be neither knowing nor intelligent."

In argument before the appeals court, the state of Utah contended that because "it was not originally put to the choice of entering the [interstate commerce] field and thereby waiving its immunity, or staying out of the endeavor, subsequent amendments to the FLSA should not impose an immediate waiver on the basis of continued activity." But the appeals court rejected the argument and remanded the case for further proceedings, explaining:

> When Congress constitutionally hinges the right of a state to engage in interstate commerce upon its amenability to a federal court suit by private parties, the states must decide eo instante whether to continue or withdraw. If, because of an immediate effective date on an enactment, a state is unable to make a timely withdrawal, and is caught in a bona fide attempt to withdraw, a situation might be presented so as to call for different results. But here it was never made manifest by Utah's actions that it had not decided to continue and thus render itself suable. In fact, the contrary appears quite clearly from its subsequent adherence to the substantive portions of the FLSA.
> Utah, by having continuously operated the American Fork Training School after the February 1, 1967, effective date of the FLSA amendments, has indulged in an endeavor subject to federal regulation and having done so, has waived its immunity and consented to suits permitted by the FLSA.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, JUNE AND MAY 1970

Figures released by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) indicated that the June 1970 Consumer Price Index (CPI), all-items figure, rose 0.4 percent above the previous month to 135.2 (1957-59=100). The June figure put the all-items index 6.0 percent above a year ago. A substantial increase in consumer services contributed heavily to the June advance, as did continued increases in the prices of used cars and houses.

In May, the CPI all-items index also registered an 0.4 percent rise above the previous month, and stood at 134.6 according to the 1957-59 base. That figure put the index 6.2 percent above a year ago. While charges for services and commodities other than food were smaller in May than in April, BLS noted that used car prices rose sharply in May, and house prices indicated a more rapid rise than in previous months. In addition, food prices rose an unseasonal 0.3 percent. BLS also reported that the purchasing power of the dollar stood at $0.743 in May, based upon its average buying power in 1957-59.

KEY POSITIONS ON FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS COUNCIL FILLED

Appointments to five top positions on the Federal Labor Relations Council (FLRC) created by Executive Order 11491 have been announced by W. Vernon Gill, executive director of the council. Andrew G. Wolf, former vice-president for personnel and industrial relations at Oscar Meyer and Company, was named deputy executive director of the FLRC, and will be empowered to act in the executive director's stead.

As FLRC general counsel, John R. Hill will interpret laws, regulations, and executive orders for the council, and issue advisory opinions on issues before the council. Hill formerly served as director of personnel legal affairs for United Air Lines, and also has acted as an attorney with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB).

Henry B. Frazier was named chief of the council's Program Division, which is responsible for developing policies to implement E.O. 11491, providing guidance to agencies and unions, and producing status reports for the President. Frazier moved to the FLRC from the Department of the Army where he served as chief of civilian personnel policy and pay review in the office of the Assistant Secretary for Manpower and Reserve Affairs.

Robert J. Freehling, onetime general counsel for the Federal Coal Mine Safety Board of Review, was named chief of the FLRC's Appeals Division, which will review exceptions to arbitrators' awards, appeals of agency heads' negotiability determinations, and appeals of decisions made by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations. Freehling also has served as an attorney with the U.S. Tax Court, and a supervisory attorney with the NLRB.

David T. Roadley was appointed executive secretary of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, a separate body within the FLRC structure authorized to consider negotiation impasses and settle them itself if necessary. Roadley has served as a national representative for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, worked with the Missile Sites Labor Relations Commission, and was site mediator and chairman of the Cape Kennedy Labor Relations Committee.

AN ANALYSIS OF NEGOTIATED TUITION REIMBURSEMENT PROVISIONS, 1968-69

Negotiated provisions relative to per-unit allowances for professional study tend to be somewhat confusing. An investigation of provisions relating to allowances for credits, hours, or courses of professional study generally indicates that there are two ways of providing allowances to teachers for such study: per-unit allowances credited toward higher salary (salary credit) and reimbursement of part or all of the money expended (tuition reimbursement). In many negotiated provisions both types of allowance provisions are included in the same major articles covering either salary and related benefits or professional development and growth (Table 1). In addition, since both types of allowances are computed on a per-unit basis such as credit, semester hour, or course, it is often difficult to determine whether the payment for professional study is made once, as in tuition reimbursement, or is cumulative as in salary credit.

Per-unit allowances for professional study were provided in 233 (24 percent) of the 978 comprehensive teacher-school board agreements negotiated for the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more. Salary credit allowances were provided in 88 agreements. Tuition reimbursement allowances were identified in 145 agreements (Table 1).

TABLE 1.—TYPES OF NEGOTIATED ARTICLES CONTAINING PER-UNIT ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS, 1968-69

Type of article	Salary credit allowance		Tuition reimbursement allowance
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
1	2	3	4	5
Salary, compensation, and/or related benefits	56	63.6%	51	35.2%
Professional development and growth	8	9.1	52	35.9
Tuition reimbursement or graduate credit	8	9.1	21	14.5
Miscellaneous (mainly untitled articles)	16	18.2	21	14.5
Total	88	100.0%	145	100.1%

While both salary credit and tuition reimbursement provisions contain similar allowances and procedural policies, the reason for separating the two forms is that the former is cumulative and relates more to the administration of the salary schedule. An analysis of salary credit allowances consequently would entail an analysis of an entire salary structure. For the purposes of this analysis, only tuition reimbursement provisions which reimburse the teacher for part or all of the money expended for professional study are included.

Of the 145 tuition reimbursement provisions, four established joint teacher-administrator study committees to investigate and recommend programs and procedures for reimbursement of tuition costs. The remaining 141 provisions contained specific coverage relative to allowances, participants and programs, and procedures.

Amount of Allowances

Allowance items found in tuition reimbursement provisions can be separated into three different sections: per-unit allowances, types of expenses covered, and maximum allowable. Per-unit allowances related to full cost, percent of cost, or fee per credit, hour, course, or other time period. All 141 provisions contained some item relative to the amount of allowance. Types of expenses covered by reimbursement were identified in 86 provisions, and a maximum allowable was specified in 57 of the provisions (Table 2).

TABLE 2.–ANALYSIS OF ALLOWANCES CONTAINED IN 141 NEGOTIATED TUITION REIMBURSEMENT PROVISIONS, 1968-69

Nature of allowance items	Comprehensive agreements
	Number	Percent
1	2	3
Amount of allowance	141	100.0%
Full cost	52	36.9
Fee or flat amount	54	38.3
Percent of cost	33	23.4
Combination of percent and fee	2	1.4
Types of expenses covered	86	61.0%
Tuition only	61	43.3
Tuition and other expenses	25	17.7
Maximum allowable	57	40.4%
Total number of credits	20	14.2
Total amount	18	12.8
Budget allocation	4	2.8
Combination of above items	15	10.6

Full cost of tuition was defined in 52 (36.9 percent) of the 141 reimbursement provisions. While such statements varied, they were similar to the following example:

The committee will pay the full cost of tuition for in-service courses or courses at accredited colleges, universities or professional training schools which are taken with advance approval or request of the Superintendent of Schools. Such approval will not be unreasonably withheld. (Greenfield, Massachusetts)

The fee or flat amount of allowance provided in 54 (38.3 percent) of the provisions varied according to credit, hour, course, semester, or year. In several instances, higher rates were paid for degree or graduate courses and lesser rates for nondegree or undergraduate courses. Of the 54 provisions, 42 provisions specified a fee per hour of study, or could be computed on this basis. While the amounts ranged from $8 to $38.50 per hour, the most common amounts were $10, $15, $20, and $25 per hour (Table 3).

TABLE 3.–ARRAY OF AMOUNTS PER HOUR PAID FOR TUITION REIMBURSEMENT IN 42 NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS, 1968-69

Amount per hour	Number of tuition reimbursement provisions
$9 or less	2
$10 - $14	10
$15 - $19	11
$20 - $24	10
$25 - $30	7
Over $30	3

An example of a provision specifying payment of a fee per hour is:

Certified teachers shall be entitled to receive a single payment of Fifteen ($15.00) dollars per semester hour for graduate credit, provided, that the instruction is designed to promote the professional status of the teacher, the best interests of the School District and if furnished by an institution approved by the Board. (Gull Lake, Kalamazoo, Michigan)

In the remaining 35 provisions, 33 paid a percentage of the cost, and the other two combined a percentage of the cost with an amount contingent upon the grade level or number of classes applied for during the school year. In the 33 provisions providing a percentage of the cost, the percentage ranged from 33-1/3 to 75 percent; the majority (26 provisions) provided 50 percent of the cost, as in the following example:

The Board shall pay one-half (1/2) of the cost of tuition for inservice courses at accredited colleges, universities or professional training schools providing, they have the approval of the Superintendent of Schools. (Old Lyme, Connecticut)

Types of expenses covered usually were identified in provisions which paid the full cost or a percent of the cost of professional study. In the fee or flat amount provisions, the dollar amount allotted controlled the reimbursement. Tuition alone was paid most often, and the following provision indicates a precise definition of tuition costs:

Tuition costs only are eligible for reimbursement. Registration fees, parking fees, travel expenses, textbooks, supplies and all other incidental costs are not eligible. (Catskill, New York)

The maximum allowable usually was established on a yearly basis, although some agreements established different maximums for courses taken during the school year and summer courses. The yearly maximum allowable was specified according to number of credits, amount per teacher, school budget allocation, or a combination of these factors. Examples of each of the several factors used to establish over-all reimbursement maximums are:

A maximum of three credit hours will be eligible for reimbursement each academic semester. During summer sessions a teacher may take up to six approved college credits for reimbursement. (Catskill, New York)

No teacher shall receive more than $350.00 per fiscal year under this provision. (Nankin Mills, Westland, Michigan)

It is agreed then, for the duration of this contract, the Committee's obligation will be limited to $10,000 per year (September 1 to August 31). (Chelmsford, Massachusetts)

Participants and Programs

While the majority of the provisions analyzed indicated that any teacher or professional program would be reimbursed within the allowances specified (with the approval or upon request of the school administration), guidelines for approval were included in the provisions. These guidelines can be grouped into three categories: requirements for participation by teachers, general specifications of sponsoring institutions, and specific factors relative to the content of the program (Table 4).

TABLE 4.—NEGOTIATED CONTENT RELATIVE TO PARTICIPANTS AND PROGRAMS CONTAINED IN 141 TUITION REIMBURSEMENT PROVISIONS, 1968-69

Procedures

The two procedural issues which received the most attention in tuition reimbursement provisions were application and payment for professional study. While formal application was required in only 21 (14.9 percent) of the 141 provisions, some form of application was implied, since the majority of the programs had to be approved by the school administration. The following provision is an example of a more formal application:

Application for such reimbursement must be submitted in writing to the Office of the Superintendent of Schools at least sixty days prior to the start of the session. The application shall include a statement of purpose, description of content, and endorsement of the supervisor to which the applicant is assigned. (Glastonbury, Connecticut)

Eight provisions established a specific time period in which application for reimbursement or notification of a request for reimbursement had to be filed. The time period was designated variously as a particular date, a specific number of days prior to the start of the course, or a specific number of days after completion of the course. The following example demonstrates two procedures depending upon the formality of the course work:

Administrative approval must be obtained prior to enrollment in a course for which compensation is desired unless the course is being taken to satisfy the requirements for a graduate degree. Upon enrollment in a course taken to meet the requirements of a graduate degree, notification of such enrollment shall be given the administration within one week of the date of enrollment. (Granite City, Illinois)

The school administration approved, directed, or required the course of study in 128 of the 141 tuition reimbursement provisions. Of the 104 provisions which required administrative approval, 45 provisions required approval prior to undertaking professional study. In 24 provisions, professional study had to be directed or required by the school administration; the full cost of the study usually was paid by the school board in such instances. In the following provision, a selection committee screens the applicants before final approval is granted by the school administration:

An impartial committee will be established to review the applications and to select the recipients. The committee shall be composed of two administrators (one of whom is to be the District Principal), the Marcellus Faculty Association president or delegate, and one faculty member designated by the Marcellus Faculty Association. (Marcellus, New York)

Statements about payments which were found in reimbursement provisions specified types of evidence required before payment, time of payment, reasons for no payment, and circumstances which require refund of payment. A variety of types of evidence upon completion of professional study was required in 57 (40.4 percent) of the tuition reimbursement provisions and included satisfactory completion (28 provisions), receipt (10 provisions), transcript (10 provisions), and combinations of these items (9 provisions). The following provision requires evidence other than "satisfactory" or "acceptable" completion:

Forms requesting reimbursement for such courses, transcript of credits or original grade report, for the courses and evidence of payment for them must be submitted to the Assistant Superintendent for Instruction after taking the courses. (Niles, Michigan)

Only 24 reimbursement provisions indicated when payment was to be made. Generally, payment was made once a year, after completion, and upon approval. Six provisions specifically provided for more frequent payments: two times a year in four provisions, and three times a year in two provisions. The following example provides exact dates when teachers may expect payment:

Reimbursement of tuition will be made twice each year–at the first payday in March for courses taken during the first semester, and at the first payday in October for courses taken during the second semester or in summer session. (Escanaba, Michigan)

In addition to the previously discussed factors to which a program must or must not be relative before being acceptable, some reimbursement provisions established other conditions which had to be met before payment. Major conditions under which no payment was made included failure to complete course work at a specified achievement grade, failure to return to or be employed by the school district for a specified period of time, and acceptance of other financial assistance.

A minimum achievement grade level for completed professional study was reported in 20 provisions. Grade standards established by the college involved generally were considered acceptable in 10 provisions. In the remaining 10 provisions, the minimum acceptable grade was distributed about equally between the "B" or "C" grade level. An example of payment contingent upon a specified grade is:

Payment will be made upon successful completion of any such course with a grade of B or better. (Middleboro, Massachusetts)

Before a teacher can receive payment, certain employment conditions were mandated in 12 provisions. While some provisions delayed payment for a year, most required a commitment by the teacher to be employed by or to return to the school district for a period of time varying from one semester to three years. The following provision is an example:

No payment will be made for second semester courses to teachers who do not return the following year. (Center Line, Michigan)

If other financial assistance was received as payment for courses requested for reimbursement, 14 provisions specified no payment would be made by the school board. A more liberal statement was comained in four provisions. If the financial assistance was less than that provided in the reimbursement provision, two provisions specified that the difference would be paid. In the other two provisions, one specified that payment would be made in addition to assistance received through the G. I. bill only, and the other said the teacher would be reimbursed in addition to any other financial assistance. The following provision is an example of a no-payment clause:

No payment shall be in addition to tuition paid under fellowship, institute, or scholarship grant. (Grandville, Michigan)

In four provisions, the teacher had to refund part or all of the payment under conditions usually predicated upon continued employment for a specified period of time. One provision made payment prior to the completion of professional study, but required the teacher to refund the money within 10 days of completion if the work was not satisfactorily performed. The example below indicates a specific repayment requirement:

In the event that the teacher does not return for the second year following the courses, the teacher agrees to repay fifty percent (50%) of the tuition reimbursement. (Stoneham, Massachusetts)

SELECTED MATERNITY LEAVE PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS

Of the 978 comprehensive agreements analyzed in the 1968-69 Negotiation Agreement Provisions, 660 school systems reported a negotiated maternity leave provision. While the language of such provisions varies, maternity leave basically is defined as an extended unpaid leave of absence with guaranteed return to a similar position and no loss of accrued benefits, such as accumulated sick leave, or retirement and service credit. Some school boards include maternity leave items in their board policies or guidelines, but only negotiated maternity leave provisions contained in comprehensive agreements and guaranteeing the teacher's right to return from such leave to her former job or a comparable one are referred to here.

In 1968, six states had statutory provisions regarding maternity leaves of absence: California, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Kentucky, Louisiana, and Tennessee. The Delaware, Kentucky, and Louisiana statutes were mandatory.

Specific items contained in maternity leave provisions include:

- Maternity leave or adoptive leave generally is available only to tenure teachers, although some provision may be made for probationary teachers as well.
- Early notification of pregnancy (generally meaning close to the time of conception) accompanied by a physician's statement indicating the expected date of delivery is required of teachers requesting maternity leave. Failure to notify may cause a teacher to lose her leave or her right to return to her former position or a comparable one.
- Pre-natal time limits vary, but a teacher generally is required to leave her position about five or six months prior to delivery.
- Post-natal time limits vary from three months to one year after delivery (depending upon extenuating circumstances), with usual return at the beginning of a semester or similar academic period.
- Upon return from maternity leave, a teacher is either placed on her former salary step or advanced to the next step in an identical or similar position.
- Maternity leave provisions indicate that teachers receive benefits such as medical insurance while on leave.

Six examples of maternity leave provisions taken from comprehensive agreements are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Bridgeport School District, Bridgeport, Connecticut Article V, Section E(9)—"Maternity Leave Policy"

a. A teacher must accept maternity leave by the time she has reached the fifth month of her pregnancy.
b. Once accepting maternity leave, the teacher must be maintained on this status for a minimum of two years.
   (1.) In case of miscarriage or death of infant during leave, the teacher may be eligible for reinstatement when an opening exists.
   (2.) The Superintendent may, in case of need, request that a teacher return to active status before the two-year mandatory period expires. The teacher so requested may decline without prejudice to her position.
c. Three one-year extensions of this leave may be granted at the request of the teacher.
   (1.) Any teacher requesting reinstatement under the terms of this policy must have maintained her state certification.
   (2.) The responsibility for maintenance of certification rests solely with the teacher.
d. Teachers on probationary status must complete their probation under the following conditions:
   (1.) If less than one year of active service has been completed, an entire three-year probationary period must be fulfilled upon return.
   (2.) If more than one full school year has been completed, the returning teacher must complete two full years on probationary appointment.
      (a.) In no case will service of a fraction of a year be taken into consideration. Only full school years completed will be considered.
e. Salaries of returning teachers will be based on the following consideration:
   (1.) Teachers starting their leave prior to February 1, will retain their previous step-status on their return.
   (2.) Teachers starting their leave on or after February 1, will be placed on the next step on their return to active status.
f. All teachers returning from leave return as regular staff members.

Somerville Public Schools, Somerville, Massachusetts
Article XXI, Section 3—"Extended Leaves of Absence"

As a condition of employment and retention of position, a married woman employee on tenure, who becomes pregnant, shall request a leave of absence without pay, which shall become effective not later than six (6) months before the date of the expected birth, provided that up to that time she can perform her duties satisfactorily, the leave to terminate one year from the first of September following the birth of the child. The Application must be accompanied by a physician's certificate stating the expected date of delivery.

Teachers not on tenure will not be granted leaves of absence for pregnancy.

Any teacher who is pregnant and does not wish to request a maternity leave of absence shall submit her resignation not less than six months before the date of the expected birth of the child.

The teacher must notify the Superintendent of Schools by the first of April of the year in which her maternity leave expires of her intention either to return in September or her intention to retire from the school system. Failure to comply with this requirement will be considered as her resignation from the school system.

In the event that the child does not live, the teacher may make written application for reinstatement, accompanied by a physician's statement of good health. Such reinstatement may be granted by the Committee, in case an acceptable vacancy occurs, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools and the approval of the Committee.

A teacher returning from maternity leave, whether regular or abbreviated, will be given a salary at the same level for the remaining months of a year as she was receiving prior to withdrawal.

Norway-Vulcan Area Schools, Norway, Michigan Article VII, Section A—"Leave Policy—Maternity Leave"

a. A maternity leave without pay or fringe benefits may be granted for a period of one (1) year. The employee requesting such leave should file her request in writing six (6) months before the expected birth of the child. When the employee can furnish a physician's statement certifying her fitness to perform her tasks, she shall be allowed to continue her position until the beginning of the twenty-second (22nd) week prior to the expected birth of the child.
b. Eligibility for a maternity leave of absence requires a minimum of two (2) years continuous employment by the school district immediately prior to such leave of absence.
c. A further extension of a leave of absence or a second leave of absence may be granted at the will of the Board of Education upon the recommendation of the superintendent of schools.
d. While an employee is granted a leave of absence, she shall retain the following employment rights held by her before such leave was granted:
   (1.) The same position on the salary schedule as held when the leave was granted.
   (2.) Unused sick leave as held at the start of the leave of absence.
e. An employee on a leave of absence must give written notice to the superintendent of school by April 1st of the year the leave expires of her intention to return or resign unless an extension of leave or a new leave has been granted. Failure to furnish such written notice shall constitute a notice of resignation.
f. Reemployment during the school year shall be at the discretion of the Board, and reemployment for the beginning of a new school year shall be dependent upon an opening on the staff for which the employee is qualified. In the event there is no opening, the teacher shall be given priority for substitute work if she so desires.

Monroe Township Public Schools, Williamstown, New Jersey
"Extended Leaves of Absence—Maternity Leave of Absence"

a. Eligibility. All tenure personnel.
b. Notification. The Superintendent shall be informed in writing of the employee's condition no later than the third month of pregnancy.
c. Beginning of Leave. Leave shall begin any time during the term of pregnancy upon the written request of the employee at least 30 days before the leave is to become effective, or at any time during the term of pregnancy upon 30 days written notice to the employee by the Superintendent. A written statement from a physician shall be required stating that the employee is able to perform all duties required by her position up to the time leave is to begin.
d. Extent of Leave. Initial leave shall be granted until June 30 of the school year leave began. Additional school years of leave may be granted upon the written request of the employee received no later than July 1 for the succeeding year.
e. Reinstatement. Employees shall return to active duty in September upon written request received no later than the previous July 1. Reinstatement may take place during the school year only at the convenience of the school system.
f. Benefits.
   (1.) Tenure employees shall retain tenure during the period of leave.

(2.) Blue Cross/Shield benefits for tenure employees shall be continued for a period of 12 months, beginning with the effective date of leave.

(3.) Employee shall not advance on the salary guide while on leave. However, if leave begins during a school year, credit shall be granted as follows: leave beginning Dec. 1 - March 31, ½ year; leave beginning April 1 or later. 1 full year.

g. Accumulated Sick Leave. At the option of the employee, such leaves may be used, the leave of absence becoming effective when all sick leave is exhausted.

h. Non-tenure Personnel. Although this policy applies specifically to tenure personnel, non-tenure personnel must follow the same procedures for notification and may be granted leave and other benefits at the discretion of the Board of Education.

Items 128-130—"Maternity Leave"

Women teachers will be granted maternity leave upon written application to the Superintendent of Schools which shall, so far as possible, be made at least six (6) months before the expected birth of the child. Ordinarily such leaves will commence more than four (4) months before such expected birth and shall continue for the remainder of the then current school year and the duration of the following school year. Mutually satisfactory arrangements will be made between the teacher and the building administrator. Such leave may be extended for an additional year upon the teacher's written request to the Superintendent of Schools.

A teacher will not accumulate additional leave days during a maternity leave of absence, however, upon return from such leave of absence prior accumulated leave days will be restored, and any such teacher whose leave began after January 31 will be placed on the step of the salary schedule she would have achieved in the year immediately following the commencement of the leave of absence.

For non-tenure teachers, maternity leave shall be an interruption of the probationary period and not in lieu of service in meeting the requirements for serving this probationary period.

Akron School District, Akron, Ohio
Article III, Section 28—"Personnel Policies—Maternity Leave"

a. Eligibility. Any married woman employee of the Board of Education who becomes pregnant after three or more consecutive years of regular service in the Akron Public Schools, immediately prior to her request for leave, and who desires to return to the employ of the Board at a future date, shall be granted a maternity leave of absence without pay. The absence shall extend for one calendar year following the birth of the child, plus any remaining portion of the school semester which may then be in progress. Such leave may be renewed for one or two semesters.

b. Application for Maternity Leave. The application for such leave of absence must be made not later than the end of the fourth month of pregnancy or at such earlier time as the employee's physical or emotional condition interferes with the regular and satisfactory performance of her duties, and must be accompanied by a statement from the attending physician, giving the approximate date of delivery.

It is the policy of the Board of Education that no woman employee remain at work beyond the sixth month of pregnancy (see 3.42, Termination of Contract, pertaining to resignation).

c. Application for Reinstatement. Application for reinstatement must be made at least thirty days before the expiration of a maternity leave of absence.

The employee must also submit a statement from her attending physician certifying that the employee is both physically and emotionally able to resume her duties with the Board of Education.

d. Early Termination of Maternity Leave. If the expected child does not survive, or if other conditions make desirable or necessary an earlier termination of a maternity leave, the employee may request termination of the leave before the expiration date of the leave.

The employee shall request such earlier termination of maternity leave in writing to the Superintendent of Schools, forwarding with the request a statement by the attending physician certifying that the employee is physically and emotionally able to resume her duties with the Board of Education.

e. Reinstatement. Upon returning to the school system, she shall be returned to the same position that she held at the time said leave commenced, if available; if not, to an equivalent position.

HAWAII

AN ACT RELATING TO COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF HAWAII:

SECTION 1. The purpose of this Act is to implement the constitutional mandate of Article XII, Section 2, which grants public employees the right to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining as prescribed by law.

SECTION 2. The Hawaii Revised Statutes is amended by adding a new chapter to be appropriately designated and to read as follows:

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

Section 1. Statement of findings and policy. The legislature finds that joint-decision making is the modern way of administering government. Where public employees have been granted the right to share in the decision-making process affecting wages and working conditions, they have become more responsive and better able to exchange ideas and information on operations with their administrators. Accordingly, government is made more effective. The legislature further finds that the enactment of positive legislation establishing guidelines for public employment relations is the best way to harness and direct the energies of public employees eager to have a voice in determining their conditions of work, to provide a rational method for dealing with disputes and work stoppages, and to maintain a favorable political and social environment.

The legislature declares that it is the public policy of the State to promote harmonious and cooperative relations between government and its employees and to protect the public by assuring effective and orderly operations of government. These policies are best effectuated by (1) recognizing the right of public employees to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining, (2) requiring the public employers to negotiate with and enter into written agreements with exclusive representatives on matters of wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, while, at the same time, (3) maintaining merit principles and the principle of equal pay for equal work among state and county employees pursuant to Sections 76-1, 76-2, 77-31, and 77-33, and (4) creating a public employment relations board to administer the provisions of this chapter.

Section 2. Definitions. As used in this chapter:

(1) "Arbitration" means the procedure whereby parties involved in an impasse mutually agree to submit their differences to a third party for a final and binding decision.

(2) "Appropriate bargaining unit" means the unit designated to be appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining pursuant to Section 6.

(3) "Board" means the Hawaii public employment relations board created pursuant to Section 5.

(4) "Certification" means official recognition by the Hawaii public employment relations board that the employee organization is, and shall remain, the exclusive representative for all of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit for the purpose of collective bargaining, until it is replaced by another employee organization, decertified, or dissolves.

(5) "Collective bargaining" means the performance of the mutual obligations of the public employer and the exclusive representative to meet at reasonable times, to confer and negotiate in good faith, and to execute a written agreement with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, except that by any such obligation neither party shall be compelled to agree to a proposal, or be required to make a concession.

(6) "Cost items" includes wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, the implementation of which requires an appropriation by a legislative body.

(7) "Employee" or "public employee" means any person employed by a public employer except elected and appointed officials and such other employees as may be excluded from coverage in Section 6(c).

(8) "Employee organization" means any organization of any kind in which public employees participate and which exists for the primary purpose of dealing with public employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment of public employees.

(9) "Employer" or "public employer" means the governor in the case of the State, the respective mayors in the case of the city and county of Honolulu and the counties of Hawaii, Maui, and Kauai, the board of education in the case of the department of education, and the board of regents in the case of the university of Hawaii, and any individual who represents one of these employers or acts in their interest in dealing with public employees.

(10) "Exclusive representative" means the employee organization, which as a result of certification by the board, has the right to be the collective bargaining agent of all employees in an appropriate bargaining unit without discrimination and without regard to employee organization membership.

(11) "Fact-finding" means identification of the major issues in a particular impasse, review of the positions of the parties and resolution of factual differences by one or more impartial fact-finders, and the making of recommendations for settlement of the impasse.

(12) "Impasse" means failure of a public employer and an exclusive representative to achieve agreement in the course of negotiations.

(13) "Legislative body" means the legislature in the case of the State, the city council in the case of the city and county of Honolulu, and the respective county councils in the case of the counties of Hawaii, Maui, and Kauai.

(14) "Mediation" means assistance by an impartial third party to reconcile an impasse between the public employer and the exclusive representative regarding wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment through interpretation, suggestion, and advice to resolve the impasse.

(15) "Professional employee" includes (A) any employee engaged in work (i) predominantly intellectual and varied in character as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical, or physical work, (ii) involving the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment in its performance, (iii) of such a character that the output produced or the result accomplished cannot be standardized in relation to a given period of time, (iv) requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study in an institution of higher learning or a hospital, as distinguished from a general academic education or from an apprenticeship or from training in the performance of routine mental, manual, or physical processes; or (B) any employee, who (i) has completed the courses of specialized intellectual instruction and study described in clause (A)(iv), and (ii) is performing related work under the supervision of a professional employee as defined in (A).

(16) "Service fee" means an assessment of all employees in an appropriate bargaining unit to defray the cost for services rendered by the exclusive representative in negotiations and contract administration.

(17) "Strike" means a public employee's refusal, in concerted action with others, to report for duty, or his wilful absence from his position, or his stoppage of work, or his abstinence in whole or in part from the full, faithful, and proper performance of the duties of employment, for the purpose of inducing, influencing, or coercing a change in the conditions, compensation, rights, privileges, or obligations of public employment; provided, that nothing herein shall limit or impair the right of any public employee to express or communicate a complaint or opinion on any matter related to the conditions of employment.

(18) "Supervisory employee" means any individual having authority in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, layoff, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or the responsibility to assign work to and direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if, in connection with the foregoing, the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment.

Section 3. Rights of employees. Employees shall have the right of self-organization and the right to form, join, or assist any employee organization for the purpose of bargaining collectively through representatives of their own choosing on questions of wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and to engage in lawful, concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, free from interference, restraint, or coercion. An employee shall have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities, except to the extent of making such payment of service fees to an exclusive representative as provided in Section 4.

Section 4. Payroll deductions.

(a) The employer shall, upon receiving from an exclusive representative a written statement which specifies an amount of reasonable service fees necessary to defray the costs for its services rendered in negotiating and administering an agreement and computed on a pro rata basis among all employees within its appropriate bargaining unit, deduct from the payroll of every employee in the appropriate bargaining unit the amount of service fees and remit the amount to the exclusive representative. A deduction permitted by this section, as determined by the board to be reasonable, shall extend to any employee organization chosen as the exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit. If an employee organization is no longer the exclusive representative of the appropriate bargaining unit, the deduction shall terminate.

(b) In addition to any deduction made to the exclusive representative under subsection (a), the employer shall, upon written authorization by an employee, deduct from the payroll of the employee the amount of membership dues, initiation fees, group insurance premiums, and other association benefits and shall remit the amount to the employee organization designated by the employee.

(c) The employer shall continue all payroll assignments authorized by an employee prior to the effective date of this chapter and all assignments authorized under subsection (b) until notification is submitted by an employee to discontinue his assignments.

Section 5. Hawaii public employment relations board.

(a) There is created a Hawaii public employment relations board composed of five members of which (1) two members shall be representatives of management, (2) two members shall be representatives of labor, and (3) a fifth member, the chairman, shall be representative of the public. All members shall be appointed by the governor for terms of six years each, except that the terms of members first appointed shall be for two, three, four, five, and six years respectively as designated by the governor at the time of appointments. Public employers and employee organizations representing public employees may submit to the governor for consideration names of persons representing their interests to serve as members of the board and the governor shall first consider these persons in selecting the members of the board to represent management and labor. Each member shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified. Because cumulative experience and continuity in office are essential to the proper administration of this chapter, it is declared to be in the public interest to continue board members in office as long as efficiency is demonstrated, notwithstanding the provision of Section 26-34, which limits the appointment of a member of a board or commission to two terms.

The members shall devote full time to their duties as members of the board. The chairman of the board shall be paid a salary at the rate of ninety-five per cent of the salary of a circuit court judge. Each of the other members shall be paid a salary at a rate of ninety per cent of the chairman's salary. No member shall hold any other public office or be in the employment of the State or a county, or any department or agency thereof, or any employee organization during his term.

Any action taken by the board shall be by a simple majority of the members of the board. All decisions of the board shall be reduced to writing and shall state separately its finding of fact and conclusions. Three members of the board, consisting of the chairman, at least one member representative of management, and at least one member representative of labor, shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the board, shall not impair the authority of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the board. The governor may appoint an acting member of the board during the temporary absence from the State or the illness of any regular member. An acting member, during his term of service, shall have the same powers and duties as the regular member.

The chairman of the board shall be responsible for the administrative functions of the board. The board may appoint an executive officer, mediators, members of fact-finding boards, arbitrators, and hearings officers, and employ other assistants as it may deem necessary in the performance of its functions, prescribe their duties, and fix their compensation and provide for reimbursement of actual and necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties within the amounts made available by appropriations therefor.

The board shall be within the department of labor and industrial relations for budgetary and administrative purposes only. The members of the board and the employees of the board shall be exempt from Chapters 76 and 77.

At the close of each fiscal year, the board shall make a written report to the governor of such facts as it may deem essential to describe its activities, including the cases and their dispositions, and the names, duties, and salaries of its officers and employees. Copies of the report shall be transmitted to the legislative bodies and to the public management committee.

(b) In addition to the powers and functions provided in other sections of this chapter, the board shall:

(1) Establish procedures for, investigate, and resolve, any dispute concerning the designation of an appropriate bargaining unit and the application of Section 6 to specific employees and positions;
(2) Resolve any dispute concerning cost items;
(3) Establish procedures for, resolve disputes with respect to, and supervise the conduct of, elections for the determination of employee representation;
(4) Conduct proceedings on complaints of prohibited practices by employers, employees, and employee organizations and take such actions with respect thereto as it deems necessary and proper;

(5) Hold such hearings and make such inquiries, as it deems necessary, to carry out properly its functions and powers, and for the purpose of such hearings and inquiries, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses and documents, take testimony and receive evidence, compel attendance of witnesses and the production of documents by the issuance of subpoenas, and delegate such powers to any member of the board or any person appointed by the board for the performance of its functions;

(6) Establish, after reviewing nominations submitted by the public employers and employee organizations, lists of qualified persons, broadly representative of the public, to be available to serve as mediators, members of fact-finding boards, or arbitrators;

(7) Establish daily or hourly rates at which mediators, members of fact-finding boards, and arbitrators are to be compensated and apportion the costs of arbitration to the parties involved;

(8) Conduct studies on problems pertaining to public employee-management relations, and make recommendations with respect thereto to the legislative bodies; request information and data from state and county departments and agencies and employee organizations necessary to carry out its functions and responsibilities; make available to the public management committee, employee organizations, as may exist, mediators, members of fact-finding boards, arbitrators, and other concerned parties statistical data relating to wages, benefits, and employment practices in public and private employment to assist them in resolving issues in negotiations;

(9) Promulgate rules and regulations relative to the exercise of its powers and authority and to govern the proceedings before it in accordance with Chapter 91.

Section 6. Appropriate bargaining units.

(a) All employees throughout the State within any of the following categories shall constitute an appropriate bargaining unit:

(1) Nonsupervisory employees in blue collar positions;

(2) Supervisory employees in blue collar positions;

(3) Nonsupervisory employees in white collar positions;

(4) Supervisory employees in white collar positions;

(5) Teachers and other personnel of the department of education under the same salary schedule;

(6) Educational officers and other personnel of the department of education under the same salary schedule;

(7) Faculty of the University of Hawaii and the community college system;

(8) Personnel of the University of Hawaii and the community college system; other than faculty;

(9) Registered professional nurses;

(10) Nonprofessional hospital and institutional workers;

(11) Firemen;

(12) Policemen; and

(13) Professional and scientific employees, other than registered professional nurses.

Because of the nature of work involved and the essentiality of certain occupations which require specialized training, units (9) through (13) are designated as optional appropriate bargaining units. Employees in any of these optional units may either vote for separate units or for inclusion in their respective units (1) through (4). If a majority of the employees in any optional unit desire to constitute a separate appropriate bargaining unit, supervisory employees may be included in the unit by mutual agreement among supervisory and nonsupervisory employees within the unit; if supervisory employees are excluded, the appropriate bargaining unit for such supervisory employees shall be (2) or (4), as the case may be.

The compensation plans for blue collar positions pursuant to Section 77-5 and for white collar positions pursuant to Section 77-13, the salary schedules for teachers pursuant to Section 297-33 and for educational officers pursuant to Section 297-33.1, and the appointment and classification of faculty pursuant to Sections 304-11 and 304-13, existing on the effective date of this chapter, shall be the bases for differentiating blue collar from white collar employees, professional from nonprofessional employees, supervisory from nonsupervisory employees, teachers from educational officers, and faculty from nonfaculty. In differentiating supervisory from nonsupervisory employees, class titles alone shall not be the basis for determination, but, in addition, the nature of the work, including whether or not a major portion of the working time of a supervisory employee is spent as part of a crew or team with nonsupervisory employees, shall also be considered.

(b) For the purpose of negotiations, the public employer of an appropriate bargaining unit shall mean the governor or his designated representatives of not less than three together with not more than two members of the board of education in the case of units (5) and (6), the governor or his designated representatives of not less than three together with not more than two members of the board of regents of the university of Hawaii in the case of units (7) and (8), and the governor or his designated representatives together with the mayors of all the counties or their designated representatives in the case of the remaining units.

(c) No elected or appointed official, member of any board or commission, representative of a public employer; including the administrative officer, director, or chief of a state or county department or agency, or any major division thereof as well as his deputy, first assistant, and any other top-level managerial and administrative personnel, individual concerned with confidential matters affecting employee-employer relations, part time employee working less than twenty hours per week, temporary employee of three months duration or less, or any commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Hawaii national guard, shall be included in any appropriate bargaining unit or entitled to coverage under this chapter.

(d) Where any controversy arises under this section, the board shall, pursuant to Chapter 91, make an investigation and, after a hearing upon due notice, make a final determination on the applicability of this section to specific positions and employees.

Section 7. Elections. Whenever, in accordance with regulations as may be prescribed by the board pursuant to Chapter 91, a petition is filed by an employee organization after January 1, 1971, showing written proof of at least thirty per cent representation of the public employees in an appropriate bargaining unit, the board shall hold an election by secret ballot to determine whether and by which employee organization the employees desire to be represented for the purpose of collective bargaining. The ballot shall contain, in addition, both the name of any candidate showing written proof of at least ten per cent representation of the public employees within the unit, and a provision for marking "no representation".

In any election in which none of the choices on the ballot receives a majority of the votes cast, a runoff election shall be conducted, the ballot providing for a selection between the two choices receiving the largest number of valid votes cast in the election. The board shall certify the results of the election, and where an employee organization receives a majority of the votes cast, the board shall certify the employee organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate bargaining unit for the purpose of collective bargaining.

No election shall be directed by the board in any appropriate bargaining unit within which (1) a valid election has been held in the preceding twelve months; or (2) a valid collective bargaining agreement is in force and effect, except upon a petition as provided herein not more than ninety days, but not less than sixty days, prior to the expiration of the agreement.

The board shall adopt rules and regulations governing the conduct of elections to determine representation, including the time, place, manner of notification, and reporting the results of elections, and the manner for filing any petition for an election or any petition concerning the results of an election. No mail ballots shall be permitted by the board except when for reasonable cause a specific individual would otherwise be unable to cast a ballot. The board shall have the final determination on any controversy concerning the eligibility of an employee to vote.

Section 8. Recognition and representation.

(a) The employee organization which has been certified by the board as representing the majority of employees in an appropriate bargaining unit shall be the exclusive representative of all employees in the unit. As exclusive representative, it shall have the right to act for and negotiate agreements covering all employees in the unit and shall be responsible for representing the interests of all such employees without discrimination and without regard to employee organization membership.

(b) An individual employee may present a grievance at any time to his employer and have the grievance heard without intervention of an employee organization; provided that the exclusive representative is afforded the opportunity to be present at such conferences and that any adjustment made shall not be inconsistent with the terms of an agreement then in effect between the employer and the exclusive representative.

Section 9. Scope of negotiations.

(a) The employer and the exclusive representative shall meet at reasonable times, including meetings in advance of the employer's budget-making process, and shall negotiate in good faith with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment which are subject to negotiations under this Act and which are to be embodied in a written agreement, or any question arising thereunder, but such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal to make a concession.

(b) The employer or the exclusive representative desiring to initiate negotiations shall notify the other in writing, setting forth the time and place of the meeting desired and generally the nature of the business to be discussed, and shall mail the notice by certified mail to the last known address of the other party sufficiently in advance of the meeting.

(c) Except as otherwise provided herein, all matters affecting employee relations, including those that are, or may be, the subject of a regulation promulgated by the employer or any personnel director, are subject to consultation with the exclusive representatives of the employees concerned. The employer shall make every reasonable effort to consult with the exclusive representatives prior to effecting changes in any major policy affecting employee relations.

(d) Excluded from the subjects of negotiations are matters of classification and reclassification, retirement benefits and the salary ranges and the number of incremental and longevity steps now provided by law, provided that the amount of wages to be paid in each range and step and the length of service necessary for the incremental and longevity steps shall be negotiable. The employer and the exclusive representative shall not agree to any proposal which would be inconsistent with merit principles or the principle of equal pay for equal work pursuant to Sections 76-1, 76-2, 77-31 and 77-33, or which would interfere with the rights of a public employer to (1) direct employees; (2) determine qualification, standards for work, the nature and contents of examinations, hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions and suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against employees for proper cause; (3) relieve an employee from duties because of lack of work or other legitimate reason; (4) maintain efficiency of government operations; (5) determine methods, means, and personnel by which the employer's operations are to be conducted; and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the missions of the employer in cases of emergencies.

Section 10. Written agreements; appropriations for implementation; enforcement.

(a) Any collective bargaining agreement reached between the employer and the exclusive representative shall be subject to ratification by the employees concerned. The agreement shall be reduced to writing and executed by both parties. The agreement may contain a grievance procedure and an impasse procedure culminating in final and binding arbitration, and shall be valid and enforceable when entered into in accordance with provisions of this chapter.

(b) All cost items shall be subject to appropriations by the appropriate legislative bodies. The employer shall submit within ten days of the date on which the agreement is ratified by the employees concerned all cost items contained therein to the appropriate legislative bodies, except that if any cost items require appropriation by the State legislature and it is not in session at the time, the cost items shall be submitted for inclusion in the governor's next operating budget within ten days after the date on which the agreement is ratified. The State legislature or the legislative bodies of the counties acting in concert, as the case may be, may approve or reject the cost items submitted to them, as a whole. If the State legislature or the legislative body of any county rejects any of the cost items submitted to them, all cost items submitted shall be returned to the parties for further bargaining.

(c) Because effective and orderly operations of government is essential to the public, it is declared to be in the public interest that in the course of collective bargaining, the public employer and the exclusive representative shall make every reasonable effort to conclude negotiations, and include provisions for an effective date, a reopening date, and an expiration date, at a time to coincide, as nearly as possible, with the period during which the appropriate legislative bodies may act on the operating budget of the employers.

(d) All existing rules and regulations adopted by the employer, including civil service or other personnel regulations, which are not contrary to this chapter, shall remain applicable. If there is a conflict between the collective bargaining agreement and any of the rules and regulations, the terms of the agreement shall prevail; provided that the terms are not inconsistent with Section 9(d).

Section 11. Resolution of disputes; grievances; impasses.

(a) A public employer shall have the power to enter into written agreement with the exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit setting forth a grievance procedure culminating in a final and binding decision, to be invoked in the event of any dispute concerning the interpretation or application of a written agreement. In the absence of such a procedure, either party may submit the dispute to the board for a final and binding decision. A dispute over the terms of an initial or renewed agreement does not constitute a grievance.

(b) A public employer shall have the power to enter into written agreement with the exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit setting forth an impasse procedure culminating in a final and binding decision, to be invoked in the event of an impasse over the terms of an initial or renewed agreement. In the absence of such a procedure, either party may request the assistance of the board by submitting to the board and to the other party to the dispute a clear, concise statement of each issue on which an impasse has been reached together with a certificate as to the good faith of the statement and the contents therein. The board, on its own motion, may determine that an impasse exists on any matter in a dispute. If the board determines on its own motion that an impasse exists, it may render assistance by notifying both parties to the dispute of its intent.

The board shall render assistance to resolve the impasse according to the following schedule:

(1) Mediation. Assist the parties in a voluntary resolution of the impasse by appointing a mediator or mediators, representative of the public, from a list of qualified persons maintained by the board, within three days after the date of the impasse, which shall be deemed to be the day on which notification is received or a determination is made that an impasse exists.

(2) Fact-finding. If the dispute continues fifteen days after the date of the impasse, the board shall appoint, within three days, a fact-finding board of not more than three members, representative of the public, from a list of qualified persons maintained by the board. The fact-finding board, shall, in addition to powers delegated to it by the public employment relations board, have the power to make recommendations for the resolution of the dispute. The fact-finding board, acting by a majority of its members, shall transmit its findings of fact and any recommendations for the resolution of the dispute to both parties within ten days after its appointment. If the dispute remains unresolved five days after the transmittal of the findings of fact and any recommendations, the board shall publish the findings of fact and any recommendations for public information if the dispute is not referred to final and binding arbitration.

(3) Arbitration. If the dispute continues thirty days after the date of the impasse, the parties may mutually agree to submit the remaining differences to arbitration, which shall result in a final and binding decision. The arbitration panel shall consist of three arbitrators, one selected by each party, and the third and impartial arbitrator selected by the other two arbitrators. If either party fails to select an arbitrator or for any reason there is a delay in the naming of an arbitrator, or if the arbitrators fail to select a neutral arbitrator within the time prescribed by the board, the board shall appoint the arbitrator or arbitrators necessary to complete the panel, which shall act with the same force and effect as if the panel had been selected by the parties as described above. The arbitration panel shall take whatever actions necessary, including but not limited to inquiries, investigations, hearings, issuance of subpoenas, and administering oaths, in accordance with procedures prescribed by the board to resolve the impasse. If the dispute remains unresolved within fifty days after the date of the impasse, the arbitration panel shall transmit its findings and its final and binding decision on the dispute to both parties. The parties shall enter into an agreement or take whatever action is necessary to carry out and effectuate the decision. All items requiring any monies for implementation shall be subject to appropriations by the appropriate legislative bodies, and the employer shall submit all such items agreed to in the course of negotiations within ten days to the appropriate legislative bodies.

(4) The costs for mediation and fact-finding shall be borne by the board. All other costs, including that of a neutral arbitrator, shall be borne equally by the parties involved in the dispute.

(c) If the parties have not mutually agreed to submit the dispute to final and binding arbitration, either party shall be free to take whatever lawful action it deems necessary to end the dispute; provided that no action shall involve the disruption or interruption of public services within sixty days after the fact-finding board has made public its findings of fact and any recommendations for the resolution of the dispute. The employer shall submit to the appropriate legislative bodies his recommendations for the settlement of the dispute on all cost items together with the findings of fact and any recommendations made by the fact-finding board. The exclusive representative may submit to the appropriate legislative body its recommendations for the settlement of the dispute on all cost items.

Section 13. Strikes, rights and prohibitions.

(a) Participation in a strike shall be unlawful for any employee who (1) is not included in an appropriate bargaining unit for which an exclusive representative has been certified by the board, or (2) is included in an appropriate bargaining unit for which process for resolution of a dispute is by referral to final and binding arbitration.

(b) It shall be lawful for an employee, who is not prohibited from striking under paragraph (a) and who is in the appropriate bargaining unit involved in an impasse, to participate in a strike after (1) the requirements of Section 12 relating to the resolution of disputes have been complied with in good faith, (2) the proceedings for the prevention of any prohibited practices have been exhausted, (3) sixty days have elapsed since the fact-finding board has made public its findings and any recommendation, (4) the exclusive representative has given a ten-day notice of intent to strike to the board and to the employer.

(c) Where the strike occurring, or is about to occur, endangers the public health or safety, the public employer concerned may petition the board to make an investigation. If the board finds that there is imminent or present danger to the health and safety of the public, the board shall set requirements that must be complied with to avoid or remove any such imminent or present danger.

(d) No employee organization shall declare or authorize a strike of employees, which is or would be in violation of this section. Where it is alleged by the employer that an employee organization has declared or authorized a strike of employees which is or would be in violation of this section, the employer may apply to the board for a declaration that the strike is or would be unlawful and the board, after affording an opportunity to the employee organization to be heard on the application, may make such a declaration.

(e) If any employee organization or any employee is found to be violating or failing to comply with the requirements of this section or if there is reasonable cause to believe that an employee organization or an employee is violating or failing to comply with such requirements, the board shall institute appropriate proceedings in the circuit in which the violation occurs to enjoin the performance of any acts or practices forbidden by this section, or to require the employee organization or employees to comply with the requirements of this section. Jurisdiction to hear and dispose of all actions under this section is conferred upon each circuit court, and each court may issue, in compliance with Chapter 380, such orders and decrees, by way of injunction, mandatory injunction, or otherwise, as may be appropriate to enforce this section.

Section 13. Prohibited practices; evidence of bad faith.

(a) It shall be a prohibited practice for a public employer or its designated representative wilfully to:

(1) Interfere, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise of any right guaranteed under this chapter;
(2) Dominate, interfere, or assist in the formation, existence, or administration of any employee organization;
(3) Discriminate in regard to hiring, tenure, or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any employee organization.
(4) Discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because he has signed or filed an affidavit, petition, or complaint or given any information or testimony under this chapter, or because he has informed, joined, or chosen to be represented by any employee organization;
(5) Refuse to bargain collectively in good faith with the exclusive representative as required in Section 9;
(6) Refuse to participate in good faith in the mediation, fact-finding, and arbitration procedures set forth in Section 11;
(7) Refuse or fail to comply with any provision of this chapter; or
(8) Violate the terms of a collective bargaining agreement.

(b) It shall be a prohibited practice for a public employee or for an employee organization or its designated agent wilfully to:

(1) Interfere, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise of any right guaranteed under this chapter;
(2) Refuse to bargain collectively in good faith with the public employer, if it is an exclusive representative, as required in Section 9;
(3) Refuse to participate in good faith in the mediation, fact-finding and arbitration procedures set forth in Section 11;
(4) Refuse or fail to comply with any provision of this chapter; or
(5) Violate the terms of a collective bargaining agreement.

Section 14. Prevention of prohibited practices. Any controversy concerning prohibited practices may be submitted to the board in the same manner and with the same effect as provided in Section 377-9. All references in Section 377-9 to "board" shall include the Hawaii public employment relations board and "labor organization" shall include employee organization.

Section 15. Financial reports to employees. Every employee organization shall keep an adequate record of his financial transactions and shall make available annually, to the employees who are members of the organization, within sixty days after the end of its fiscal year, a detailed written financial report thereof in the form of a balance sheet and an operating statement, certified as to accuracy by a certified public accountant. In the event of failure of compliance with this section, any employee within the organization may petition the public employment relations board for an order compelling such compliance. An order of the board on such petition shall be enforceable in the same manner as other orders of the board under this chapter.

Section 16. Public records and proceedings. The complaints, orders, and testimony relating to a proceeding instituted by the public employment relations board under Section 377-9 shall be public records and be available for inspection or copying. All proceedings pursuant to Section 377-9 shall be open to the public.

Section 17. List of employee organizations and exclusive representatives. The public employment relations board shall maintain a list of employee organizations. To be recognized as such and to be included in the list, an organization shall file with the board a statement of its name, the name and address of its secretary or other officer to whom notices may be sent, the date of its organization, and its affiliations, if any, with other organizations. No other qualifications for inclusion shall be required, but every employee organization shall notify the board promptly of any change of name or of the name and address of its secretary or other officer to whom notices may be sent, or of its affiliations.

The board shall indicate on the list which employee organizations are exclusive representatives of appropriate bargaining units, the effective dates of their certification, and the effective date and expiration date of any agreement reached between the public employer and the exclusive representative. Copies of the list shall be made available to interested parties upon request.

Section 18. Penalty. Any person who wilfully assaults, resists, prevents, impedes, or interferes with a mediator, member of the fact-finding board, or arbitrator, or any member of the public employment relations board or any of the agents or employees of the board in the performance of duties pursuant to this chapter shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Section 19. Chapter takes precedence, when. This chapter shall take precedence over all conflicting statutes concerning this subject matter and shall preempt all contrary local ordinances, executive orders, legislation, rules, or regulations adopted by the State, a county, or any department or agency thereof, including the departments of personnel services or the civil service commission.

Section 20. Chapter inoperative, when. If any provision of this chapter jeopardizes the receipt by the State or any county of any federal grant-in-aid or other federal allotment of money, the provision shall, insofar as the fund is jeopardized, be deemed to be inoperative.

Section 21. Severability. If any provision of this chapter, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity does not affect other provisions or applications of the chapter which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this chapter are severable.

SECTION 3. Chapter 86, Hawaii Revised Statutes, is repealed.

SECTION 4. Appropriations. There is appropriated out of the general revenues of the State of Hawaii the sum of $274,242 for the establishment and operation of the Hawaii public employment relations board in fiscal year 1970-71. In subsequent years, the governor shall include in his operating budget such sum as may be necessary for the continuation and operation of the Hawaii public employment relations board.

SECTION 5. Effective date. This Act shall take effect on July 1, 1970.

CALIFORNIA

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES MAY NOT STRIKE ABSENT STATUTORY AUTHORITY

The California Court of Appeal for the Fourth District reversed a decision of the San Diego County Superior Court which vacated a temporary restraining order in a case involving striking utilities and public works employees. In a heavily cited opinion emphasizing that "the employer-employee relationship in public employment is the product of law—constitutional, legislative and decisional—rather than the product of a contract," the appeals court determined that the trial court's decision resulted from "an erroneous concept of law," and held:

> The common law rule public employees do not have the right to bargain collectively or to strike is predicated expressly on the necessity for and lack of statutory authority conferring such right. Where a statute authorizes collective bargaining and strikes it includes them within the methods authorized by law for fixing the terms and conditions of employment. Those who advocate the right of public employees to strike should present their case to the Legislature.

When members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 127, went on strike against the city of San Diego in the spring of 1969, a superior court judge denied the city's application for a temporary injunction on grounds that public employees lawfully may strike (NRD, 10-69, 10). Citing a Supreme Court of the United States ruling to the effect that "the public policy of any state is to be found in its Constitution, acts of the Legislature, and decision of its courts," the trial court decided that > the Legislature has expressly prohibited certain public employees [fire fighters and law enforcement personnel] from striking and has left to the Courts the question of whether or not in that cast of the situation the public employee does have a fundamental right to strike. . . . The Legislature has expressly permitted the organization of public employees for the purpose of pursuing objectives relating to wages and terms of employment, conditions of employment. It has not withdrawn any of the traditional weapons of labor other than the right to strike as to two classes of employees.

On appeal, the city asserted that the issue was whether public employees have a right to strike; the union asserted that an additional issue was whether the denial of a temporary injunction was a proper exercise of the trial court's discretion. Defining the right to strike as "a coercive practice to compel acceptance of collective bargaining demands," the appeals court found that all California cases on the subject "support the rule as stated in Almond v. County of Sacramento." In that case the Supreme Court denied a hearing on a California appeals court ruling which held it "well settled" that "absent an authorizing statute, a public employee has no right either to bargain collectively or to strike. . . . It is settled by decisions of the Supreme Court itself and by that court's denial of hearings in courts of appeal decisions. This court (and we imply neither agreement nor disagreement) is bound by the rule."

In an extensive examination of case law, the appeals court found that the California common law prohibition of public employee strikes generally is accepted in many jurisdictions and has been "adopted or confirmed statutorily by 20 states and the federal government." The court explained that > the reasons for the rule are many; apply public policy; relate generally to the fundamental differences between private and public employment as regards the processing and settlement of labor demands and disputes; take into account the authority of the public employer respecting both the method for fixing and the substance of the terms and conditions of public employment is limited to that prescribed by law; include a consideration of the overriding duty of the public employer to perform prescribed governmental functions; and furnish a constitutionally approved basis for classification in the premises. . . . The terms and conditions of public employment are fixed by the public through the processes of law, and acceptance of such employment requires acceptance of the processes by which the terms and conditions of employment are fixed, i.e., by law rather than by contract; . . . confers benefits not available to the private employee which are the product of the processes of law, such as civil service tenure status and a vested right to retirement benefits . . . but also imposes a distinct responsibility attendant upon public service . . . and results in the relinquishments of certain rights enjoyed by private employees.

The union argued for review of the rule that public employees may not strike without statutory authorization because of recent decisions extending the requirements essential to a determination of whether legislation involving "fundamental interests" applicable only to a particular class (such as public employees) guarantees equal protection under the law. That is, the union noted comparisons between a number of public and private sector job classifications and contended that "in cases involving a law affecting 'fundamental interests' [denial of such employees' right to strike] not only must reasonably relate to the purpose of the law but also must be 'a necessary means of accomplishing a legitimate state interest' and the law must serve 'to promote a compelling state interest.'" Applying such requirements, the union argued that the rule prohibiting public employee strikes absent statutory authorization violates equal protection of the law, because that rule "is not necessary to accomplish nor does it promote any legitimate compelling state interest." But the court found the union's argument to be > premised on the fallacious application of the equal protection of the law requirements to a comparison of job classifications in public employment with job classifications in private employment rather than to a comparison of the characteristics fundamental to public employment pertinent to a determination of the terms and conditions of such employment, and the resolution of demands and disputes respecting such, with the characteristics fundamental to private employment pertinent to the same subjects. . . . The reasons for the law denying public employees the right to strike while affording such rights to private employees are not premised on differences in types of jobs held by these two classes of employees but upon differences in the employment relationship to which they are parties. The legitimate and compelling state interest accomplished and promoted by the law denying public employees the right to strike is not solely the need for a particular governmental service but the preservation of a system of government in the ambit of public employment and the proscription of practices not compatible with the public employer-employee relationship.

Although the union additionally argued that the trial court's denial of a temporary injunction should be sustained because there was no showing of irreparable damage, the appeals court reversed and concluded that > the trial judge, as evidenced by his memorandum opinion, did not deny injunctive relief because there was no showing of irreparable damage, but because of an erroneous conclusion public employees have a right to strike. . . . Whether a preliminary injunction should issue is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. . . . In the case at bench the evidence would have supported an order granting a preliminary injunction. The trial court did not exercise its discretion in the premises. Its decision was the exclusive product of an erroneous concept of the law.

AGENCY SHOP PROCEEDING REVERSED AND REMANDED FOR LACK OF FACTUAL RECORD

When a number of Southgate teachers appealed a decision of the Wayne County Circuit Court (NRD, 2-69, A-1, C-5) which ruled agency shop "a valid bargainable issue in contract negotiations," the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed and remanded the case because "the record before us does not permit determination of the validity or invalidity of this agency shop provision." Raising the question of what constitutes a nonmember's proportionate share of the cost of negotiating and administering a contract, the appeals court additionally commented that "it is not clear . . . that agency shop or any form of union security agreement is a valid 'condition of employment' and subject to collective bargaining in the public employment sector."

Article II, Section A, of the 1968-70 contract between the Southgate Education Association (SEA) and the Southgate Community School District provided that all teachers as a condition of continued employment pay either membership dues and assessments of the SEA and its parent associations (the Michigan Education Association and the National Education Association), or pay a representation fee equivalent to such dues and assessments. The provision further stipulated that "in the event the representation fee shall not be paid, the Board upon receiving a signed statement from the Association indicating the teacher has failed to comply with this condition, shall immediately notify said teacher that his services shall be discontinued at the end of the current semester."

On September 26, 1968, shortly after all non-Association members were informed of the options available to them in regard to the agency shop requirements, plaintiffs filed an action in the Wayne County Circuit Court seeking to restrain application of Article II of the agreement. In denying the relief sought, the trial court found that the "discontinuation" portion of the agency shop clause did not conflict with the state's Teacher Tenure Law and ruled:

> The claim that an agency shop provision violates statutory law in that it forces one to join a union, and is discriminatory, is without merit. Such provision in an agreement serves the purpose of allocating indiscriminately the cost of representation for collective bargaining among all those participating in the benefits received. Such a provision eliminates the "free riders."

In examining state law, the appeals court found no "controlling precedent in this field of public employment and negotiated agency shop provision in a collective bargaining agreement," and no provision in the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA) which specifically authorizes union security agreements, as does MCLA § 423.14 (a portion of the Michigan Labor Mediation Act). Assuming, however, that agency shop is a condition of employment and is subject to public employee bargaining, the court held that such bargaining is restricted by MCLA § 423.210 (a portion of the PERA), which states in part: "It shall be unlawful for a public employer or an officer or agent of a public employer . . . (c) to discriminate in regard to hire, terms or other conditions of employment in order to encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization."

While such language "mandates . . . a position of neutrality" on the part of the public employer when dealing with its employees, the appeals court held that in the context of the rest of the statute it did not indicate a legislative intent to eliminate agency shop provisions in public employee agreements:

> MCLA § 423.211 . . . requires the selected representative to bargain for all employees, union and non-union. If benefits derive from such bargaining, non-union as well as union members enjoy those benefits, and it would be inequitable not to require non-union members to pay their proportionate share of the cost of obtaining and administering such benefits.
> It is apparent from reading article 2, § A . . . of the [Southgate] contract here involved that the validity of this agency shop provision hinges on the relationship between payment of a sum equivalent to the dues of SEA, MEA and NEA and a non-member's proportionate share of the cost of negotiating and administering the contract involved. If that payment is greater than or less than that proportionate share, the agency shop provision is in violation of MCLA § 423.210.

Finding that the case's record lacked proofs permitting a determination of the validity or invalidity of the Southgate agency shop provision, the appeals court reversed and remanded the case "for proceedings consistent with this opinion." In addition, the court ordered the state board of education "to join the action as a party according to its constitutional obligation and its interests," since "the question presented by this action is of major significance to all public education of this state." (Jean Smigel, et al. v. Southgate Community School District, et al., Michigan Court of Appeals, May 28, 1970.)

TEACHERS' STRIKE DURING CONTRACT RENEGOTIATION RULED ILLEGAL

When members of the Massapequa Federation of Teachers, Local 1442, went on strike during negotiation of a 1970-71 contract with the education board of Union Free School District No. 23, the New York Supreme Court for Nassau County ruled that the strike violated both the current contractual agreement between the parties and the state's Taylor Law. In enjoining the strike and limiting the union's liability for striking to $1,000, the court observed that "there is no reason why the parties, through their representatives as assisted by the appointed mediator, cannot and should not press their negotiations leading to a just solution of their problems."

Recognized as exclusive representative of a unit of local classroom teachers through the period ending June 30, 1970, Local 1442 had bargained a contract effective through that date. Negotiation of a successor contract commenced on March 2, 1970, and continued to May 10 without "a meeting of minds." At the end of April, however, union members authorized a strike, and approximately one-half of the district's teachers subsequently went on strike on May 7.

According to the court, the strike crippled the educational process "at the critical period preceding final examinations," and constituted an action which was "part and parcel of a concerted effort to exert pressure to achieve a new contract effective July 1, 1970. It is, therefore, crystal clear to this court that the strike . . . violates the existing contractual arrangements between the parties." The court additionally determined that the union and its members were "engaged in activities constituting an illegal strike by public employees against a public employer" in violation of the Taylor Law.

In enjoining the strike "pending the final determination in this action," the court explained that while the "right to legally and peacefully picket is beyond question, [it is] limited however, to restraint in avoiding and desisting from any conduct which causes or is part of public disorder, or which is calculated to and does prevent free access to the school properties by those who have a right to be there." (In Re Board of Education, Union Free School District No. 23, Town of Oyster Bay (Massapequa Federation of Teachers), New York Supreme Court for Nassau County, May 18, 1970.)

UNIVERSITY TEACHING ASSISTANTS' STRIKE RULED ILLEGAL AT COMMON LAW; CONTEMPT CHARGES ASSESSED

A strike by graduate teaching assistants, research assistants, and fellows employed by the University of Wisconsin was enjoined by the Dane County Circuit Court as illegal under common law. The court's "first impression" ruling, rendered more than a week before settlement of a 25-day strike conducted by some 1,000 members of the Teaching Assistants Association (TAA) during contract negotiation with the university, found that "the public policy of this state and the common law of every other American jurisdiction is that public employee strikes are illegal." Although a contract ratified by the parties eventually ended the strike, 21 TAA members received contempt of court convictions for continuing strike activity following the court's injunction and grant of declaratory relief to the university.

Defendant TAA had been recognized by the university as bargaining agent for all university graduate teaching assistants; by mutual agreement, the parties began bargaining specified items in the summer of 1969. Negotiation continued unsuccessfully until March 16, 1970, when TAA members struck, and many refused to perform their regularly assigned teaching duties. The university regents accordingly brought a circuit court action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

Ruling that TAA members are public employees, the court examined portions of the state's Municipal Employment Relations Act, and found it "fair to say that every time our legislature has dealt with the question of strikes by public employees it has, in effect, declared them to be against public policy." Moreover, reported decisions in other jurisdictions have resulted in the "uniform rule" that public employee strikes are illegal at common law.

During litigation, the TAA asserted that even if the strike was illegal, it was not enjoinable, because an injunction would violate defendants' First Amendment rights, and the strike caused "no harm sufficient to invoke the equitable power of the court." Defendants further urged that the anti-injunction provisions of state statutes relating to private employment should be applied to the instant situation. The university, on the other hand, argued that "harm need not be shown to enjoin an illegal act," that the strike itself clearly was enjoinable, and that picketing in support of the strike was enjoinable because it was not protected by the First Amendment.

In rejecting defendants' arguments and finding a sufficient showing of harm, the court explained that while statutory anti-injunction provisions affecting private employment > are premised on a declaration that concerted work stoppages are legal in private employment . . . here . . . we have illegal activity in the form of an illegal strike by public employees. Conditions imposed on enjoining otherwise lawful activity in private employment are not helpful in deciding the tests to be applied where the activity concerned is illegal per se.

> The more persuasive argument is based on the fact that illegal activity is enjoinable without further showing of harm. . . . The need for vindication of the public interest obviates the need for an express showing of harm.
> However, the decision here need not rest on the mere illegality of the strike. The plaintiffs [showed] that the strike itself was causing harm to the University, its various departments, and to the student body. This latter aspect is perhaps the more serious. . . . Further continuation of the strike will make it impossible—if it is not already so—to make up missed classes. Based on this evidence, the court is of the opinion that the plaintiff has shown sufficient immediate irreparable, and continuing harm to entitle them to an injunction against the strike and activity in furtherance thereof.

But the "most difficult question," according to the court, was the scope of injunctive relief to be granted the university. Plaintiffs sought relief from the strike proper and "any concerted activity with others in participation or furtherance of such strike or work stoppage"; the court found that under the law the university was entitled to an injunction against any action furthering the illegal strike, even though such activity might involve speech and assembly. The TAA, however, attempted to show that the university was not entitled to injunctive relief because it did not have "clean hands" in regard to good-faith bargaining. But the court concluded that > the University, which was not obligated to do so, agreed to bargain in April of 1969, and since then has bargained with the TAA in good faith and with the goal of reaching an agreement. Whatever the merits of the particular issues on which the parties disagree, the defendants failed to prove that the University acted unreasonably.

> There has, however, been no evidence presented to this court of physical obstruction or intentional blocking of entrances. Local and University officials . . . testified that the picketing was peaceful and nonobstructive. Therefore, it appears that there is no present need for a judgment limiting picketing activities as such. All picketing in support of the strike has already been found to be enjoinable.
> This court finds the plaintiffs entitled to declaratory relief adjudging the strike and related activity to be illegal under the common law of Wisconsin. . . . [But the injunction to which plaintiff is entitled] should include a paragraph expressly indicating that it shall not be construed to cover peaceful protests or picketing unrelated to the illegal strike.

Subsequent to the court's April 3, 1970, issuance of a permanent injunction against the strike, two other proceedings were brought at which 21 TAA members were cited for civil contempt for refusal to comply with the terms of the injunction and individually assessed with a $250 fine or 30 days in jail. In the interim, the strike ended when the TAA voted on April 10 to accept the university's last contract offer, and the university regents approved the contract the same day. Hailed as a landmark though controversial settlement, the contract is effective through September 1, 1971, and contains both a no-reprisal clause and a no-strike clause. OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

SUPREME COURT DECLINES RULING ON TEACHER STRIKE ISSUES

On June 27, 1970, the Supreme Court of the United States denied a petition for certiorari entered in the case of some Anderson, Indiana, teachers who struck and picketed various city schools on May 1, 1969. The high court accordingly left standing a narrow decision of the Indiana Supreme Court (NRD, 1-70, 3) which ruled public employee strikes illegal, and upheld a contempt citation issued by the Madison County Superior Court against the Anderson Federation of Teachers, Local 519, for violation of a temporary restraining order.

The Federation's petition for writ of certiorari posed two questions:

1. Does an order enjoining public school teachers from striking and picketing, entered without notice or hearing, and without a finding of possible substantial and irreparable injury or interference with the public health, safety or welfare, violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment?
2. Is an injunction, entered without notice and hearing, enjoining all concerted work stoppages, picketing and related activities by public school teachers solely because they are public employees, violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment where under similar circumstances private employees could not be enjoined?

In reference to the first question, the petition noted that the high court "has never considered whether the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires some finding of interference with the public health, safety or welfare, or with some essential governmental activity, as a necessary consequence of the particular work stoppage or other concerted activity, before a blanket injunction of the type entered here can properly be issued." While Anderson teachers engaged in peaceful activities which neither closed the schools nor "substantially" disrupted the city's education program, the Indiana Supreme Court "nevertheless upheld the action of the lower court in enjoining all such concerted activities, including peaceful picketing. The majority held that any such activity when engaged in by employees of a public agency is per se illegal and therefore subject to immediate injunction and consequent contempt proceedings for any violation of such an exparte order."

As to the second issue raised, the petition emphasized that "the dissenting judges of the Supreme Court of Indiana pointed out that no rational basis has been suggested for a rule prohibiting all strikes by public employees per se, where the impact upon the community is no greater than the impact of strikes involving private employers providing similar services." It urged the high court to consider whether there is any rational basis consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause for such a rule.

The Federation's petition additionally asked the high court to clarify its majority opinion in United States v. United Mine Workers, a decision upon which the Indiana Supreme Court relied in finding that "the Supreme Court of the United States clearly enunciated the proposition that public employees did not have the right to strike and that the injunctive process might properly be used to prevent . . . such strikes." Arguing that the state court's interpretation of United Mine Workers constituted "an unduly broad reading," the petition asserted that the high court "did not there purport to rule on the substantive rights of public employees to engage in concerted union activities." Moreover, the petition contended that the United Mine Workers case (in which a national emergency existed) erroneously has been used by courts as authority for the rule that public employees may not strike.

The high court, however, declined to rule upon the issues presented by the petition. (Anderson Federation of Teachers, Local 519 v. School City of Anderson, et al., U.S. Supreme Court, cert. denied, July 27, 1970.)

Board Findings And Rulings

CONNECTICUT

EMPLOYEES OF FEDERALLY FUNDED BUT SCHOOL DIRECTED PROGRAM COVERED UNDER BARGAINING LAW

Since ultimate control over the conditions of employment of Waterbury school integration program aides and assistants rests with the Waterbury education department, rather than the state or federal agency providing program funds, the Connecticut Board of Labor Relations ruled that the department is an employer within the meaning of the state's Municipal Employee Relations Act. The board accordingly asserted jurisdiction over the integration program aides and assistants under the Act, and denied the education department's motion to dismiss representation petitions filed by the Service Employees International Union, Local 531.

Citing two earlier decisions reached in similar cases, the board pointed out that the Act's procedure for municipal employee bargaining expressly defines "a municipal employer [as] a district school board, housing authority, or other authority established by law, which by statute, charter, special act, or ordinance has sole and exclusive control over the appointment of and the wages, hours, and working conditions of employment of its employees" (emphasis added).

In New Britain Office of Economic Opportunity and Council #4, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, the board dismissed for lack of jurisdiction a petition filed on behalf of certain employees of the New Britain OEO in finding that the OEO, a federal agency, did not fall within the Act's definition of "employer." That is, when the New Britain OEO administered a project financed by federal funds, it was not compelled to bargain collectively with project personnel because it was not an employer under the Act which had "sole and exclusive control over the . . . wages, hours, and conditions of employment of its employees."

The board also dismissed for jurisdictional reasons a petition filed by AFSCME Council #4 in a case involving the New Haven Housing Authority. Finding that the Authority did not have exclusive control over the pay and working conditions of employees working on a locally administered but federally funded project, the board held that the bargaining relationship involved in that sort of situation was not contemplated by the Act.

In the instant case, however, the board found that the Waterbury education department did control the hours, pay, and working conditions of its integration program aides and assistants, despite state or federal funding of the program. As such, the New Britain and New Haven rulings were inapplicable to the present petitions, and the education department's motion to dismiss was denied. MICHIGAN

GRIEVANCE ON ELIMINATED POSITION FOUND TIMELY AND PARTIAL BACK PAY AWARDED

A January 12, 1970, grievance filed by Clintondale department heads who continued to perform their duties after notification in mid-October 1969 that their job classification and extra pay were being eliminated was ruled timely by a Michigan arbitrator. Determining that the grievance was a "continuing" one and, therefore, did not violate a contractual 20-day limit on filing grievances, the arbitrator directed the Clintondale Community Schools to pay the department heads for services rendered from 20 days prior to the filing of the grievance through the end of the 1969-70 school year.

On October 14, 1969, the school administration notified department heads in writing that > due to financial problems, a need for reorganization, and role definition, the supplemental classification of "department head" will be eliminated for the remainder of this school year.

>
> Those persons who have served in this capacity will be reimbursed for time spent in this capacity through October 17, 1969.
> As soon as possible a meeting will be held with secondary [principals] and certain [Clintondale Education Association] CEA members and the assistant superintendent for the purpose of mapping the department head development program for the future.

Then on January 12, 1970, a CEA official filed a grievance claiming that the administration had violated the parties' September 4, 1969, contract by "arbitrarily and unilaterally and without consultation with the Association [removing] department heads from payroll status." In addition, he contended that "the contract states that department heads shall exist," that the position of department head "shall not be deleted," and that "department heads shall be reinstated and be given full pay per the Articles and Sections of the contract that apply."

Pointing to Article XXIV, Section E(1) of the contract which provided in part that "a complaint shall . . . within 20 days of the incidence of the alleged grievance be brought to the attention of the Administration," the school argued that since the "incidence" grieved occurred in October, the grievance was untimely filed. The CEA, however, contended that the grievance was a continuing one, because the contract provided for both a specified salary differential for department heads and the maintenance of standards, i.e., maintenance of the department heads' positions.

In examining the parties' contract, the arbitrator found that it recognized the existence of the position of department head as a condition of employment, and specified compensation for that position at a stated percentage of salary. Moreover, the contract provided for the continuance of all conditions of employment at a level no lower than the highest minimum standards effective when the contract was signed, and held that the responsibilities of any bargaining unit position would not be altered without prior notification to the teacher. According to the arbitrator, use of the word "altered" indicates that elimination of a position was not covered by the pertinent contract clause.

The arbitrator thereby found that > the language of the grievance supports the thesis that it is a continuing grievance as it refers to "payroll status." Payroll is a continuing thing. The complaint is not directed solely against the removal of the department heads as of October 17, 1969, but against their being continually kept off the payroll.

>
> In addition, the evidence is unrefuted that the department heads were requested by the high school and junior high school principals to perform as department heads and that they continued to do so from the time of the announced termination date.
>
> If there is a violation, the violation occurs each day that a department head is serving in that capacity and not being paid the 4 percent or 3 percent of base pay as required by . . . the contract. The situation differs from a single isolated completed transaction. . . .
> Had the duties of the department heads been reassigned to the principals, or eliminated completely, there might be rationale for denying the grievance. But the duties of the department heads were not eliminated and were not reassigned. . . . In addition to the act of the high school and junior high school principals who represented their employer, the Clintondale Community Schools, the language of the contract supports the CEA position that department heads are to be continued during the term of the contract.

While directing the school to pay department heads for duties performed from December 24, 1969, through the end of the school year, the arbitrator reserved jurisdiction in the event the parties were unable to determine the amount entitled each grievant. ILLEGAL FOR SCHOOL BOARD TO WITHHOLD BENEFITS TO FORCE SIGNING OF CONTRACTS

The Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) found that during negotiation of a collective agreement the Gibraltar School District illegally withheld fringe benefits from teachers who refused to sign individual contracts, while paying benefits to teachers who signed. In adopting the trial examiner's unfair labor practice determination and recommendation that the district be ordered to cease its illegal conduct, the MERC qualified its earlier decision in Bullock Creek School District of Midland County and Bullock Creek Education Association (NRD, 10-69, 7).

During a 1968 dispute over contract terms, Gibraltar teachers went on strike from November 13 through late December, when a circuit court ordered the schools to stay open during Christmas. Teachers were notified by the district to interview for re-employment, and the strike ended on December 26 when most teachers reported for work.

On December 24, however, the district bargaining team offered the Gibraltar Federation of Teachers a proposal stating that if the strikers signed individual contracts for the remainder of the school year, they would be reinstated and their fringe benefits restored. The individual contracts provided the former strikers with per-diem rates of 1/190th of their yearly salary, and specified that the terms of the individual contracts would be subject to those of the master contract. A 1968-69 collective agreement never was executed.

When the circuit court issued another order on January 3, 1969, prohibiting the district from demanding signed contracts as a condition of employment, the district maintained that former strikers who worked during Christmas but did not sign the individual contracts could not teach after January 6. The present charges accordingly were brought by the Federation on behalf of three teachers who alleged that the district required signed individual contracts of them, withheld fringe benefits from nonsigners, issued a memorandum prohibiting classroom discussion of the strike, and fired one teacher for engaging in such discussion.

The trial examiner in the instant case (whose unfair labor practice finding in Bullock Creek was reversed by the MERC) had explained at the time of Bullock Creek that the traditional teacher contract under the School Code "merged into the collective bargaining process wherever teachers [exercised] their Public Employment Relations Act [PERA] right to designate a bargaining agent." By virtue of this reasoning, the trial examiner concluded that the Bullock Creek School District had violated the unfair labor practices section of the PERA "by the very act of offering salary contracts to individual teachers while negotiations [were] pending with the bargaining agent." Likening Bullock Creek to the present situation, the trial examiner found that in the former case > the employer indicated that failure to return the contracts would be tantamount to insubordination. Therefore, the element of coercion to obtain signed contracts was involved in the case. [I am] of the opinion that the employer in the instant case, by refusing to pay regular fringe benefits to those teachers who [had] not signed individual contracts, [was] using the same kind of coercion as the employer in the Bullock Creek case. In fact the element of coercion here [was] far more effective. It may be assumed that the approximately 120 teachers who . . . refused to execute individual teacher contracts [were] not being paid for days on which they [were] sick and [were] not eligible for Blue Cross benefits in the event that they [were] sick or hospitalized.

> [I conclude] that the employer, by tendering individual teacher contracts to all of the former strikers at a time when negotiations were still in process on a master agreement, violated the duty to bargain. . . . It is further and separately concluded that the use of coercion, to wit, the denial of regular fringe benefits to those teachers who . . . failed to sign individual contracts, [was] a further violation of the duty to bargain, independently of whether the original offer of contracts constituted a violation. . . . The employer is permitted under the law to require that job applicants who have not previously been employed by the Board of Education, enter into individual teacher contracts without regard to the status of collective bargaining negotiations. I would make this exception to the general rule on the basis of the pervading necessity of individual contracts in order that prospective new employees will be assured of jobs, and in order that boards of education will be able to effectively recruit new teachers.

The trial examiner consequently recommended that the Gibraltar district be ordered to cease refusing to bargain by demanding signed individual contracts during collective negotiation, cease discriminating against nonsigners by withholding benefits, and make the nonsigners whole for benefits coercively denied. In adopting the recommendations, the MERC explained the rationales underlying its divergent rulings in Bullock Creek and the instant case:

> In Bullock Creek . . . we held that a school board requirement that teachers sign individual contracts between the school board and each teacher did not breach . . . PERA. . . . We said: "The enactment of PERA does not . . . affect a merger of the two sections [PERA and the School Code]." We [disagreed] with the Trial Examiner's approval . . . that "the traditional teacher contract contemplated by . . . the School Code, merged into the collective bargaining process wherever teachers [exercised] their PERA rights to designate a bargaining agent."
> The individual contracts sought by the Bullock Creek School Board were part of normal continuing hiring practices of the school district. The Bullock Creek individual contracts were those contemplated by [the] School Code. . . . Here, however, the Gibraltar School Board's attempt to secure individual contracts was part of a policy and program to discriminate between groups of teachers. Those who signed individual contracts were assured of their fringe benefits; those who refused were not.
> The submission of the contracts by the Gibraltar School District in the context disclosed by the evidence is not the type of individual contracts contemplated by [the] School Code.

While the Federation sought costs of the litigation and damages for alleged injuries, the MERC held it was not empowered to make such awards. And when the district argued that it could not comply with the "make whole" order, the MERC ruled that the case would be reassigned to a trial examiner if the parties could not agree upon the amount due teachers who were deprived of fringe benefits.

As to the memorandum prohibiting classroom discussion of the strike and the allegation that one teacher was fired for such discussion, the trial examiner determined that "if the right of free speech concerning labor affairs can be curtailed during working time, then it certainly can be prohibited during a classroom situation." He accordingly concluded that the district had a right to attempt to remove students from the labor-management dispute, and that the teachers had no right under the PERA to involve students in the controversy. (Gibraltar School District and Iris Osinski, et al., and Gibraltar Federation of Teachers, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, April 2, 1970.)

• In a previously reported case (NRD, 6-70, 12), a Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission trial examiner recommended that the Elmbrook School District be ordered to cease requiring signed individual contracts of local teachers when those contracts contained negotiable salary items and did not specify that such items would be superseded by any subsequent collective agreement negotiated by the Elmbrook Education Association. Such activity on the part of the district "impedes and has a debilitating effect on the right of teachers to organize and be represented in collective negotiations," according to the examiner.

NEW JERSEY

REPRESENTATION ELECTION SHALL NOT BE CONDUCTED BEFORE EXPIRATION OF INITIAL AGREEMENT

The New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) ruled untimely an election petition filed by Teamsters Local Union 676, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, in finding that no election can be conducted until the expiration of an initial agreement, even though the statutory one-year recognition bar is effective only for that portion of a year needed to reach an initial agreement.

Pertinent sections of the PERC's rules and regulations upon which the decision hinged include:

> 19:11-15(b) Where there is a certified or recognized representative, a petition will not be considered as timely filed if during the preceding twelve (12) months an employee organization has been certified . . . as the majority representative of employees in an appropriate unit or an employee organization has been granted recognition by a public employer pursuant to section 19:11-14.
> (c) No election shall be conducted within 12 months after the effective date of an agreement provided such agreement is for a period of 12 months or more.
> (d) During the period of an existing written agreement. . . a petition for certification of public employee representative or a petition for decertification of public employee representative involving those employees normally will not be considered timely filed unless the petition is filed not less than 120 days and not more than 150 days before the last date, if any, for budget submission of the public employer immediately preceding the expiration or renewal date of such agreement or two (2) years from the effective date of the agreement, whichever is earlier. . . .

When Local 676 sought recognition as exclusive representative for certain employees of the Deptford Township Board of Education, the board refused to recognize the union on grounds that the employees already were represented by another employee organization. Interpretation and application of Section 19:11-15 of the PERC's rules and regulations additionally were disputed.

The PERC pointed out that the one-year recognition bar provided in subsection (b) allows an employer and an employee organization ample time in which to reach an initial agreement. However, if such an agreement is reached in less than a year's time, whatever portion of the one-year immunity remaining is extinguished, since the reason for it no longer exists. Subsection (d) thereafter applies, and the affected employees may seek representation or choose a different representative by filing a petition.

Since the union's petition was filed within one year of the recognition of the other employee organization, the PERC held that > the timeliness of the instant petition . . . was determined by sub-section (d) rather than (b).

> Accordingly, Section 19:11-15(c) of the Rules was given effect, since it forbids the conduct of an election within the first twelve months of the effective term of an agreement. Consequently, no election could be conducted until after the expiration date of the initial agreement between the employer and the employee association.

Negotiation Notes

DELAWARE

ATTORNEY GENERAL SAYS TWO-YEAR PUBLIC SCHOOL AGREEMENTS ARE MANDATORY

An opinion issued by the office of the Delaware attorney general on July 7, 1970, elaborated upon the two-year agreement provision contained in the state's public-school employee bargaining statute. Specifically, the attorney general held that Section 4008(d) of the statute > makes it quite clear that once an agreement is reached, it shall be for a minimum period of two years from its effective date and such agreement shall not be renegotiated prior to the second anniversary of its effective date.

> In other words the [board of education of a school district and the exclusive negotiating representative of the certified nonadministrative employees of that district] are free at any time to negotiate regarding a new agreement; they may also confer at any time with respect to the matters of [salaries, employee benefits, and working conditions]; but once an agreement has been reached it must be for a period of at least two years and negotiations concerned with its terms may not be reopened during the two-year period beginning as of its effective date.

REQUIREMENT THAT EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATIONS NOT "ASSERT" THE RIGHT TO STRIKE DECLARED CONSTITUTIONAL

The New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, upheld the constitutionality of a portion of the Taylor Law and a rule of the New York City Office of Collective Bargaining which require an employee organization seeking certification as exclusive bargaining representative to affirm that it does not "assert" the right to strike. While finding "undoubted points of similarity" between the instant case and that of National Association of Letter Carriers v. Blount (NRD, 12-69, 3), the court held that the federal case is "not necessarily controlling" of the instant case, because the statute and rule under attack here cannot be construed to infringe upon First Amendment rights, and do not produce a substantial "chilling effect" on free expression.

Section 207(3)(b) of the Taylor Law provides in part that when resolving representation status disputes the New York Public Employment Relations Board shall "certify or recognize an employee organization upon . . . the affirmation by such organization that it does not assert the right to strike against any government, to assist or participate in any such strike, or to impose an obligation to conduct, assist or participate in such a strike." Rule 2.17(b) of the Office of Collective Bargaining makes the filing of such an affirmation "a condition precedent to certification of a public employee organization as exclusive bargaining representative."

In an order-judgment rendered on December 19, 1968, the New York County Supreme Court at Special Term granted a motion by plaintiff (president of Local 371, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO) for summary judgment to the extent of declaring the statute and rule unconstitutional "insofar as they inhibit or prevent the open discussion and advocacy of lawful change." When plaintiff moved to modify that order on grounds that it "was ambiguous and did not clearly reflect the decision of the court," the court issued an April 22, 1969, order-judgment prohibiting the New York City Office of Collective Bargaining (defendant in the case) "from requiring from the plaintiff an affirmation that it does not assert the right to strike against any government, to assist or participate in any such strike, or to impose an obligation to conduct, assist or participate in such a strike." An appeal of that order was dismissed on August 28, 1969.

During the present appeal, the city argued that the affirmation requirement is constitutional in light of the stated purpose of the Taylor Law, while plaintiff contended that the requirement violates rights of free speech under the state and federal constitutions. In construing the statute, the court explained that > the question, boldly stated, is whether the public employer may reasonably require the employee organization to state as true, or to declare or maintain . . . that it has no right to do that which is declared illegal or prohibited by law, i.e., strike against or assist in a strike against the public employer.

[Plaintiff] contends that the section in question prohibits even advocacy of change, or a declaration that employees have the right to strike, and additionally is vague. Attention is directed to National Association of Letter Carriers v. Blount . . . where a three-judge federal district court declared challenged statutory provisions and an implementing oath unconstitutional. In that case the attacked portions of the statute provided that an individual may not accept or hold a governmental position if he asserted the right to strike or was a member of an organization so asserting such right. The oath similarly bound the individual. . . . Here the problem is not job acquisition or retention, but certification with its attendant benefits. The whole scheme of the statute is for the protection of the public, assuring the orderly operation of the functions of government and the development of harmonious relations between public employer and employee. Certainly the condition imposed is reasonable for the benefits conferred, and is reasonably calculated to achieve the ultimate desired end.

Finding the affirmation requirement "neither burdensome or unreasonable," the high court reversed the April 22 order-judgment of the lower court, declared both the statute and the rule constitutional, and granted defendants' motion for summary judgment.

AGENCY SHOP CONTRARY TO STATE CONSTITUTION

A municipal agency shop clause was declared invalid by the Summit County Court of Common Pleas on grounds that it violated the Ohio state constitution and constituted "a denial of equal protection of the law." While finding "nothing illegal about policy statements or similar informal expressions of attitude by public officials," the court held that "to the extent . . . 'agreements' purport to bind the city or to control civil service employees they are invalid."

The contested clause, contained in an agreement between the Civil Service Personnel Association, Local 1360, and the city of Akron provided that new employees who chose not to join the union were subject to mandatory check-off of a sum equal to union membership dues. The provision did not apply to employees who were not union members at the time the agreement was signed.

During litigation, the Akron mayor (defendant in the case) argued that the agreement was a private contract between himself and the union and did not, therefore, bind the city. The union, however, asserted that the agreement bound the city and was enforceable because the mayor was acting as chief executive officer of the city when he signed it. The court found that "a mayor has no more right to privately agree to fire a civil service employee because he will not pay money to a particular union than he does to fire a civil service employee because he will not contribute to a particular political party. Therefore, to the extent the subject 'agreement' purports to do so [it] is invalid." In addition, the court determined that no city is authorized to enter into an agency shop agreement because the mandatory dues checkoff of persons who have not consented in writing is prohibited by the statutes of Ohio. . . . The fact that the checkoff is for an amount equal to the dues rather than for dues per se is a distinction without a difference.

The constitution of Ohio provides that appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the counties, and the cities shall be according to merit and fitness. . . . There is no apparent relationship between the payment of dues to a union, and merit and fitness. If a city may threaten to discharge employees in order to extract dues from an unwilling employee for a particular interest group, there is no limit to the abuse that could follow.

The unequal treatment of nonunion members before and after the date of signing of the agreement is a denial of equal protection of the law.

PENNSYLVANIA

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE BARGAINING STATUTE ENACTED

A bill mandating professional negotiation, permitting public employee strikes under specific circumstances, and providing amnesty for any public employees against whom actions are pending was signed into law by the Pennsylvania governor on July 23, 1970. Effective October 21, the Pennsylvania Public Employee Relations Act grants public employees the right to "organize, form, join or assist in employe organizations or . . . engage in lawful concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid and protection or . . . bargain collectively through representatives of their own free choice and . . . refrain from any or all such activities."

"Public employer" is defined by the statute as all state and political subdivisions, including school districts. A public employee is "any individual employed by a public employer," except elected officials, management level employees, confidential employees, policemen, and firemen. According to the statute, "collective bargaining is the performance of the mutual obligation of the public employer and the representative of the public employes to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement . . . and the execution of a written contract . . . [although] such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of a concession." Public employers are not required to negotiate "matters of managerial policy," and are mandated only to "meet and discuss" with first level supervisors (defined as "the lowest level at which an employe functions as a supervisor") or their representatives.

Any employee organization seeking certification as exclusive bargaining representative by the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board (PLRB) must request the public employer's consent to an election and indicate a 30 percent showing of interest among employees in an appropriate bargaining unit. The parties then jointly must petition the PLRB for an election. Decertification petitions also must be supported by a 30 percent showing of interest. The statute specifies that "any employe representatives in existence on January 1, 1970, shall so continue without the requirement of an election and certification until such time as a question concerning representation is appropriately raised. . .; or until the board would find the unit not to be appropriate."

For purposes of unit determination, the PLRB shall take into consideration the employees' "identifiable community of interest and . . . the effects of over-fragmentization." A unit shall not be appropriate if it includes both professional and nonprofessional employees, "unless a majority of such professional employees vote for inclusion in such unit." In addition, the statute does not permit first level supervisory employees to be included in any other public employee units, although such personnel may form their own "separate homogenous units." In instances where the state is the employer, the statute holds that multi-unit bargaining shall not be prohibited.

To be certified as exclusive representative, an employee organization must receive a majority of the valid ballots cast in an election which also provides the employees voting a choice of "no representative." If no choice on the ballot receives a majority, the PLRC shall conduct a runoff election and certify the organization winning that election. Rules and regulations guiding the conduct of representation elections are to be developed by the PLRC.

Election bars will be effective "in any appropriate bargaining unit within which in the preceding twelve-month period an election shall have been held [or] during the term of any lawful collective bargaining agreement . . . [although this latter] restriction shall not apply to that period of time covered by any . . . agreement which exceeds three years." Petitions for representation elections must be filed with the PLRC no sooner than 90 days nor later than 60 days before the expiration date of an agreement "or after the expiration date until such time as a new written agreement has been entered into."

In the event of a contract negotiation impasse, the parties voluntarily may submit to mediation if no agreement is reached within 21 days after the commencement of negotiation. However, mediation is mandated by the statute no later than 150 days prior to the "budget submission date" established by law or an employer's practices. A refusal to submit to mediation constitutes a refusal to bargain in good faith under the statute and may be restrained as an unfair labor practice. If mediation is unsuccessful, the PLRB at its discretion may appoint a fact-finding panel of one to three members empowered to make findings of fact and recommendations to the parties; such findings are to be published if the parties do not accept the panel's recommendations.

Public employee strikes are prohibited "during the pendency of collective bargaining procedures" established by the statute, but once those procedures have been "utilized and exhausted, [a strike] shall not be prohibited unless or until [it] creates a clear and present danger or threat to the health, safety or welfare of the public." The statute stipulates that "an unfair practice by a public employer shall not be a defense to a prohibited strike." If a public employee or employee organization willfully disobeys a court order, the punishment for contempt may be by fine or imprisonment. In addition, no public employee "shall be entitled to pay or compensation from the public employer for the period engaged in any strike."

Other portions of the act outline additional duties and powers of the PLRC, enumerate unfair labor practices and appropriate remedies, stipulate that maintenance of membership and dues deductions are proper subjects for negotiation, and mandate final and binding grievance arbitration. Section 2201 of the statute, which repeals a previous law prohibiting public employee strikes, renders null and void "any penalties or other limitations currently in force or presently pending against any public employees."

NONTENURE TEACHER MAY NOT BE ARBITRARILY DISMISSED

A May 20, 1970, opinion of the Rhode Island Commissioner of Education repudiated the concept that "a school committee may act in an arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable manner with impunity in the termination of a teacher's contract." In response to an appeal entered by a nontenure teacher whose contract was terminated without a statement of charges or a hearing, the commissioner rejected any distinction between dismissal during the term of a contract and nonrenewal of a contract, explaining:

> A teacher in the public schools qualifies for his position only after having met standards established by the State which standards require years of professional preparation. Dismissal from his position, whether it be during a school year or at the end of a school year can mean the end of his professional career. Thus it is our opinion that simple justice as provided not only by the laws of this State but by the Constitution of the United States demands that he know the cause for dismissal or nonrenewal of contract and have an opportunity to be heard on it.

The matter before the commissioner was brought by a nontenure teacher who had been employed continuously by the Smithfield School Committee since September 1967, but was informed on February 13, 1970, that the committee had voted not to renew his contract for the 1970-71 school year. Although the teacher requested a statement of the charges against him and a hearing on the decision not to renew, his request was denied by the committee in a letter dated March 19.

According to the commissioner, Rhode Island law provides that a "school committee of any town may, on reasonable notice and hearing of such teacher, dismiss any teacher for refusal to conform to the regulations by them made, or for other just cause" (Section 16-12-6, General Laws, 1956, as amended). But no teacher shall be dismissed "unless he has received a written copy of the charge or charges against him not less than thirty (30) days before the meeting at which such charge or charges are to be considered, and unless the teacher if he so requests it has been given a hearing before said school committee, and unless the charge or charges has or have been admitted or substantiated" (Section 16-12-6, General Laws, 1956, as amended). Moreover, the commissioner noted that "a teacher who has given evidence of satisfactory teaching service for three successive years shall not be dismissed except for good and just cause" (Section 16-13-3, General Laws, 1956, as amended).

While the school committee contended that only tenure teachers are entitled to a hearing and statement of charges under Section 16-13-3 and that the statutory procedure for dismissal applies only to dismissals during a school year, the commissioner rejected both arguments:

> We believe that a "dismissal during a school year" and a "decision not to renew a contract for the ensuing year" are in each instance in fact a dismissal . . . and that the only difference between the two is the point in time at which the termination of service occurs. Thus, it is our opinion that . . . the appellant is entitled to a statement of the charge or charges and a hearing before the school committee as he has requested.
> Moreover, it is our opinion that the due process provision of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States . . . guarantees him the right to a statement of the charge or charges and hearing before the school committee notwithstanding the omission of the provision for this in Section 16-13-2 of the General Laws. The provision in Section 16-13-3 of the General Laws which states that a teacher who has acquired tenure shall not be dismissed without good and just cause should not be construed to imply that a teacher who has not acquired tenure may be dismissed without cause.

The commissioner accordingly sustained the teacher's appeal, and directed the school committee to give him a statement of the charges against him and a hearing on the matter.

AN ANALYSIS OF NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS COVERING PUPIL PROGRESS REPORTS, PROMOTION, AND OTHER PUPIL EVALUATION POLICIES

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 comprehensive classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in districts with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more indicates that 71 of these agreements (7.3 percent) have provisions pertaining to pupil progress reports, promotion, and other pupil evaluation policies. Although the 71 provisions vary in content and emphasis, four areas of concern can be identified: the methods of evaluating pupil progress, the process of reporting pupil progress, the process of resolving conflicts over pupil grades, and the procedures for passing or failing and promotion or retention.

Table 1 divides these major areas of concern into subheadings which specifically define negotiated provision content. The categories listed are not mutually exclusive since most of the provisions contain more than one feature. In addition, this analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements; it makes no attempt to cross-reference the 71 pertinent provisions with other provisions in a given agreement which may indirectly affect pupil progress reports, promotion, and policies.

[1] This figure and all succeeding percentages are based on the 65 agreements with negotiated rules and guidelines.

Of the 71 provisions analyzed, six established joint teacher/board study committees to examine current policies and recommend additions or changes. Some committees were given specific guidelines to follow in the proposed study; others were not. An example of a provision establishing a joint study committee is:

A committee will be established before November 1, 1968, to examine the present philosophy of evaluating and reporting each child's performance in this district. All levels of the professional staff will be represented on this committee. The report of this committee will be presented to the professional staff on or before April 1st, 1969. Upon acceptance of this report, the findings of this committee will be presented to the Supervising Principal and through him to the Board of Education for final action. The membership of this committee will be appointed jointly by the Supervising Principal and the President of the Association. (Albany, New York)

Evaluating and Reporting

Sixty-five of the 71 provisions contained negotiated rules and guidelines governing pupil progress reports, promotion, and policies. Of these 65 provisions, 50.8 percent concerned the methods of evaluating pupil progress, 86.2 percent dealt with the process of reporting pupil progress, 30.8 percent concerned the process of resolving conflicts over pupil grades, and 26.2 percent contained procedures for passing or failing and promoting or retaining pupils.

All provisions outlining the methods of evaluating pupil progress specified that the classroom teacher makes the initial evaluation. Mention of the evaluation system to be used was found in three provisions; such mention included an explanation of the numerical marking system and some philosophical guidelines, a reference to the school board's policy handbook, and an authorization for the principal to determine the system used.

The process of reporting pupil progress was the most commonly negotiated area of concern. Procedures specifically mentioned varied from stipulations as to types of forms, grading periods, and the posting of records, to provision for special conferences and interim reports. Although only a small percentage of the provisions specified the form for reporting, the majority implied that some type of record, account, or report card was used. All pertinent provisions designated the teacher as the person responsible for keeping cumulative pupil records.

Thirty-three of the 34 provisions mentioning the person who fills in pupil progress reports delegated that responsibility to the teacher; one provision stipulated that the teacher was not to perform this task.* Of the provisions allowing teachers time off for grading, one provided the daily conference period for that purpose, and the other five allowed teachers one to five days of released time throughout the year for making end-of-term evaluations.

While the provisions concerning marking periods varied, most specified the initial and terminal dates of the marking periods, or the number of marking periods per year. Three of those provisions referred to district policies or stated that a joint study committee was to review policy on marking periods.

Provisions dealing with the time at which teachers were to submit pupil evaluations variously specified the end of a marking period (three provisions), certain times during a marking period at which interim progress reports were due (two provisions), a date after the end of a marking period (two provisions), and only once per marking period (one provision). A few provisions mentioned the times or manner in which pupil progress reports were to be issued to and returned by pupils and their parents.

Sample provisions concerning the procedures for evaluating and reporting pupil progress are reprinted below:

The school year is divided into four marking periods. Two report card marks and the examination mark which counts not more than 25% constitute the semester mark. The average of the semester marks will produce the year mark for any year course.

Report cards will be marked in the following manner: Students will be given their report cards during the homeroom period on Wednesday following the close of the marking period. They will take the cards to each class and teachers will collect and mark them during each class period. They will be taken home by the students and returned to homeroom teachers by 8:00 A.M. on the following Friday. Teachers will arrange them alphabetically and send them to the office during homeroom Friday together with a list of unreturned cards, made out on the proper form.

*Other contract provisions covering items such as nonclassroom duties and secretarial or clerical assistance also may contain references to the marking of pupil progress reports.

The Thomaston High School system of marking is as follows:

A+	95 - 100	Excellent	B+	85 - 89	Above Average
A	90 - 94		B	80 - 84
C+	75 - 79	Average	D+	65 - 69	Below Average
C	70 - 74		D	60 - 64
F+	55 - 59	Failure
F	Below 55

A numeral next to the letter grade indicates a measure of effort—interpreted as follows:

1 = Excellent 2 = Average 3 = Unsatisfactory

The mark of "C" is one which will most commonly be given since it represents the middle or "average" group. This mark should be understood as wholly "respectable", representing expected achievement for the class in which the pupil is enrolled. The "C" grade is the point of reference to gain the best perspective of the range of other marks. "B" is above average, "D" is below average, "A" is excellent, and "F" is failure.

At any time during the marking period, teachers will make out notices to parents/guardians for all students whose work is below their ability. Requests for conferences by parents of failing students should be arranged by the Guidance Office.

It is the opinion of the administration that those who try should be given ample encouragement and those who will not try should be failed. It should, with the proper motivation and adequate study conditions plus a reasonable effort and some inherent intelligence, be possible for every student to get a passing mark. A teacher should fail those who are obviously lazy or who have the ability and refuse to use that inherent intelligence. "Give a break" to the student who tries and can't quite make it. You can always fail such a student if he lets down but a very low mark is often the end for those students.

"B" or better in any subject in grades nine through twelve will qualify a student for college certification in that subject. Although "B" may seem to be rather a high grade for college certification, the experience of Thomaston school administrators throughout the past three decades shows that this minimum mark provides a reasonable guarantee of successful college work.

The Superintendent or Principal may recommend a student to college when the mark of that student is below "B" in certain subjects. The certification mark, however, represents the school's confidence of ability to do college work.

The sole responsibility for grading pupils shall remain with the teacher based on the above system wide philosophy of marking. (Thomaston, Connecticut)

Elementary Level—At the elementary level, teachers will formally report pupil achievement to parents once per semester. The equivalent of three (3) days the first semester and two (2) days the second semester of released-time will be made available to teachers for preparing these reports and conferring with parents, except that for kindergarten teachers the released-time shall be five (5) days and four (4) days, respectively. One such equivalent day the first semester shall be reserved for preparation. No other responsibilities shall be assigned during such released-time periods. Such periods, with respect to other Personnel, shall be reserved for meetings approved by the Office of Instruction, planning and preparation, or administrative work.

Secondary Level—At the secondary level, teachers will report to parents pupil achievement two (2) times each semester, and will provide additional reports at two (2) scheduled interim periods per semester for all students whose achievement is not satisfactory. (Ann Arbor, Michigan)

All report cards in all secondary schools shall be placed on data processing and formalized so that parents do not have to return duplicates. (Niagara Falls, New York)

A committee composed of two (2) secondary school principals selected by the Superintendent of Schools and two (2) secondary school teachers selected by the Association has recommended that four report periods per year with four interim reports, if necessary, are appropriate for reporting secondary school pupil progress to parents. This recommendation has been approved by the Superintendent of Schools and adopted by the Board of Education for the school year beginning September 1968. There shall be a review of this new system which has been instituted after one year's experience. (Rochester, New York)

Grading Conflicts

Twenty provisions provided various methods for resolving conflicts about grades assigned to a student. In 11 provisions review or change of a pupil's grades were provided under conditions such as a principal's challenge to a teacher's grades if he disagrees with the teacher or finds evidence of questionable judgment, evidence of error or failure of the teacher to meet professional standards, or the surfacing of new factors influencing a student's performance. Some provisions stated that grades were not to be changed, or that they would be changed only under unusual circumstances.

Of the 12 agreements outlining procedures to be followed in reviewing a student's grades, nine indicated that the teacher involved consults with the administrator in charge, two called for a review by the representative organization building committee, and the remaining provision designated a joint review committee. Teacher involvement in the process of reviewing or changing a challenged grade varied among the 12 provisions from consultation about the change, consent to the change, or participation on the review committee, to initiation of a request for a grade change, or involvement in all final grading decisions. Of the ten provisions indicating who finally resolves a grading conflict, five delegated such authority to the principal, two named the teacher involved, two designated the superintendent, and one provision specified the representative organization building committee.

After a grade is changed, two provisions stated that the teacher is to be notified of the change, and three provisions specified that the teacher is to be given reasons for the change. One clause allowed the teacher to note his disagreement with the change in the student's file, while another permitted the teacher's supervisor to file a letter of dissent. Examples of provisions containing grading conflict resolution procedures are:

The responsibility for grading pupils shall reside with the teacher. If the teacher is overruled, the teacher shall have the right to appeal to the superintendent for final determination. (Mt. Vernon, New York)

Any mark rendered by a teacher concerning the work of a student is the record of the teacher's evaluated judgment of the student's performance. The teacher shall be considered the final evaluator of the work of his student and the integrity of the teacher in rendering marks to the student shall be inviolate. The mark given by a teacher shall not be changed by any other person and no minimum nor maximum limitation shall be required on the number of students of the teacher who pass or fail. . . . (Wyandanch, New York)

The grade entered into the pupil's record by the teacher represents his evaluative judgment. The teacher shall be considered to be expert in evaluating the work of the student and his integrity in grading the pupil shall be respected. The grade given by the teacher shall not be changed by another person, except as follows:

In cases where differences of opinions arise out of the possibility of changing a student's grade, the case shall be submitted to a special "grades committee" consisting of the principal, assistant superintendent from the area involved, the teacher involved, and the Chairman of the Educational Policy Committee of the Providence Teachers Union. In the event the problem cannot be resolved by this special committee, the case will be submitted to the Superintendent for a final decision. (Providence, Rhode Island)

Passing or Failing, Promoting or Retaining

Procedures and guidelines for either passing or failing pupils in a subject or promoting or retaining them in a grade were given in 17 provisions. Nine of these stipulated that a pupil's parents are to be informed by some unspecified means when the student is in danger of failing or of being retained. Eight other provisions stipulated that parents be informed by means of conferences or interim reports. The five provisions containing rules for passing or failing pupils placed no limitations on the number of students a teacher may pass or fail. Of the three provisions specifying rules for the promotion or retention of pupils, two stated that such action is solely the teacher's responsibility, and one contained guidelines for retention in grade and promotion to a higher grade. Two examples of such provisions follow:

The teacher shall at all times regularly and frequently inform parents of the standing of children whose work is unsatisfactory or who are not meeting the standards for promotion or who are in danger of being retained or demoted subject to the established standards of the schools. (Danbury, Connecticut)

I. The following procedures shall be followed in order to fulfill the criteria of the Elementary Grade Placement Policy.

1. During February, after the second report card, a Pupil Evaluation Sheet should be completed in duplicate by the teacher for each child who appears to be a possible candidate for retention. Both copies should then be turned in to the Elementary Principal's office. The parents will be notified by the Elementary Principal that retention is a possibility and a conference will be arranged.

2. A conference will be scheduled with each teacher who submits evaluation forms to discuss the individual child and to determine what help can be given to the child.

3. After the third report card period, the Pupil Evaluation Sheets will be returned to the teacher for re-evaluation. These will be returned to the Elementary Principal within one week, and another conference held. If it then appears that retaining a child at his present grade level will best serve the continuous growth of the child, parents will be contacted immediately. If possible a conference will be arranged.

4. Whether or not a child is retained, one copy of the Pupil Evaluation Sheet will be filed in the child's folder. The other copy will remain with the Elementary Principal.

5. Although the teacher's recommendations have priority in the decision to be made, once the decision is made, the responsibility for the decision rests upon the school.

II. These procedures shall be followed in order to fulfill the criteria for Secondary Grade Placement Policy.

1. Promotion or retention in grade of pupils in seventh and eighth grades shall be determined by the teachers meeting with the high school principal. A preliminary retention list will be prepared at a May meeting. This list will be reviewed and a final retention list completed after final examinations. The effort made by any pupil during the year will weigh heavily in the decision to promote or retain pupils with failing marks.

2. No pupil shall be retained in seventh and eighth grade more than once.
3. The passing mark for all subjects in seventh and eighth grades shall be 75 and 65 in grades nine through twelve.
4. No pupil shall be compelled to take any required high school subject more than two years but no credit toward graduation shall be allowed for subjects not passed. (Moriah, New York)

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, JULY 1970

Data published by the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the July 1970 Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure rose 0.4 percent above the previous month to 135.7 (1957-59=100). July was the third month in which the percent change in the CPI registered 0.4 percent. The July increase put the all-items index 5.9 percent above a year ago. Higher food and services prices—particularly household, transportation, and medical care services—were responsible for most of the July increase, while a slowdown was evidenced in the advance of prices of commodities other than food. An estimated 70,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases resulting from the July CPI. BLS also reported that the purchasing power of the consumer dollar stood at 73.7 cents in that month, according to its average buying power in 1957-59.

The CPI is designed to measure "average changes in prices of goods and services usually bought by urban wage earners and clerical workers, both families and single persons living alone." Prices of some 400 items which represent the price movements of all goods and services purchased by wage earners and clerical workers regularly are obtained in urban portions of 39 Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas (SMSA's) and 17 selected small cities. Price changes used in calculating the CPI are averaged and then weighted according to their importance in spending. In the total index, all SMSA and city data are combined and weighted on the basis of the 1960 populations of SMSA's and the cities they represent. Index numbers are computed on the base 1957-59=100, and the CPI is rounded to one decimal point.

The following tables provide a comparative study of the CPI all-items index for 25 selected SMSA's or cities from 1960 to 1969 (Table 1), and for the first seven months of 1970 (Table 2).

SELECTED TEACHER ASSISTANCE PROVISIONS FOUND IN COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS

Recent teacher/school board negotiation agreements illustrate a trend toward the inclusion of clauses providing teacher assistance in the form of instructional aids and/or additional personnel who assist classroom teachers with noninstructional duties or relieve them of such. Of the 978 comprehensive agreements surveyed in 1968-69 by the NEA Research Division, 477 (48.8 percent) contained such a provision. While many agreements may stipulate the types of noninstructional duties a teacher shall not be required to perform, provisions of this nature are not reported or discussed here.

Some negotiated teacher assistance provisions establish committees to study the feasibility of hiring additional personnel to personally aid the classroom teacher, or allocating funds for the purchase of instructional aids and materials to be used by teachers and/or pupils.

Additional personnel hired may be delegated both pupil supervision and clerical duties which relieve the classroom teacher of certain nonclassroom or noninstructional tasks. Pupil supervision assignments include the supervision of lunchroom or recess activities, study hall supervision, chaperoning student activities and field trips, classroom housekeeping, corridor duty, and overseeing the loading and unloading of school buses. Aides performing clerical and secretarial duties personally assist the classroom teacher by duplicating or reproducing tests or teaching materials, taking attendance, entering and averaging pupil grades, collecting money for noneducational purposes, distributing and collecting textbooks and other classroom materials, and keeping general classroom records.

Instructional aids provided in teacher assistance clauses include audiovisual materials, reference facilities, laboratory equipment, duplicating equipment, and provision for the purchase of specialized or difficult to obtain materials or equipment.

Of the 477 comprehensive agreements for 1968-69 containing teacher assistance provisions, 161 (33.8 percent) specifically negotiated pupil supervision assistance, 38 (8.0 percent) negotiated only clerical assistance, 132 (27.7 percent) provided for instructional aids, and 146 (30.6 percent) provided for various combinations of pupil supervision assistance, clerical assistance, or instructional aids. Table 1 provides a state-by-state breakdown of the types of items negotiated in the 477 teacher assistance provisions analyzed:

A 1967 teacher opinion poll conducted by the NEA Research Division revealed that almost 1 in 5 public school teachers (19 percent) has assistance from a teacher aide. Of these, 14 percent share the services of one or more aides with other teachers; 5 percent have one or more aides of their own. More than twice as many elementary school teachers (20 percent) as secondary school teachers (9 percent) said they were assisted by aides they shared with other teachers . . . . Small school systems as well as large ones use teacher aides. No significant difference exists between the proportion of teachers in small systems and the proportion in large systems who reported that they had aides.[1]

In May 1970 an arbitrator found that the Binghamton (N.Y.) education board violated a contractual obligation to hire paraprofessionals as soon as possible in order to implement a "pilot program," because the board delayed three months and then hired only four or five paraprofessionals for elementary-school lunchrooms and two for high-school study halls. Civil service regulations hampered implementation of the program, but the arbitrator found it doubtful that the board needed to delay three months before hiring. Moreover, the arbitrator held that the delay and the limited number of personnel hired did not satisfy the contractual requirement for a "pilot" program: "If a 'trial' or 'pilot' operation is to be such it must be conducted under conditions which resemble the pattern of that which is being tested." He accordingly directed the board to hire 22 elementary-school paraprofessionals and four secondary-school paraprofessionals by October 15, 1970, unless the board and the Binghamton Teachers Association agree upon another paraprofessional program provision for inclusion in their 1970-71 contract.

Selected teacher assistance provisions taken from comprehensive agreements are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Scottsdale Public Schools, Scottsdale, Arizona
Article XI, Section 10–Personnel Policies and Procedures–Teacher-Aides and Clerks

The primary responsibility of a classroom teacher is to organize and guide instruction for students. Clerical and semi-clerical functions are necessary to the instructional program, but detract from instructional time when performed by the classroom teacher.

Therefore, it is agreed to employ within the limits of funds deemed available, sufficient instructional and noninstructional aides and clerks to perform clerical, semi-clerical, and other duties such as noon supervision, collection of funds, delivering and sorting educational supplies, and other such similar duties.

More complete utilization of teacher-aides and clerks will be considered in the study of the feasibility of differentiated staffing.

School District No. 1, Denver, Colorado
Article 13–Instructional Materials

The Board will endeavor to provide sufficient instructional materials and equipment, within budgetary limitations, to insure that each pupil and teacher will have the best possible access to them. Teachers agree that these materials will be used wisely.

Each school will be allocated a revolving fund through their budget account to be used for the purchase of instructional materials that are not otherwise readily obtainable by the teachers. Each teacher may request of the principal authorization for such items as specially needed in his class.

The Board and Association agree that matters concerning instructional materials need continuing study and investigation. This will be taken up by the Professional Council.

The Board will make every effort within budgetary limitations to make sure all instructional equipment is in working condition and up to date.

Derby Public Schools, Derby, Connecticut
Article XII, Section L–Working Conditions–Teacher Aides

The Board and the League agree that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and his energy should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. The Board and the League recognize that teacher aides and part time clerical employees are useful and necessary in order to implement this principle. Therefore, the Board agrees that, subject to the availability of competent personnel and adequate Federal Aid Funds or other funds, it will employ:

1. Teacher aides sufficient in number to relieve teachers in Kindergarten through 8th grade who have more than thirty (30) students within the class. A full-time aide will be assigned to a class when the enrollment reaches 35 students. The responsibilities of the teacher aide will include and not be limited to the following: non-teaching and instructional assignments, supervision of recess period, playground activities, corridors, lunch duties, buses, collecting money for non-educational purposes, taking attendance, entering marks in marking books, averaging academic marks.

2. Part-time clerical personnel, 1 for every 8 teachers, to assist with duplication of instructional material, care of registers and their tabulation, and similar functions which do not require professional judgment.
3. Aides will be assigned to the Derby High School and Derby Middle School to assist with supervision of the cafeteria, study halls and library. Additional clerical help will be provided in all schools to eliminate teachers collecting monies and to reduce other non-instructional duties.

Niles Township High School District, Skokie, Illinois Article XXII–Clerical Assistance; Article XXIII–Lay Assistance

(Article XXII) Section 1. Clerical Assistance. Clerk-typists shall be assigned to each division at the ratio of one for every thirty (30) classroom teachers or major fraction thereof to provide clerical assistance for teachers. The assignment of such clerks shall be in consultation with the Divisional Principal and Department Chairmen. All the time of these clerks shall be assigned to clerical assistance for classroom teachers.

Section 2. Clerical Assistance–Counseling Department. One additional clerk shall be assigned to each guidance department.

(Article XXIII) Section 1. Lay Assistance. The present lay assistance provided the English Department shall be continued. That part of this assistance that is not used by the English Department shall be made available to other departments, as determined in consultation with the Departmental Chairmen and teachers.

Section 2. Lay Assistance–Science. Full effort shall be made to employ one competent lay assistant for each Science Department.

Bloomfield Hills School District, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan
Article IX, Section A(6)(7)(8)–Teaching Conditions–Physical Environment

The Board recognizes that appropriate texts, library reference facilities, maps and globes, laboratory equipment, audio-visual equipment, art supplies, athletic equipment, current periodicals, standard tests questionnaires, and classroom facilities and materials, and similar materials are necessary for the fullest professional performances. Teachers will be consulted from time to time for the purpose of improving the selection and use of such educational tools and the Board undertakes to give careful consideration to any teacher or Association recommendation. The Board agrees at all times to keep the schools reasonably equipped and maintained.

The Board and the Association mutually recognize the importance of continuous use of adequate teaching reference material in maintaining a high level of professional performance. In furtherance of that recognition, and where feasible, the Board shall provide teacher reference materials in each school in the district and include all texts which are reasonably requested by the teachers of that school.

The Board agrees to make available, on a reasonable basis for the preparation, duplication, or reproduction of instructional material, its typing, duplicating, stenciling, mimeographing and reproducing equipment. Wherever possible, or practicable, as determined by the building administration, clerical personnel shall be made available for the preparation, duplication, or reproduction of written tests, work sheets, study sheets, maps, transparencies, excerpts from books, periodicals or other reference materials on the basis of equality within levels.

Brewster Central School District, Brewster, New York Article IV, Section B(8)–Conditions of Employment–School Aides

The Board and the Association acknowledge that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energies should be utilized to this end. Therefore, in order that a teacher may pursue his primary responsibility, the Board agrees to reduce the following non-teaching duties by the beginning of the school year 1968-69:

1. Bus Duty
2. Cafeteria supervision
3. Playground supervision
4. Supervision of halls

In order to study and to make recommendations for the best means of achieving the above goal, a joint School Aide Committee, composed of three representatives selected by the District Principal and three representatives selected by the Association, will be established.

Toward the accomplishment of the foregoing objectives, the number of school aides for the 1968-69 school year will be increased.

School aides are to be used for the relief of teachers and not to relieve clerical or administrative staff members of their duties.

The School Aide Committee will conduct studies and make recommendations effective September, 1969, for the relief of teachers engaged in other non-teaching duties such as:

1. Attendance clerk.
2. Collection of monies.
3. Management of records, material and equipment.
4. Study hall supervisor.
5. Typing and mimeographing.

Herricks Union Free School District No. 9, New Hyde Park, New York Article VII, Sections A, B, E—Para-Professional Assistance and Non-Teaching Duties

A. The Board agrees to employ aides in the elementary school libraries for two hours per day in Center, Denton and Searingtown schools and one hour per day in Park and Wickshire schools.

B. The Board agrees to employ sufficient aides for cafeteria duty so that only one teacher in each secondary building shall be on cafeteria duty during each lunch period. However, if after a reasonable trial period, the Principal of the Senior High School determines that one teacher per period is insufficient in the Senior High School after consultation with the Association, the number may be increased to two teachers per lunch period so that each lunch room is covered by a teacher.

E. Duplication of Report Cards—An attempt will be made so that grade reporting on the elementary level can be accomplished by the use of the district's data processing equipment in such a way as to reduce clerical work to a minimum. After one year this will be re-evaluated.

Middletown Public Schools, Middletown, Rhode Island
Article IX

Teacher aide/clerks shall be provided for all elementary schools on a ratio of at least one for every eight (8) teachers.

Joint City School District No. 1, West Allis, Wisconsin Article VII—Teacher Assistance

The Board shall, in the 1969-70 school year, employ six additional teacher aides.

Beginning September, 1970, the Board shall expand the teacher aide program by employing not less than twenty-nine additional teacher aides to be assigned in the following manner: three teacher aides in a selected elementary school, six teacher aides in a selected junior high school, six teacher aides in a selected senior high school, and one teacher aide in each of the other schools of the system.

The Superintendent shall determine job descriptions for teacher aides and shall establish an in-service training program for both teachers and teacher aides.

ARTICLE I

Public Policy

Section 101. The General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania declares that it is the public policy of this Commonwealth and the purpose of this act to promote orderly and constructive relationships between all public employers and their employes subject, however, to the paramount right of the citizens of this Commonwealth to keep inviolate the guarantees for their health, safety and welfare. Unresolved disputes between the public employer and its employes are injurious to the public and the General Assembly is therefore aware that adequate means must be established for minimizing them and providing for their resolution. Within the limitations imposed upon the governmental processes by these rights of the public at large and recognizing that harmonious relationships are required between the public employer and its employes, the General Assembly has determined that the overall policy may best be accomplished by (1) granting to public employes the right to organize and choose freely their representatives; (2) requiring public employers to negotiate and bargain with employe organizations representing public employes and to enter into written agreements evidencing the result of such bargaining; and (3) establishing procedures to provide for the protection of the rights of the public employe, the public employer and the public at large.

ARTICLE II

Short Title

Section 201. This act shall be known and may be cited as the "Public Employe Relations Act."

ARTICLE III

Definitions

Section 301. As used in this act:

(1) "Public employer" means the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, its political subdivisions including school districts and any officer, board, commission, agency, authority, or other instrumentality thereof and any non-profit organization or institution and any charitable, religious, scientific, literary, recreational, health, educational or welfare institution receiving grants or appropriations from local, state or federal governments but shall not include employers covered or presently subject to coverage under the act of June 1, 1937 (P.L. 1168), as amended, known as the "Pennsylvania Labor Relations Act," the act of July 5, 1935, Public Law 198, 74th Congress, as amended, known as the "National Labor Relations Act."

(2) "Public employe" or "employe" means any individual employed by a public employer but shall not include elected officials, appointees of the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate as required by law, management level employes, confidential employes, clergymen or other persons in a religious profession, employes or personnel at church offices or facilities when utilized primarily for religious purposes and those employes covered under the act of June 24, 1968 (Act No. 111), entitled "An act specifically authorizing collective bargaining between policemen and firemen and their public employers; providing for arbitration in order to settle disputes, and requiring compliance with collective bargaining agreements and findings of arbitrators."

(3) "Employe organization" means an organization of any kind, or any agency or employe representation committee or plan in which membership includes public employes, and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, employe-employer disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work but shall not include any organization which practices discrimination in membership because of race, color, creed, national origin or political affiliation.

(4) "Representative" means any individuals acting for public employers or employes and shall include employe organizations.

(5) "Board" means the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board.

(6) "Supervisor" means any individual having authority in the interests of the employer to hire, transfer, suspend, layoff, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward or discipline other employes or responsibly to direct them or adjust their grievances; or to substantial degree effectively recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing, the exercise of such authority is not merely routine or clerical in nature but calls for the use of independent judgment.

(7) "Professional employe" means any employe whose work: (i) is predominantly intellectual and varied in character; (ii) requires consistent exercise of discretion and judgment; (iii) requires knowledge of an advanced nature in the field of science or learning customarily acquired by specialized study in an institution of higher learning or its equivalent; and (iv) is of such character that the output or result accomplished cannot be standardized in relation to a given period of time.

(8) "Unfair practice" means any practice prohibited by Article XII of this act.

(9) "Strike" means concerted action in failing to report for duty, the wilful absence from one's position, the stoppage of work, slowdown, or the abstinence in whole or in part from the full, faithful and proper performance of the duties of employment for the purpose of inducing, influencing or coercing a change in the conditions or compensation or the rights, privileges, or obligations of employment.

(10) "Person" includes an individual, public employer, public employe, authority, commission, legal representative, labor organization, employe organization, profit or nonprofit corporation, trustee, board or association.

(11) "Membership dues deduction" means the practice of a public employer to deduct from the wages of a public employe, with his written consent, an amount for the payment of his membership dues in an employe organization, which deduction is transmitted by the public employer to the employe organization.

(12) "Budget submission date" means the date by which under the law or practice a public employer's proposed budget, or budget containing proposed expenditures applicable to such public employer is submitted to the Legislature or other similar body for final action. For the purposes of this act, the budget submission date for the Commonwealth shall be February 1 of each year and for a nonprofit organization or institution, the last day of its fiscal year.

(13) "Confidential employe" shall mean any employe who works: (i) in the personnel offices of a public employer and has access to information subject to use by the public employer in collective bargaining; or (ii) in a close continuing relationship with public officers or representatives associated with collective bargaining on behalf of the employer.

(14) "Wages" means hourly rates of pay, salaries or other forms of compensation for services rendered.

(15) "Commonwealth employe" means a public employe employed by the Commonwealth or any board, commission, agency, authority, or any other instrumentality thereof.

(16) "Management level employe" means any individual who is involved directly in the determination of policy or who responsibly directs the implementation thereof and shall include all employes above the first level of supervision.

(17) "Meet and discuss" means the obligation of a public employer upon request to meet at reasonable times and discuss recommendations submitted by representatives of public employes: Provided, That any decisions or determinations on matters so discussed shall remain with the public employer and be deemed final on any issue or issues raised.

(18) "Maintenance of membership" means that all employes who have joined an employe organization or who join the employe organization in the future must remain members for the duration of a collective bargaining agreement so providing with the proviso that any such employe or employes may resign from such employe organization during a period of fifteen days prior to the expiration of any such agreement.

(19) "First level of supervision" and "first level supervisor" means the lowest level at which an employe functions as a supervisor.

ARTICLE IV

Employe Rights

Section 401. It shall be lawful for public employes to organize, form, join or assist in employe organizations or to engage in lawful concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid and protection or to bargain collectively through representatives of their own free choice and such employes shall also have the right to refrain from any or all such activities, except as may be required pursuant to a maintenance of membership provision in a collective bargaining agreement.

ARTICLE V

Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board

Section 501. The board shall exercise those powers and perform those duties which are specifically provided for in this act. These powers and duties shall be in addition to and exercised completely independent of any powers and duties specifically granted to it by other statutory enactments.

Section 502. The board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Such rules and regulations shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the board shall prescribe.

Section 503. The board shall establish after consulting representatives of employe organizations and of public employers, panels of qualified persons broadly representative of the public to be available to serve as members of fact-finding boards.

ARTICLE VI

Representation

Section 601. Public employers may select representatives to act in their interest in any collective bargaining with representatives of public employes.

Section 602. (a) A public employer may recognize employe representatives for collective bargaining purposes, provided the parties jointly request certification by the board which shall issue such certification if it finds the unit appropriate.

(b) Any employe representatives in existence on January 1, 1970, shall so continue without the requirement of an election and certification until such time as a question concerning representation is appropriately raised under this act; or until the board would find the unit not to be appropriate after challenge by the public employer, a member of the unit or an employe organization. The appropriateness of the unit shall not be challenged until the expiration of any collective bargaining agreement in effect on the date of the passage of this act.

Section 603. (a) A public employe, a group of public employes or an employe organization may notify the public employer that thirty per cent or more of the public employes in an appropriate unit desire to be exclusively represented for collective bargaining purposes by a designated representative and request the public employer to consent to an election.

(b) If the public employer consents, the public employe, group of public employes or employe organization whichever applicable may submit in a form and manner established by the board an election request. Such request shall include a description of the unit deemed to be appropriate, the basis upon which it was determined that thirty per cent or more of the employes desired to be represented and a joinder by the public employer. The board may on the basis of the submissions order an election to be held or it may at its discretion investigate or conduct hearings to determine the validity of the matters contained in such submissions before determining whether or not an order should issue.

(c) If a public employer refuses to consent to an election, the party making the request may file a petition with the board alleging that thirty per cent or more of the public employes in an appropriate unit wish to be exclusively represented for collective bargaining purposes by a designated representative. The board shall send a copy of the petition to the public employer and provide for an appropriate hearing upon due notice. If it deems the allegations in the petition to be valid and the unit to be appropriate it shall order an election. If it finds to the contrary it may dismiss the petition or permit its amendment in accordance with procedures established by the board.

(d) If a public employer receives notification that thirty per cent or more of the public employes desire to be exclusively represented for collective bargaining purposes by a designated representative and the party giving notice does not thereafter seek an election the public employer may file a petition for the same with the board. The board shall then follow the procedures as established for petitions filed under subsection (c) of this section.

Section 604. The board shall determine the appropriateness of a unit which shall be the public employer unit or a subdivision thereof. In determining the appropriateness of the unit, the board shall:

(1) Take into consideration but shall not be limited to the following: (i) public employes must have an identifiable community of interest, and (ii) the effects of over-fragmentization.

(2) Not decide that any unit is appropriate if such unit includes both professional and nonprofessional employes, unless a majority of such professional employes vote for inclusion in such unit.

(3) Not permit guards at prisons and mental hospitals, employes directly involved with and necessary to the functioning of the courts of this Commonwealth, or any individual employed as a guard to enforce against employes and other persons, rules to protect property of the employer or to protect the safety of persons on the employer's premises to be included in any unit with other public employes, each may form separate homogenous employe organizations with the proviso that organizations of the latter designated employe group may not be affiliated with any other organization representing or including as members, persons outside of the organization's classification.

(4) Take into consideration that when the Commonwealth is the employer, it will be bargaining on a Statewide basis unless issues involve working conditions peculiar to a given governmental employment locale. This section, however, shall not be deemed to prohibit multi-unit bargaining.

(5) Not permit employes at the first level of supervision to be included with any other units of public employes but shall permit them to form their own separate homogenous units. In determining supervisory status the board may take into consideration the extent to which supervisory and nonsupervisory functions are performed.

Section 605. Representation elections shall be conducted by secret ballot at such times and places selected by the board subject to the following:

(1) The board shall give no less than ten days notice of the time and place of such election.

(2) The board shall establish rules and regulations concerning the conduct of any election including but not limited to regulations which would guarantee the secrecy of the ballot.

(3) A representative may not be certified unless it receives a majority of the valid ballots cast.

(4) The board shall include on the ballot a choice of "no representative."

(5) In an election where none of the choices on the ballot receives a majority, a run-off election shall be conducted, the ballot providing for a selection between the two choices or parties receiving the highest and the second highest number of ballots cast in the election.

(6) The board shall certify the results of said election within five working days after the final tally of votes if no charge is filed by any person alleging that an "unfair practice" existed in connection with said election. If the board has reason to believe that such allegations are valid, it shall set a time for hearing on the matter after due notice. Any such hearings shall be conducted within two weeks of the date of receipt of such charge. If the board determines that the outcome of the election was affected by the "unfair practice" charged or for any other "unfair practice" it may deem existed, it shall require corrective action and order a new election. If the board determines that no unfair practice existed or if it existed, did not affect the outcome of the election, it shall immediately certify the election results.

(7) (i) No election shall be conducted pursuant to this section in any appropriate bargaining unit within which in the preceding twelve-month period an election shall have been held nor during the term of any lawful collective bargaining agreement between a public employer and an employe representative. This restriction shall not apply to that period of time covered by any collective bargaining agreement which exceeds three years. For the purposes of this section, extensions of agreements shall not affect the expiration date of the original agreement.

(ii) Petitions for elections may be filed with the board not sooner than ninety days nor later than sixty days before the expiration date of any collective bargaining agreement or after the expiration date until such time as a new written agreement has been entered into. For the purposes of this section, extensions of agreements shall not affect the expiration date of the original agreement.

Section 606. Representatives selected by public employes in a unit appropriate for collective bargaining purpose shall be the exclusive representative of all the employes in such unit to bargain on wages, hours, terms and conditions of employment: Provided, That any individual employe or a group of employes shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer and to have them adjusted without that intervention of the bargaining representative as long as the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of a collective bargaining contract then in effect: And, provided further, That the bargaining representative has been given an opportunity to be present at such adjustment.

Section 607. If there is a duly certified representative: (i) a public employe or a group of public employes may file a petition for decertification provided it is supported by a thirty per cent showing of interest, or (ii) a public employer alleging a good faith doubt of the majority status of said representative may file a petition in accordance with the rules and regulations established by the board, subject to the provisions of clause (7) of section 605.

ARTICLE VII
Scope of Bargaining

Section 701. Collective bargaining is the performance of the mutual obligation of the public employer and the representative of the public employes to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement or any question arising thereunder and the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached but such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of a concession.

Section 702. Public employers shall not be required to bargain over matters of inherent managerial policy, which shall include but shall not be limited to such areas of discretion or policy as the functions and programs of the public employer, standards of services, its overall budget, utilization of technology, the organizational structure and selection and direction of personnel. Public employers, however, shall be required to meet and discuss on policy matters affecting wages, hours and terms and conditions of employment as well as the impact thereon upon request by public employe representatives.

Section 703. The parties to the collective bargaining process shall not effect or implement a provision in a collective bargaining agreement if the implementation of that provision would be in violation of, or inconsistent with, or in conflict with any statute or statutes enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or the provisions of municipal home rule charters.

Section 704. Public employers shall not be required to bargain with units of first level supervisors or their representatives but shall be required to meet and discuss with first level supervisors or their representatives, on matters deemed to be bargainable for other public employes covered by this act.

Section 705. Membership dues deductions and maintenance of membership are proper subjects of bargaining with the proviso that as to the latter, the payment of dues and assessments while members, may be the only requisite employment condition.

Section 706. Nothing contained in this act shall impair the employer's right to hire employes or to discharge employes for just cause consistent with existing legislation.

ARTICLE VIII

Collective Bargaining Impasse

Section 801. If after a reasonable period of negotiation, a dispute or impasse exists between the representatives of the public employer and the public employes, the parties may voluntarily submit to mediation but if no agreement is reached between the parties within twenty-one days after negotiations have commenced, but in no event later than one hundred fifty days prior to the "budget submission date," and mediation has not been utilized by the parties, both parties shall immediately, in writing, call in the service of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Mediation.

Section 802. Once mediation has commenced, it shall continue for so long as the parties have not reached an agreement. If, however, an agreement has not been reached within twenty days after mediation has commenced or in no event later than one hundred thirty days prior to the "budget submission date," the Bureau of Mediation shall notify the board of this fact. Upon receiving such notice the board may in its discretion appoint a fact-finding panel which panel may consist of either one or three members. If a panel is so designated or selected it shall hold hearings and take oral or written testimony and shall have subpoena power. If during this time the parties have not reached an agreement, the panel shall make findings of fact and recommendations:

(1) The findings of fact and recommendations shall be sent by registered mail to the board and to both parties not more than forty days after the Bureau of Mediation has notified the board as provided in the preceding paragraph.

(2) Not more than ten days after the findings and recommendations shall have been sent, the parties shall notify the board and each other whether or not they accept the recommendations of the fact-finding panel and if they do not, the panel shall publicize its findings of fact and recommendations.

(3) Not less than five days nor more than ten days after the publication of the findings of fact and recommendations, the parties shall again inform the board and each other whether or not they will accept the recommendations of the fact-finding panel.

(4) The Commonwealth shall pay one-half the cost of the fact-finding panel; the remaining one-half of the cost shall be divided equally between the parties. The board shall establish rules and regulations under which panels shall operate, including, but not limited to, compensation for panel members.

Section 803. If the representatives of either or both the public employes and the public employer refuse to submit to the procedures set forth in sections 801 and 802 of this article, such refusal shall be deemed a refusal to bargain in good faith and unfair practice charges may be filed by the submitting party or the board may on its own, issue an unfair practice complaint and conduct such hearings and issue such orders as provided for in Article XIII.

Section 804. Nothing in this article shall prevent the parties from submitting impasses to voluntary binding arbitration with the proviso the decisions of the arbitrator which would require legislative enactment to be effective shall be considered advisory only.

Section 805. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act where representatives of units of guards at prisons or mental hospitals or units of employes directly involved with and necessary to the functioning of the courts of this Commonwealth have reached an impasse in collective bargaining and mediation as required in section 801 of this article has not resolved the dispute, the impasse shall be submitted to a panel of arbitrators whose decision shall be final and binding upon both parties with the proviso that the decisions of the arbitrators which would require legislative enactment to be effective shall be considered advisory only.

Section 806. Panels of arbitrators for bargaining units referred to in section 805 of this article shall be selected in the following manner:

(1) Each party shall select one member of the panel, the two so selected shall choose the third member.

(2) If the members so selected are unable to agree upon the third member within ten days from the date of their selection, the board shall submit the names of seven persons, each party shall alternately strike one name until one shall remain. The public employer shall strike the first name. The person so remaining shall be the third member and chairman.

Section 807. The cost of the arbitrators selected under the provisions of section 806 shall be paid by the Commonwealth under rules and regulations established by the board.

ARTICLE IX

Collective Bargaining Agreement

Section 901. Once an agreement is reached between the representatives of the public employes and the public employer, the agreement shall be reduced to writing and signed by the parties. Any provisions of the contract requiring legislative action will only be effective if such legislation is enacted.

Section 902. If the provisions of the constitution or bylaws of an employe organization requires ratification of a collective bargaining agreement by its membership, only those members who belong to the bargaining unit involved shall be entitled to vote on such ratification notwithstanding such provisions.

Section 903. Arbitration of disputes or grievances arising out of the interpretation of the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement is mandatory. The procedure to be adopted is a proper subject of bargaining with the proviso that the final step shall provide for a binding decision by an arbitrator or a tri-partite board of arbitrators as the parties may agree. Any decisions of the arbitrator or arbitrators requiring legislation will only be effective if such legislation is enacted:

(1) If the parties cannot voluntarily agree upon the selection of an arbitrator, the parties shall notify the Bureau of Mediation of their inability to do so. The Bureau of Mediation shall then submit to the parties the names of seven arbitrators. Each party shall alternately strike a name until one name remains. The public employer shall strike the first name. The person remaining shall be the arbitrator.

(2) The costs of arbitration shall be shared by the parties. Fees paid to arbitrators shall be based on a schedule established by the Bureau of Mediation.

Section 904. Any provision of any collective bargaining agreement in existence on January 1, 1970 which is inconsistent with any provision of this act but not otherwise illegal shall continue valid until the expiration of such contract. The parties to such agreements may continue voluntarily to bargain on any such items after the expiration date of any such agreement and for so long as these items remain in any future agreement.

ARTICLE X

Strikes

Section 1001. Strikes by guards at prisons or mental hospitals, OR employes directly involved with and necessary to the functioning of the courts of this Commonwealth are prohibited at any time. If a strike occurs the public employer shall forth with initiate in the court of common pleas of the jurisdiction where the strike occurs, an action for appropriate equitable relief including but not limited to injunctions. If the strike involves Commonwealth employes, the chief legal officer of the public employer or the Attorney General where required by law shall institute an action for equitable relief, either in the court of common pleas of the jurisdiction where the strike has occurred or the Commonwealth Court.

Section 1002. Strikes by public employes during the pendency of collective bargaining procedures set forth in sections 801 and 802 of Article VIII are prohibited. In the event of a strike during this period the public employer shall forthwith initiate an action for the same relief and utilizing the same procedures required for prohibited strikes under section 1001.

Section 1003. If a strike by public employes occurs after the collective bargaining processes set forth in sections 801 and 802 of Article VIII of this act have been completely utilized and exhausted, it shall not be prohibited unless or until such a strike creates a clear and present danger or threat to the health, safety or welfare of the public. In such cases the public employer shall initiate, in the court of common pleas of the jurisdiction where such strike occurs, an action for equitable relief including but not limited to appropriate injunctions and shall be entitled to such relief if the court finds that the strike creates a clear and present danger or threat to the health, safety or welfare of the public. If the strike involves Commonwealth employes, the chief legal officer of the public employer or the Attorney General where required by law shall institute an action for equitable relief in the court of common pleas of the jurisdiction where the strike has occurred or the Commonwealth Court. Prior to the filing of any complaint in equity under the provisions of this section the moving party shall serve upon the defendant a copy of said complaint as provided for in the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure applicable to such actions. Hearings shall be required before relief is granted under this section and notices of the same shall be served in the manner required for the original process with a duty imposed upon the court to hold such hearings forthwith.

Section 1004. An unfair practice by a public employer shall not be a defense to a prohibited strike. Unfair practices by the employer during the collective bargaining processes shall receive priority by the board as set forth in Article XIV.

Section 1005. If a public employe refuses to comply with a lawful order of a court of competent jurisdiction issued for a violation of any of the provisions of this article the public employer shall initiate an action for contempt and if the public employe is adjudged guilty of such contempt, he shall be subject to suspension, demotion or discharge at the discretion of the public employer, provided the public employer has not exercised that discretion in violation of clauses (1), (2), (3) and (4) of subsection 1201, Article XII.

Section 1006. No public employe shall be entitled to pay or compensation from the public employer for the period engaged in any strike.

Section 1007. In the event any public employe refuses to obey an order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction for a violation of the provisions of this article, the punishment for such contempt may be by fine or by imprisonment in the prison of the county where the court is sitting or both in the discretion of the court.

Section 1008. Where an employe organization wilfully disobeys a lawful order of a court of competent jurisdiction issued for a violation of the provisions of this article, the punishment for each day that such contempt persists may be by a fine fixed in the discretion of the court.

Section 1009. In fixing the amount of the fine or imprisonment for contempt, the court shall consider all the facts and circumstances directly related to the contempt including but not limited to (i) any unfair practices committed by the public employer during the collective bargaining processes; (ii) the extent of the wilful defiance or resistance to the court's order; (iii) the impact of the strike on the health, safety or welfare of the public, and (iv) the ability of the employe organization or the employe to pay the fine imposed.

Section 1010. Nothing in this article shall prevent the parties from voluntarily requesting the court for a diminution or suspension of any fines or penalties imposed. Any requests by employe representatives for such participation by the public employer shall be subject to the requirements of "meet and discuss."

ARTICLE XI

Picketing

Section 1101. Public employes, other than those engaged in a nonprohibited strike, who refuse to cross a picket line shall be deemed to be engaged in a prohibited strike and shall be subject to the terms and conditions of Article X pertaining to prohibited strikes.

ARTICLE XII

Unfair Practices

Section 1201. (a) Public employers, their agents or representatives are prohibited from:

(1) Interfering, restraining or coercing employes in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Article IV of this act.

(2) Dominating or interfering with the formation, existence or administration of any employe organization.

(3) Discriminating in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any employe organization.

(4) Discharging or otherwise discriminating against an employe because he has signed or filed an affidavit, petition or complaint or given any information or testimony under this act.

(5) Refusing to bargain collectively in good faith with an employe representative which is the exclusive representative of employes in an appropriate unit, including but not limited to the discussing of grievances with the exclusive representative.

(6) Refusing to reduce a collective bargaining agreement to writing and sign such agreement.

(7) Violating any of the rules and regulations established by the board regulating the conduct of representation elections.

(8) Refusing to comply with the provisions of an arbitration award deemed binding under section 903 of Article IX.

(9) Refusing to comply with the requirements of "meet and discuss."

(b) Employe organizations, their agents, or representatives, or public employes are prohibited from:

(1) Restraining or coercing employes in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Article IV of this act.

(2) Restraining or coercing a public employer in the selection of his representative for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances.

(3) Refusing to bargain collectively in good faith with a public employer, if they have been designated in accordance with the provisions of this act as the exclusive representative of employes in an appropriate unit.

(4) Violating any of the rules and regulations established by the board regulating the conduct of representation elections.

(5) Refusing to reduce a collective bargaining agreement to writing and sign such agreement.

(6) Calling, instituting, maintaining or conducting a strike or boycott against any public employer or picketing any place of business of a public employer on account of any jurisdictional controversy.

(7) Engaging in, or inducing or encouraging any individual employed by any person to engage in a strike or refusal to handle goods or perform services; or threatening, coercing or restraining any person where an object thereof is to (i) force or require any public employer to cease dealing or doing business with any other person or (ii) force or require a public employer to recognize for representation purposes an employe organization not certified by the board.

(8) Refusing to comply with the provisions of an arbitration award deemed binding under section 903 of Article II.

(9) Refusing to comply with the requirements of "meet and discuss."

ARTICLE XIII

Prevention of Unfair Practices

Section 1301. The board is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair practice listed in Article III of this act. This power shall be exclusive and shall not be affected by any other means of adjustment or prevention that have been or may be established by agreement, law, or otherwise.

Section 1302. Whenever it is charged by any interested party that any person has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair practice, the board, or any member or designated agent thereof, shall have authority to issue and cause to be served upon such person a complaint, stating the charges in that respect, and containing a notice of hearing before the board or any member or designated agent thereof, at a place therein fixed, not less than five days after the serving of said complaint. Any such complaint may be amended by the board, member or agent conducting the hearing at any time prior to the issuance of an order based thereon. The person so complained of shall have the right to file an answer to the original or amended complaint and to appear in person, or otherwise, to give testimony at the place and time set in the complaint. In the discretion of a member or agent conducting the hearing or of the board, any other person may be allowed to intervene in the said proceeding and to present testimony. In any such proceeding, the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity shall be followed but shall not be controlling.

Section 1303. Testimony shall be taken at the hearing and filed with the board. The board upon notice may take further testimony or hear argument. If, upon all the testimony taken, the board shall determine that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair practice, the board shall state its findings of fact, and issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair practice, and to take such reasonable affirmative action, including reinstatement of employes, discharged in violation of Article XII of this act, with or without back pay, as will effectuate the policies of this act. Such order may further require such person to make reasonable reports, from time to time, showing the extent to which the order has been complied with. If, upon all the testimony, the board shall be of the opinion that the person or persons named in the complaint has not engaged in or is not engaging in any such unfair practice, then the board shall make its findings of fact and shall issue an order dismissing the complaint. A copy of such findings of fact, conclusions of law, and order shall be mailed to all parties to the proceedings.

Section 1304. Until a transcript of the record in a case shall have been filed in a court as hereinafter provided, the board may at any time, upon reasonable notice, and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it: Provided, That any agreement made between an employer and a bona fide employe organization, and all the provisions thereof, shall be entitled to full force and effect unless the board specifically finds that these provisions involve the commission of an unfair practice within the meaning of Article XII of this act.

Section 1305. The proceedings before the board or before any of its examiners shall be conducted with speed and dispatch. No findings shall be made on the basis of evidence relating to acts which occurred prior to the original passage of this act.

Section 1306. All cases in which complaints are actually issued by the board, shall be prosecuted before the board or its examiner, or both, by the representatives of the employe organization or party filing the charge, and, in addition thereto or in lieu thereof if the Department of Justice sees fit, by a deputy attorney general especially assigned to this type of case. No examiner shall have any other position with the government of this State or of the United States or with the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board while in the employ of the board.

ARTICLE XIV

Unfair Practices During Article VIII Procedures

Section 1401. Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Article XIII, the board upon the filing of a charge alleging the commission of an unfair labor practice committed during, or arising out of the collective bargaining procedures set forth in sections 801 and 802 of Article VIII of this act, shall be empowered to petition the court of competent jurisdiction for appropriate relief or restraining order.

Upon the filing of any such petition the board shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person and thereupon the court shall have jurisdiction to grant to the board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper.

ARTICLE XV

Judicial Review

Section 1501. The board shall except where an employe of the Commonwealth is involved have power to petition the court of common pleas of any county wherein the unfair practice in question occurred, or wherein any person charged with the commission of any unfair practice resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of such order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including the pleadings and testimony upon which such order was entered and the findings and order of the board. In the instance of the exception involving the said Commonwealth employes, the board shall file its petition in the Commonwealth Court. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant such temporary relief, restraining or mandamus order as it deems just and proper or requisite to effectuate the policies of this act and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree enforcing, modifying and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the board. The parties before the court shall be the board, the person charged with the commission of any unfair labor practice, and may include the charging party. No objection that has not been urged before the board, its members or agents shall be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the board as to the facts, if supported by substantial and legally credible evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court, that such additional evidence is material, and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence at the hearing before the board, its members or agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the board, its members or agent, and to be made a part of the transcript. The board may modify its findings as to the facts or make new findings by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings which, if supported by substantial and legally credible evidence, shall be conclusive, and shall file its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. The jurisdiction of the court of common pleas, or the Commonwealth Court, as the case may be, shall be exclusive within the limits of its jurisdiction, and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court on appeal by the board or any party in interest, irrespective of the nature of the decree or judgment or the amount involved. Such appeal shall be taken within a period of thirty days from the date of court's order and otherwise prosecuted in the same manner and form and with the same effect as is provided in other cases of appeal to the Supreme Court, and the record so certified shall contain all that was before the court of common pleas or the Commonwealth Court, as the case may be.

Section 1502. Any person aggrieved by a final order of the board granting or denying, in whole or in part, the relief sought in any unfair practice case, or by an order certifying or refusing to certify a collective bargaining agent of employes in any representation case, may obtain a review of such order in the court of common pleas of any county where the unfair practice in question was alleged to have been engaged in, or wherein such person or employer in a representation case resides or transacts business, or in the instance of Commonwealth employes in the Commonwealth Court, as the case may be, by filing in such court, within thirty days after the final order has been issued by the board, a written petition praying that the order of the board be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the board, and the board shall file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding certified by the board, including the pleadings and testimony and order of the board. Upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Board under section 1501, and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the board such temporary relief, restraining or mandamus order as it deems just and proper or requisite to effectuate the policies of this act, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside, in whole or in part, the order of the board, and findings of the board as to the facts, if supported by substantial and legally credible evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. The parties before the court shall be any person aggrieved by an order of the board, as aforesaid, and the board and any other party to the board proceeding. The jurisdiction of the court of common pleas, or the Commonwealth Court, as the case may be, shall be exclusive within the limits of its jurisdiction, and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review of the Supreme Court on appeal by the person aggrieved, or the board, irrespective of the nature of the decree or judgment or the amount involved. Such appeal shall be taken within thirty days of the date of the court's order and otherwise prosecuted in the same manner and form, and with the same effect, as is provided in other cases of appeal to the Supreme Court, and the record so certified shall contain all that was before the court of common pleas or the Commonwealth Court, as the case may be.

Section 1503. The commencement of proceedings under sections 1501 or 1502 of this article shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the board's order.

Section 1504. When granting appropriate temporary relief, a restraining or mandamus order or making and entering a decree enforcing, modifying, or enforcing as so modified, or setting aside, in whole or in part, an order of the board, as provided in this section, the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity shall not be limited by acts pertaining to equity jurisdiction of courts. The act of June 2, 1937 (P.L. 1198), known as the "Labor Anti-Injunction Act," shall not be applicable to orders of the board, or to court orders enforcing orders of the board, or any provision of this act, or to violations of any order of the board, or of court orders enforcing orders of the board, or any provisions of this act.

Section 1505. Petitions filed under this act shall be heard expeditiously and, if possible, within ten days after they have been docketed. No petitions or charges involving questions arising under clause (2) of subsection (a) of section 1201 of Article XII shall relieve the board of determining any questions arising under sections 603, 604 and 605 of Article VI immediately, and in their regular and normal order, and the making of a certification thereon if such is warranted. No petition or charge shall be entertained which relates to acts which occurred or statements which were made more than four months prior to the filing of the petition or charge.

ARTICLE XVI

Investigatory Powers

Section 1601. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations which, in the opinion of the board, are necessary and proper for the exercise of the powers vested in it by Article VI and Article XIII, and for the purpose of investigating and considering disputes, other than a question concerning the representation of employes, which it shall be the duty of the board to undertake whenever petitioned so to do by either an employe organization, an employer, or the representative of any unit of employes, the board shall have the investigatory powers granted in this article.

Section 1602. The board or its duly authorized agents shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination and the right to copy, any evidence of any person being investigated or proceeded against that relates to any matter under investigation or in question. Any member of the board shall have the power to issue subpoenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence that relates to any matter under investigation or in question before the board, its members or agent conducting the hearing or investigation. Such subpoenas shall be issued as a matter of right upon the request of either party at any time during the pendency of a proceeding. Any member of the board, or any agent designated by the board for such purposes, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

Section 1603. If any witness resides outside of the Commonwealth or through illness or other cause is unable to testify before the board or its members or agent conducting the hearing or investigation, his or her testimony or deposition may be taken within or without this Commonwealth, in such manner and in such forms as the board or its members or agent conducting the hearing, may by special or general rule prescribe.

Section 1604. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any person except to any person representing the Commonwealth as an employer, when jurisdiction will be in the Commonwealth Court, the court of common pleas of any county within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on or within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the board, shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the board, its members or agent, there to produce evidence if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question, and any failure to obey such order of the courts may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

Section 1605. No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, records, correspondence, documents or other evidence in obedience to the subpoena of the board on the ground that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

Section 1606. Complaints, orders and other process and papers of the board, its members or agent may be served, either personally or by registered mail or by telegraph or by leaving a copy thereof at the principal office or place of business of the person required to be served. The verified return by the individual so serving the same, setting forth the manner of such service, shall be proof of the same and the return post office receipt or telegraph receipt therefor when registered and mailed or telegraphed as aforesaid, shall be proof of service of the same. Witnesses summoned before the board, its members or agent shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of this Commonwealth, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the person taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of this Commonwealth.

Section 1607. All process of any court to which application may be made under this act may be served in the county wherein the defendant or other person required to be served resides or may be found.

ARTICLE XVII

Employe Organizations

Section 1701. No employe organization shall make any contribution out of the funds of the employe organization either directly or indirectly to any political party or organization or in support of any political candidate for public office.

The board shall establish such rules and regulations as it may find necessary to prevent the circumvention or evasion of the provisions of this section.

If an employe organization has made contributions in violation of this section it shall file with the board a report or affidavit evidencing such contributions within ninety days of the end of its fiscal year. Such report or affidavit shall be signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principals.

Any employe organization which violates the provisions of this section or fails to file any required report or affidavit or files a false report or affidavit shall be subject to a fine of not more than two thousand dollars ($2,000).

Any person who wilfully violates this section, or who makes a false statement knowing it to be false, or who knowingly fails to disclose a material fact shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars ($1,000) or imprisoned for not more than thirty days or both. Each individual required to sign affidavits or reports under this section shall be personally responsible for filing such report or affidavit and for any statement contained therein he knows to be false.

Nothing herein shall be deemed to prohibit voluntary contributions by individuals to political parties or candidates.

ARTICLE XVIII

Conflict of Interest

Section 1801. (a) No person who is a member of the same local, State, national or international organization as the employe organization with which the public employer is bargaining or who has an interest in the outcome of such bargaining which interest is in conflict with the interest of the public employer, shall participate on behalf of the public employer in the collective bargaining processes with the proviso that such person may, where entitled, vote on the ratification of an agreement.

(b) Any person who violates subsection (a) of this section shall be immediately removed by the public employer from his role, if any, in the collective bargaining negotiations or in any matter in connection with such negotiations.

ARTICLE XIX

Penalties

Section 1901. Any person who shall wilfully resist, prevent, impede or interfere with any member of the board, or any of its agents, in the performance of duties pursuant to this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000), or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

ARTICLE XX

Savings Provisions

Section 2001. The rights granted to certain public employes by the following acts or parts thereof shall not be repealed or diminished by this act:

(1) Section 24 of the act of August 14, 1963 (P.L. 984), known as the "Metropolitan Transportation Authorities Act of 1963."

(2) The act of November 27, 1967 (P.L. 628), entitled "An act protecting the rights of employes of existing transportation systems, which are acquired by cities of the third class or any authority thereof or certain joint authorities; requiring cities of the third class or any authority thereof or any such joint authority to enter into contracts with labor organizations acting for such employes, and providing for arbitration in case of disputes."

(3) Section 13.2 of the act of April 6, 1956 (P.L. 1414), known as the "Second Class County Port Authority Act."

Section 2002. This act shall not be construed to repeal the act of June 24, 1968 (Act No. 111), entitled "An act specifically authorizing collective bargaining between policemen and firemen and their public employers; providing for arbitration in order to settle disputes, and requiring compliance with collective bargaining agreements and findings of arbitrators."

Section 2003. Present provisions of an ordinance of the City of Philadelphia approved April 4, 1961, entitled "An Ordinance to authorize the Mayor to enter into an agreement with District Council 33, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, A.F.L.-C.I.O., Philadelphia and vicinity regarding its representation of certain City Employes," which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall remain in full force and effect so long as the present provisions of that ordinance are valid and operative.

ARTICLE XXI

Separability

Section 2101. If any clause, sentence, paragraph or part of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall, for any reason, be adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair or invalidate the remainder of this act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof, directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered and to the person or circumstances involved. It is hereby declared to be the legislative intent that this act would have been adopted had such invalid provisions not been included.

ARTICLE XXII

Repeals

Section 2201. The act of June 30, 1947 (P.L. 1183), entitled "An act relating to strikes by public employes; prohibiting such strikes; providing that such employes by striking terminate their employment; providing for reinstatement under certain conditions; providing for a grievance procedure; and providing for hearings before civil service and tenure authorities, and in certain cases before the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board," is hereby repealed as to those public employes covered by the provisions of this act, and any penalties or other limitations currently in force or presently pending against any public employes, shall be deemed null and void.

ARTICLE XXIII

Effective Date

Section 2301. This act shall take effect in ninety days, except that the provisions of Article V and the amnesty provisions of the repealer shall take effect immediately.

FLORIDA

TEACHER STRIKES PROHIBITED ABSENT STATUTORY AUTHORITY; CRIMINAL CONTEMPT CHARGES UPHELD

The Florida Supreme Court affirmed a lower court's criminal contempt conviction of the Dade County Classroom Teachers Association and its officers for violation of a temporary injunction issued during a "massive work stoppage" in February 1968. In finding the injunction "appropriate even in the absence of any showing of violence or a threat of violence," the high court referred to its Pinellas County decision (NRD, 12-68, A-2, C-14) which held that "in the absence of specific statutory authority. . . teachers as employees of the government [have] no right to strike in order to coerce a change in compensation or conditions of employment."

On February 20, 1968, one day after the statewide strike began, a taxpayer filed a class action suit in the Dade County Circuit Court seeking injunctive relief against the Association for allegedly causing member teachers to breach their employment contracts and refuse to perform their teaching functions. That same day the court directed the Association to appear at a February 22 hearing to show cause why a temporary injunction should not issue. After the hearing a temporary injunction was issued, followed by the circuit court's issuance of a second injunction "substantially identical to the first" on February 23.

An order for a contempt hearing then was entered by the circuit court on February 26, alleging that the Association had violated its injunctive orders. During the hearing (held on February 28) a motion to dissolve the temporary injunction was denied, and the Association and its officers were found guilty of civil contempt and fined $30,000. The Association appealed the contempt judgment to the state supreme court which reversed the judgment and remanded the case because the Association was entitled to a jury trial under a portion of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure which since has been deleted.

In subsequent contempt proceedings, the circuit court entered a show cause contempt rule alleging that the Association willfully had disobeyed the February 23 injunction; the Association moved to quash the rule on grounds that a jurisdictional dispute existed when the temporary injunction was issued, that the injunction was entered without notice and pursuant to an unconstitutional statute (§ 839.221 F.S.A.), and that the injunction violated its First, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights. However, the circuit court denied the motion to quash, a jury found the Association guilty of a number of criminal contempt charges, and the court levied contempt fines similar to the earlier ones on April 24, 1969.

The instant matter before the state supreme court was a direct appeal by the Association of the circuit court's denial of the motion to quash the show cause contempt rule. Counsel to the Association contended that since the original cause was removed to a U.S. district court on the morning of February 22, 1968, the circuit court lacked jurisdiction until an order of remand was entered by the U.S. district court. But the high court found that "the record does not contain the petition for removal nor does it appear from the record that the Association gave written notice of the petition for removal to the adverse parties and filed a copy of the petition with the Clerk of the State Court" (as required by federal law). Moreover, since the hearing resulting in the first injunction was held on February 22 and the U.S. district court's order of remand was entered on February 23, the high court held that > the burden was upon the Association to show by the record that the removal to the United States District Court was effected prior to the hearing of February 22, 1968, and was not remanded prior to the hearing of February 23, 1968, when the second injunction. . . was entered . . . The Association failed to meet this burden and the record fails to show that the State Court was without jurisdiction to enter each of the temporary injunctions. . . . The Association contends that the injunction of February 23, 1968, was entered ex parte and without giving the available adversary parties or their counsel the opportunity to be heard or to participate in the proceedings.

> The record clearly shows that the Association received notice of the application for the injunction entered February 22, 1968, and an opportunity to participate in the proceedings. . . . The entering of another injunction [on February 23] substantially the same as the previous one was appropriate under the circumstances of the case.
> Aside from the fact that in the prior appeal of this case the Association acknowledged that the injunction of February 23, 1968 was merely a reissuance of the one of February 22, 1968. . .it is clear that because of their willful violations of the injunction and the absence of any resort to their legal remedies for testing the validity of the injunction, the Association and its officers have no standing to raise that issue, in the absence of a showing that the injunction was void. The Association did not seek to challenge the validity of the injunction until the very day of the original contempt hearing. Under these circumstances, the Association cannot now claim the injunction was invalid, for the proper procedure was to seek judicial review of the injunction and not to disobey it, no matter how well-founded their doubts might be as to its validity.

On appeal the Association additionally alleged violation of its constitutional rights of speech and assembly, attacked the validity of § 839.221 F.S.A. (which prohibits public employees from joining organizations asserting the right to strike), and complained that the injunction was issued even though the work stoppage produced neither violence nor the threat of such. The high court, however, rejected these arguments in holding that the factual differences between public and private employment "furnish reasonable justification for different treatment in considering the right to strike":

The orderly functioning of our democratic form of representative government and the preservation of the right of our representatives to make budgetary allocations, free from the compulsion of crippling strikes, require the regulation of strikes by public employees whereas there is no similar countervailing reason for prohibition of strikes in the private sector.

Public employment does not vest in such employees any fixed or permanent rights of employment. As individuals or in groups public employees may discontinue their employment, but they should not be allowed to use this as a screen to effect a work stoppage and engage in a conspiracy to secure higher wages or other benefits.

To hold otherwise would result in public agencies being powerless to render public service and to effectively administer public affairs. The public would thereby be deprived of its right to efficient government.

In affirming the circuit court's order, the state supreme court concluded that inherent in its remand of the earlier appeal was a determination that the circuit court had jurisdiction to enter the temporary injunction and properly had done so. As such, the earlier decision became " 'the law of the case' and questions so settled on the earlier appeal are no longer open to question on a subsequent appeal." (Dade County Classroom Teachers Association, Inc. v. Leonard H. Rubin, et al., Florida Supreme Court, July 29, 1970.)

NEW JERSEY

COURT UPHOLDS ISSUANCE OF NONTENURE TEACHER CONTRACTS DURING IMPASSE

In the face of an unresolved negotiation impasse involving wages and working conditions, a superior court judge upheld the Fair Lawn education board's unilateral imposition of a salary schedule upon the school system and its subsequent mailing of contracts to nontenure teachers. Explaining that his decision was governed by a "weighing of equities," the judge held that the impasse here represented "a type of emergency that calls for a decision at once." The state's Employer-Employee Relations Act mandates collective negotiation, but the judge commented that "unfortunately [the Act] is lacking in teeth. . . . If the parties don't want to accept what [the Act] suggests to them, they are free to reject it."

Following lengthy negotiation, fact-finding, and mediation, the Fair Lawn board and the Fair Lawn Education Association remained in disagreement as to the terms of a salary schedule, grievance procedure, and fair dismissal procedure to be contained in their 1970-71 contract. In the process, however, the parties became aware of Article 9, paragraph C, of their existing agreement, which provided that "teachers shall be notified of their contract and salary status for the ensuing year not later than ten school days following the regular April public monthly meeting of the Board of Education. Teachers offered contracts must return the contract to the Board of Education by ten school days after receiving the contracts."

No agreement had been reached by the date of the "regular April public meeting," but the parties agreed on April 15 to waive the requirements of Article 9 for tenure teachers, and delay a determination of the article's effect upon nontenure teachers until April 28. On May 19, however, the board reversed its position, notified the Association of its intention to apply the article to nontenure teachers on May 21, and offered the Association an economic package which was rejected. Then on May 21, the board unilaterally determined a salary schedule for all district teachers and mailed contracts to nontenure teachers.

The Association accordingly filed suit directing the local board to show cause why it should not be restrained from sending contracts to nontenure teachers and requiring signed, returned contracts as a condition of employment while negotiation was pending. Moreover, the Association sought an injunction against the board's unilateral determination of a 1970-71 salary schedule.

Noting that school boards are mandated by state law to "provide free education for school children in the state," the judge rejected the Association's argument that the board's unilateral action was unlawful under the Act. He acknowledged that the action "suggests less than full compliance with the spirit of [the Act]," but held that under certain circumstances "there is no alternative but to permit such an action." The judge explained that while I cannot conclude that either party has been bargaining in bad faith, there exists not only the possibility, but the temptation, that if the negotiations continue to drag on until they approach the commencement of the new school year, there could possibly be some bad faith bargaining. . . . If, while negotiations are going on, the board cannot hire teachers but must take the risk that, come September, they may not have one single contract of employment, particularly in the area of nontenure teachers, who represent 25 percent of the work force, it could well be that a complete obstruction of the maintenance of a free public school system in the Borough of Fair Lawn [would result] . . . . If I grant plaintiff's prayer for a restraint, I believe I am lending the weight of the law to what I seriously believe can be an obstruction of the mandate to the board of education to provide a free public school system in Fair Lawn in September.

I have therefore decided that I shall permit the board to continue to submit contracts to nontenured teachers, with this condition (to be included in the contract): that any basic contract negotiated between the board and the association shall inure to the benefit of the nontenured teachers who now accept employment with the Borough of Fair Lawn.

NEW YORK

TEACHERS ASSOCIATION FOUND IN CONTEMPT FOR STRIKING DESPITE COURT RESTRAINING ORDER

The Lindenhurst Teachers Association and its two chief officers were found guilty of criminal contempt by the New York Supreme Court for Suffolk County following a May 1970 teachers' strike which lasted for 11 school days. Ruling that there was no justification for the strike, which was conducted in "willful disobedience" of a temporary restraining order and despite a no-strike pledge, the court fined the Association $4,000, and individually assessed the Association president and vice-president with $250 fines and 10-day jail sentences. The court additionally censured Association members for cooperating in the strike, even though contempt proceedings had not been brought against them.

When negotiation of a 1970-71 contract between the Association and the UFSD No. 4 education board reached a stalemate and the court was "furnished with satisfactory proof that a 'teachers strike' was imminent," the court entered a May 5 order requiring the Association to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued. The order contained a temporary restraining provision enjoining the strike until the show cause hearing, and was returnable on May 11. However, on May 6 the threatened strike occurred, and the court subsequently found that more than 400 teachers absented themselves from their classes resulting in almost complete paralysis of the school system. The strike continued until May 20, 1970. On May 21, 1970 the members of the defendant association returned to the classrooms having reached an agreement with the board of education to submit all remaining differences to arbitration.

Thus, the strike lasted for eleven school days during which the operations of the school system were, for all practical purposes, completely halted. Nine elementary schools, one junior high school and one senior high school ceased to function. Over 11,000 students had no classes to attend. The record herein discloses that this strike was conducted in willful and deliberate defiance of the mandate of this court contained in its order of May 5, 1970 as extended by further order of the court dated May 11, 1970.

The Association argued that the local board was guilty of acts of extreme provocation detracting from its responsibility for conducting the strike, but the court ruled that there was no justification for a strike occurring "before the legal procedures provided by law for the resolution of such dispute had been exhausted and. . .in disregard of the provisions of the Civil Service Law, of the mandate of this court, and of the no-strike pledge." In levying the fines and jail sentences, the court recorded its awareness that this strike could not have taken place without the cooperation, active or passive of many teachers who belong to the defendant association. Contempt proceedings have not been initiated against such persons. Their actions are no less subject to reproach on that account. Teachers not infrequently invoke the protection of the law against arbitrary action by school authorities, and should be equally ready to obey a court mandate designed to protect the public against an arbitrary and unlawful strike.

APPROPRIATENESS OF SUBSTITUTE TEACHERS' BARGAINING UNIT AFFIRMED

A memorandum decision of the Dane County Circuit Court upheld a determination of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) that substitute per-diem teachers are employees under the state's municipal bargaining statute and that a unit comprised solely of such teachers is appropriate for purposes of negotiation. Specifically, the court found a rational and supportable basis for the WERC's decision, and held that the disputed decision was "fully consistent with the objectives and purpose of the statute involved."

Sec. 111.70(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes defines a "municipal employee" as "any employe of a municipal employer except city and village policemen, sheriff's deputies, and county traffic officers." Sec. 111.70(2) then provides that municipal employes shall have the right of self-organization, to affiliate with labor organizations of their own choosing and the right to be represented by labor organizations of their own choice in conferences and negotiations with their municipal employers or their representatives on questions of wages, hours and conditions of employment, and such employes shall have the right to refrain from any and all such activities.

In early 1969 the Milwaukee Teachers Education Association (MTEA) petitioned the WERC for certification as representative of a substitute teacher bargaining unit. Such teachers served as temporary replacements for regular teachers, and were drawn from a list compiled annually to indicate what individuals were available for substitute work and how they rated on the basis of experience and training. The Milwaukee education board neither entered into a contract with the listed individuals nor guaranteed them any work during a given school year. Moreover, the majority of the persons listed did not meet the requirements for a full-time teaching position in the Milwaukee system, but were given special permits by the State Department of Public Instruction.

According to a February 1969 determination of the WERC, substitute per-diem teachers are municipal employees within the meaning of Section 111.70 and are entitled to representation for collective bargaining purposes. In addition, the WERC ruled that a unit comprised only of substitute per-diem teachers is appropriate, and that those substitute teachers employed at least 30 days during a school year are regular employees (either part-time or full-time) and are eligible to vote. Following an election conducted by the WERC, the MTEA was certified as representative of the substitute teachers' bargaining unit.

The matter before the court involved the Milwaukee board's contention that substitute teachers are independent contractors ineligible for coverage by sec. 111.70, and that such employees do not constitute an appropriate bargaining unit. Stating that "the proper standard of review in this case is whether there is a supportable basis for the conclusions reached by the Commission and whether its conclusion is consistent with the purpose of sec. 111.70, Stats.," the court cited two excerpts from a prior decision which noted that the application of the municipal employment law . . . is one of the areas of the law requiring expertise. Therefore, the only determination this court should make is whether the WERC's interpretation of "municipal employee" is consistent with the purpose of sec. 111.70. . . . The broad definition of "municipal employe" found in sec. 111.70, Stats., clearly indicates a legislative desire to make collective bargaining units available for as many municipal employees as is consistent with sound municipal government.

In finding the facts of the instant case to indicate that the WERC's decision was both reasonable and consistent with statutory purposes, the court explained that substitute teachers are, in fact, employees of the [Milwaukee] School Board. The "right of control" test used by the [WERC] in arriving at its decision is a proper one. The Board had complete control over the manner and the means by which the job of substitute teaching was achieved. All of the other facts present warranted the interpretation given to the statute by the [WERC] and it is consistent with the purpose of sec. 111.70, Stats.

The petitioner also challenges the appropriateness of the bargaining unit. There is a very rational basis for the decision made. The substitute teachers, as shown by the evidence, constitute a clearly identifiable and separate group. Their conditions of employment differ from those of the regular teachers. Substitute teachers do not have the fringe benefits accorded the regular personnel, such as insurance, pension rights, pay increments and a variety of leaves of absence, among others. These facts certainly point up the propriety of allowing a separate bargaining unit. It would further appear that the determination of eligibility was a reasonable one under all of the circumstances and founded upon a rational basis.

The decisions of the [WERC] herein are not contrary to law . . . and the orders are affirmed.

NONTENURE TEACHER MAY NOT BE DENIED RENEWAL FOR MAKING CRITICAL REMARKS DURING NEGOTIATION

The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana ruled "constitutionally impermissible" a school board's decision not to renew the contract of a nontenure teacher who had made statements critical of the administration during 1970-71 contract negotiation. Finding that the board had accorded excessive weight to administrative efficiency (as opposed to the constitutional rights of the individual teacher), the court ordered the board to renew the elementary teacher's contract and retained jurisdiction to consider additional relief.

At an April 21, 1970, negotiation meeting between the Lake Central (Indiana) School Corporation and the local teachers association plaintiff warned the teachers he represented that the administration was attempting to "buy them off" by conceding small issues at the expense of larger ones. The principal later called plaintiff to his office, charged that the statement was untrue and reflected upon him, and demanded an apology, which was refused. A similar session subsequently occurred between plaintiff, the principal, and the superintendent; as plaintiff would not retract his statement, the superintendent recommended that his contract not be renewed. Plaintiff was informed of the decision in a letter stating that he was not being rehired because he had "exhibited a general attitude which discloses a refusal to cooperate with school authorities on matters relating to school administration."

During litigation the court stated that it "must weigh the interests of the teacher in commenting on issues of concern to him and the interests of the state, as an employer, in promoting the efficiency of the public services it performs through its employees." While plaintiff's statement may have caused some friction, the court found that in the context of negotiation "it is not extraordinary that plaintiff would caution the people he represented against being 'bought off' by concessions on small items by the administration." Moreover, the court held that the statement was not so critical as to adversely affect the administration, and that any ill will caused was "in large part . . . the result of an oversensitivity to criticism on the part of the administration."

Neither plaintiff's status as a nontenure teacher nor the board's contention that it "merely refused to renew his contract rather than dismissing him during the period of a contract" were of any consequence as far as plaintiff's right to a remedy for abridgment of his constitutional rights. For the court noted that in McLaughlin v. Tilendis (NRD, 1-69, A-1, C-1) it was held that the Civil Rights Act of 1871 gives nontenure teachers "a remedy if their contracts were not renewed because of their exercise of constitutional rights." The court concluded that if school boards could refuse to rehire a teacher because he made critical statements, "there would be a serious impairment in the freedom of teachers to speak out on issues concerning them." Board Findings and Rulings

TRIAL INCLUSION OF ADMINISTRATORS IN TEACHER BARGAINING UNIT IS NO EXCEPTION TO STATUTORY PROHIBITION

Finding a pattern of "inconsistency rather than uniformity" in the Willingsboro education board's "trial" inclusion of administrators in the local teacher bargaining unit, the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) ruled that such an experiment was not a legitimate exception to the statutory rule that "no unit shall be appropriate which includes . . . both supervisors and nonsupervisors." The PERC accordingly rejected the recommendation of a hearing examiner and excluded several categories of administrators from the teacher unit because their trial inclusion did not meet the established practice, prior agreement, or special circumstances requirements of the law.

The Willingsboro Education Association (WEA) was recognized as representative of all professional district employees in 1962. Over the next eight years local school administrators received pay raises in proportion to teacher salary increases and occasionally utilized the WEA's grievance procedure, but the question of whether the WEA negotiated for the administrators remained uncertain. Then in 1964 the Willingsboro board adopted a policy (submitted by the administrators as a group) stating that administrative and supervisory personnel were to deal directly with the superintendent.

In 1968, however, the parties negotiated their first comprehensive agreement covering the wages, hours, and working conditions of all professional employees, including principals, vice-principals, assistant principals, district coordinators, guidance directors, and reading supervisors. The agreement was a trial venture, and both parties later admitted that it had proved workable. But when negotiation of a renewal contract commenced, the board objected to continued representation of the six classes of administrators. A successor agreement was reached with the understanding that the status of the administrators would be resolved by the PERC.

During a hearing on the matter, the WEA contended that the specified administrative categories should continue to be included in the bargaining unit, while the board argued that its 1968 recognition of the all-inclusive unit was merely temporary and, therefore, did not constitute prior agreement to such a unit or evidence of established practice. Article 8, Section (d) of the state's Employer-Employee Relations Act provides in pertinent part that "except where dictated by established practice, prior agreement, or special circumstances, no unit shall be appropriate which includes . . . both supervisors and nonsupervisors."

Interpreting the board's argument to mean that it claimed a unilateral right to determine whether recognition of the over-all unit should continue, the hearing examiner determined that the statutory exceptions applied "in the circumstances of the on and off recognition since 1962, and expecially in light of the successful trial of the all-inclusive unit in 1968." He found that all administrative categories except guidance directors and reading supervisors enjoyed a community of interest with the teachers and recommended that they be included in the teacher unit.

The Willingsboro board, however, disagreed with the hearing officer and contended that the guidance and reading personnel were supervisors, that insufficient evidence precluded the application of any statutory exceptions permitting the inclusion of supervisory and nonsupervisory employees in a single unit, and that a community of interest between the six administrative categories and the teachers was not shown.

Explaining that a minimum requirement for the application of the "established practice" exception is a clear showing of supervisory inclusion for such a period of time that experience dictates that inclusion as desirable and proper, the PERC explained that such a minimum showing was not evident here:

> The parties' relationship with respect to the representation of administrators has been plagued with uncertainty. . . . The pattern that emerges is one of inconsistency rather than uniformity. [I conclude] that no practice has been established during the eight-year relationship requiring the inclusion of supervisors in the teacher unit.
> We consider next the exception of "prior agreement" . . . [an] exception which is construed to refer, minimally, to a particular kind of agreement, namely, a written agreement, reached in the context of collective negotiations, executed by both parties, and providing for the inclusion, in a single unit, of supervisors and nonsupervisors. The [Willingsboro] agreement meets these minimal requirements.

The question remains, however, whether this agreement of the parties dictates a unit determination which would combine teachers and supervisors. The record is clear that it was not so much the parties' agreement to include the administrators as it was the parties' acquiescence in letting the administrators decide the question themselves and thereby decide for the parties. . . . Furthermore, once the administrators' reaction was made known, both parties understood that the Association's representation of this group was on a probationary basis. It is immaterial who would determine the success or failure of the trial period. The significant fact is the parties' realization that the question of representation for administrators still had not been resolved with finality and was subject to being reopened.

These conditions are not the sort of compelling circumstances which will support an exception to the general rule; the agreement produced merely deferred the question and offered clear prospect for later stability. The assertion that upon the expiration of that contract the administrators desired to continue the arrangement is of no consequence to the issue that the now-expired contract should dictate their inclusion. . . . [I conclude] that the prior agreement does not dictate the inclusion of supervisors in a unit of nonsupervisory teachers. [I further conclude] that nothing in this record would support a finding that the third statutory exception, "special circumstance," has been satisfied.

Determining that the reading supervisors and guidance directors did share a community of interest with the teachers and did not exert any effective degree of supervisory power, the PERC included only those job categories in the existing teacher bargaining unit. NEW YORK

ASSOCIATION OBLIGED TO SIGN AGREEMENT WHEN UNIT CHALLENGE IS NEITHER TIMELY NOR NEGOTIATED

When the Somers Faculty Association refused to sign a 1969-70 contract negotiated with Central School District No. 1, the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) held that the Association had failed to bargain in good faith and thereby violated the improper practices section of the state's Taylor Law. While the law specifically requires employers "to negotiate and enter into written agreements," it contains no equivalent provision in regard to employee organizations. The PERB, however, adopted the hearing officer's recommendation that the law's stated purpose of promoting "harmonious and cooperative relationships between government and its employees" requires, in my opinion, the imposition of an identical obligation of entering into written agreements on employee organizations. The duty to reduce an agreement to writing following negotiations has long been recognized in the private sector, and recently also in the public sector, as the culminating step in the negotiating process.

The Association's refusal to sign the contract hinged upon its opposition to the exclusion of department chairmen from a bargaining unit comprised of "all instructional, nonsupervisory members of the professional staff." It contended that it was not required to sign because the parties had no specific agreement to exclude chairmen from the unit. Moreover, department coordinators had been included in the parties' 1968-69 agreement (when the title of chairman was not assigned to any position), and teachers who performed departmental administrative duties during the 1967-68 school year were known as department heads.

In September 1967, however, Association and board representatives first had met to discuss the scope of the bargaining unit prior to Association recognition and had agreed to a resolution concerning department chairmen. Specifically, when the district said it intended to assign supervisory functions to department heads and reclassify them as department chairmen, the parties reached a compromise resolution specifically excluding the title of chairman from the unit. In addition, the district agreed not to create the position of chairman until July 1, 1969, nor without giving the Association prior notice.

In the instant matter, the PERB examiner held that the district's recognition of and adherence to the 1967 resolution was proper, explaining:

The [Association's] reasoning founders on a misapprehension that the recognition clause of the contract has a life apart from the initial, uncontested recognition resolution promulgated by the charging party. An employer has the right initially to define a negotiating unit by official resolution. The recognized employee organization may then contest the employer's unit determination within 30 days from publication thereof by filing a petition with [the PERB]. If no such petition is filed, the unit is immune from challenge under Section 208(c) of the [Taylor Law] for a minimum period of approximately two budget submission dates minus 20 days.

As the Association neither attempted to negotiate the inclusion of department chairmen in the unit nor filed a timely challenge to the original unit determination, the PERB examiner concluded that the Association again had acquiesced in the exclusion of department chairmen from the unit, barring the charging party's agreement to include them, for the duration of the new period of unchallengeability.

It was therefore legally powerless to withhold its agreement to the 1969-70 contract on the ground that the contract's recognition clause defined the unit to exclude department chairmen, in accordance with the recognition resolution.

The PERB accordingly directed the Association to bargain in good faith by signing the agreement and to post notice that it would do so. (Somers Faculty Association and Central School District No. 1, Town of Somers, New York, New York Public Employment Relations Board, June 29, 1970.)

WISCONSIN

ARBITRATOR RECOMMENDS MODIFICATION OF TEACHER DISMISSAL CLAUSE FROM "JUST CAUSE" TO "WITHOUT REASON"

An advisory arbitrator appointed by the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission to arbitrate a negotiation impasse over the inclusion of a "just cause" provision in a teacher dismissal clause recommended that the language of the clause be modified to read "without reason." Applying a ruling of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin in Roth v. Board of Regents (NRD, 9-70, 6) to the instant impasse, the arbitrator held that teachers must be provided substantive guarantees of procedural due process in dismissal proceedings, but that a "just cause" dismissal provision encroaches too greatly upon the already diminished discretionary rights of school boards.

The dispute centered upon whether a contract being negotiated by the Boscobel education board and the Boscobel Education Association should contain a clause reading: "No teacher will be disciplined or deprived of any professional advantage without just cause." The Association argued that the "just cause" provision was necessary because "those concepts which underlie our democratic society demand that no one be condemned to suffer injury at the hands of the government unless said condemnation is based on good reason." Moreover, the Association pointed out that public-school teachers constitutionally are guaranteed substantive and procedural due process of law, and argued that nontenure teachers may not be dismissed "for just any reason, for no reason, or for a reason that is based upon whim or caprice."

The Boscobel board, however, contended that the "just cause" provision was unnecessary because state law already afforded teachers protection from dismissal during the term of a contract except for good and sufficient cause. The board also maintained that the "just cause" concept would result in a legal and administrative morass since proving "just cause" in nonrenewal cases would involve prohibitive costs, would expose the board to extensive litigation for breach of contract suits, would harass the board with costly, time-consuming pretrial activities before a determination of the merits of a case, and would mean that a decision not to renew would have to be predicated upon a willingness to engage in costly and lengthy proceedings in order to provide necessary proofs. In addition, the board pointed out that if an administrator's judgment of a teacher's competency were overruled by a third party, his ability to discipline and work with teachers would be diminished. Finally, the board argued that the concept would cause an excessive teacher-problem orientation resulting in an imbalance in its concern for all aspects of the school system.

The arbitrator found it "clear that a teacher's contract cannot be terminated" because of his substantive First Amendment rights, such as race, religion, or political affiliation. Independent of these substantive guarantees, however, is the question of procedural due process; under Article XIV of the Constitution, no person may be deprived "of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," and the arbitrator noted that "enjoyment of a professional position has long been recognized as property even though it may involve a nontenure position." He accordingly determined that public-school teachers must "be accorded procedural due process when their employment is either terminated during the term of their contract or if said contract is not renewed."

In Roth the district court referred to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Cafeteria Workers v. McElroy and concluded that > the decision not to retain a professor employed by a state university may not rest on a basis wholly unsupported in fact, or on a basis wholly without reason. This standard is intended to be considerably less severe than the standard of "cause" as it has been applied to professors with tenure. . . . To be more direct, in applying the constitutional doctrine, the court will be bound to respect bases for non-retention enjoying minimal factual support and bases for non-retention supported by subtle reasons.

Applying the Roth reasoning to the instant matter, the arbitrator recommended that "a modification of the language used in the Roth case should be substituted . . . and that such substituted language should read as follows: 'No teacher will be disciplined or deprived of any professional advantage based upon a decision which is unsupported in fact or without reason.'" Explaining that this language (as compared to that in Roth) makes no attempt to define the quality of fact and reason necessary to support a decision not to renew, the arbitrator called for ad hoc application of the language because the rules of "minimal factual support" and "subtle reasons" outlined in Roth expose a teacher "to changes in his employment status predicated almost exclusively on pretextual reasons."

The arbitrator finally recommended inclusion of a final and binding arbitration clause in the parties' contract in order to provide exclusive machinery for resolving possible contract interpretation and application disputes. He explained:

> If the Board's decision of termination or nonrenewal is based upon fact and good reason, they have ample opportunity to exercise their administrative prerogatives. Also, by adoption of the proposed final and binding arbitration the Board would effectively protect itself against expensive and extensive trial and pretrial procedures, for it is the rare arbitration which in total runs more than one to two days. This is in contradistinction to a collective bargaining agreement without final and binding arbitration where, as pointed out by the Board, pre-trial activity alone can continue for several days.

UNIT OF YALE UNIVERSITY NON-FACULTY MEDICAL DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES RULED INAPPROPRIATE BY NLRB

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) rejected an election petition filed by the Yale Non-Faculty Action Committee (YNFAC) Unit No. 1 in finding the unit sought inappropriate. Although the NLRB asserted jurisdiction over private nonprofit colleges in a June 1970 decision involving Cornell University and Syracuse University (NRD, 9-70, 10), it ruled in the instant case that the proposed 109-member unit of clerical and technical personnel employed in a department of the Yale University School of Medicine was insufficiently separate from the rest of the university to warrant its own bargaining representative. However, the NLRB did accept the petitioning YNFAC as an employee organization under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA).

The Federation of University Employees, Local 35, intervenor in the case and current representative of a campus-wide unit of maintenance and service employees, contended that the YNFAC was "not sufficiently organized" to act as a bargaining representative and, therefore, was not a labor organization. But the NLRB determined that the YNFAC meets NLRA requirements for a labor organization because it has elected officers, holds regular meetings, and has the allegiance of a majority of the employees it claims to represent. Moreover, the organization's stated purpose is "to enhance the quality of life of all people under its jurisdiction; to establish fair wage scales and working conditions and protect the welfare of all its members in any manner necessary under the law."

But the NLRB agreed with Yale University, Local 35, and another intervening union that the unit sought was inappropriate, explaining:

> We fail to be persuaded by the testimony submitted as to the geographical and functional separateness of the [medical department in question]. Although it is housed in its own building, it is thoroughly integrated into the Yale School of Medicine and the University both by virtue of its location, educational program and administrative operations.

Although the department involved has self-contained facilities and conducts employment practices separate from other university departments, the NLRB found that "personnel policies and employment practices are standardized for the entire University." Specifically, the department may request additional personnel and do its own hiring, but a central university personnel office and three auxiliary offices recruit applicants, assign classifications and pay grades, maintain personnel files, and administer fringe benefits. And while the department prepares its own budget, it must be approved by four superior bodies or individuals. The NLRB also found that the wages of some 90 percent of the university's unorganized nonfaculty employees are established by a campus-wide classification scale, that all employees are paid monthly by a university paycheck, and that fringe benefits, work hours, overtime, and sick leave are applied on a campus-wide basis.

As to the proposed clerical and technical unit, the NLRB found that none of the unit's 26 job classifications is unique to the medical department involved, and that the work in which department employees "are engaged is essentially similar to work performed by employees in the same job classifications outside the Department, and for the same salary." Moreover, the NLRB pointed out that "one-third of the staff housed in [the department] are actually employees of other University Departments."

In rejecting the petition on grounds that department employees "do not share a sufficiently special community of interests which would justify creating a separate unit for them," the NLRB concluded:

> Apart from the desire of these employees to be represented, indicated by past attempts to organize, there is scant evidence which justifies establishing a separate unit for them. They are subject to the same working conditions as all other Yale employees. While the research conducted in the Department may vary from that undertaken elsewhere, the skills and techniques employed by [department] personnel do not vary substantially from those of other Yale employees holding parallel jobs.

Negotiation Notes

KENTUCKY

STATE COURT UPHOLDS LEGALITY OF LOUISVILLE BARGAINING ORDINANCE

In the absence of state legislation to the contrary, the city of Louisville, Kentucky, may enter into collective bargaining agreements with its employees, according to a ruling of the Jefferson Circuit Court. The precedent-setting decision upheld a city ordinance authorizing public employee bargaining and urged that there is a "need of supplemental legislation setting forth the mechanics for carrying out the original permissive ordinance." It reportedly paves the way for eventual payment of an estimated $3 million in fringe benefits to some 1,600 city employees whose negotiated contracts provided for overtime, vacations, and holidays which city officials refused to pay.

The court's decision resulted from a June 26, 1969, suit filed by the International Association of Fire Fighters, Local 345, which charged the Louisville mayor and various city department heads with failure to implement the terms of a voluntary agreement entered into by the city and its firemen. That agreement, as well as several others, had been incorporated into ordinances by the local board of aldermen. Other contracts affected by the fire fighters suit included those between the aldermen and the Greater Louisville Public Employees Union, Local 678 (for civilian police department employees), the Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 6 (for regular policemen), and a union representing 30 electrical workers in the city's traffic engineering department.

In determining the statutory restrictions placed upon a city's authority to contract, the court noted that "a municipal corporation has only those powers arising from the laws creating it and defining the scope of its authority, or necessarily inferred therefrom," and that a city "has no right or power to enter into contracts which curtail or prohibit the exercise of its legislative or administrative authority." While the powers granted to the city by the legislature do not specifically authorize the city to enter into collective bargaining agreements, the court held that "there is no statute forbidding or prohibiting such a contractual arrangement, nor is the public policy of this state adverse to such a collective bargaining agreement. It appears to the Court that the Legislature meant to and did confer home rule upon the City of Louisville except where specifically denied by statute."

Turning to recent legislative enactments indicating that "the Legislature has yielded to the voice of the change in society" by allowing cities to provide certain benefits for their public employees, the court explained that governmental employees should no longer "be without voice in considering wages, working conditions, fringe benefits and other social problems. Too long that has been the situation, and for too long has government had to content itself with underpaid employees." But the court placed limitations on its determination of the legality of the Louisville bargaining ordinance by explaining that > city ordinances dealing with employment relations of city employees are of comparatively recent origin. The nature and character of these ordinances by different methods generally provide for the public employees to join a labor organization of their own choosing or to refuse to join a labor organization, to designate representatives to intervene in their behalf in negotiations concerning wages, hours or conditions of work, to enter into collective bargaining agreements and to provide a method of overcoming an impasse. It is universally conceded that the employees may not be afforded the right to strike the employer or to do anything or perform any acts which would interfere with the orderly operation of the city government.

The court additionally upheld the legality of the ordinances incorporating the terms of the various voluntary agreements between the city and its employees in finding that they are "valid enactments for a legislative purpose," and that they give "life and meaning" to the bargaining ordinance. Absent a showing of cause to the contrary, the court concluded that city officials are "bound by the provisions" of those ordinances.

City officials twice have unsuccessfully attempted to have the court's decision reconsidered and reportedly plan to take it to the Kentucky Court of Appeals for clarification. The court retained jurisdiction of the case, but declined issuing an order for mandatory city action on the understanding that the city's new mayor would be bound by the decision.

NEW YORK

APPOINTMENT POWERS OF PERB EXTENDED BY TAYLOR LAW AMENDMENTS

Two amendments to the New York Public Employees' Fair Employment Act (the Taylor Law) restrict the appointment of fact-finding panels to the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB), and allow the PERB to appoint attorneys as technical advisors to fact-finding boards and as representatives of the PERB in litigation.

Sec. 209(3)(d) of the Act, which concerns negotiation dispute resolution machinery, was amended in part by Ch. 414, L. 1970 to read that "the findings of fact and recommendations are made public by a fact-finding board appointed by the board." Sec. 205(4) of the Act was amended in part by Ch. 1020, L. 1970, effective May 20, 1970, to provide that the PERB may appoint attorneys "to serve as technical advisers to . . . fact-finding boards . . . [and that] attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the board, appear for and represent the board in any case in court."

OHIO

PAYMENT OF RAISES TO STRIKERS PROHIBITED BY STATUTE AND ENJOINED BY COURT

In what reportedly was the first application of Ohio's Ferguson Act to public employee strikes, the Hamilton County Court of Appeals restrained and enjoined the city of Cincinnati from executing the terms of a strike settling agreement reached in early February 1970 which granted an average 7 percent pay raise to more than 1,300 city employees who conducted a month long walkout. While a lower court had dismissed a prior suit to enjoin the city's payment of raises to the strikers, the appeals court ruled that public employee supervisors statutorily are prohibited from authorizing or approving a strike and thereby have no choice but to impose provisions of the Act forbidding wage increases for striking public employees for one year after the end of a strike.

Sec. 4117.02 of the Ohio Revised Code states in part that "no public employee shall strike"; it further stipulates that "no person exercising any authority, supervision, or direction over any public employee shall have the power to authorize, approve, or consent to a strike by one or more public employees, and such person shall not authorize, approve, or consent to such strike." Sec. 4117.03(A) then provides that a striking employee may be reappointed or re-employed if "his compensation shall in no event exceed that received by him immediately prior to the time of such violation." Subsec. (B) adds that the striking employee's compensation "shall not be increased until after the expiration of one year from such appointment or reappointment, employment or re-employment."

The strike conducted by Cincinnati sanitationmen, highway maintenance personnel, and others represented by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Council 51, ended on February 8, 1970, with the ratification of a 13-month contract providing the strikers with pay raises, various increases in fringe benefits, and a promise that the city would drop all suits and contempt litigation. The contract also contained a no-reprisal clause allowing the strikers to keep their jobs, even though the city manager earlier had mailed each striker a letter advising him that he was no longer in the city's employ.

Shortly afterward, an attorney brought a taxpayer's suit in the Hamilton County Court of Common Pleas charging that the city was "coerced and intimidated" into paying raises to the strikers, and seeking invocation of the Act's strike penalties. While determining that the strike "was unlawful," the court found itself "compelled" to dismiss the petition to enjoin the city from paying the raises because "the city did not invoke the . . . Act."

On appeal, the higher court found no dispute as to the controlling facts of the case, including the city's understanding that its employees were on strike to influence a change in their conditions of employment and compensation. Focusing upon the question of whether public employees may strike, the court held that public employee strikes are illegal at common law, and that the Ferguson Act, "an expression of the common law," is constitutional under both the state and federal constitutions. As to the contention that the Act could not be imposed upon the city unless its officials chose to invoke the Act's provisions, the court ruled that under the restrictions of R.C. 4117.02, > it is apparent that no one in authority over the public employees here involved could authorize, approve, or consent to the strike. The vacillation of the city officials demonstrated by the testimony cannot be justified in law. Their refusal to follow the controlling statutes when the employees themselves advised the city they were on strike, when the officials knew the employees had struck illegally causing the officials to seek and to obtain injunctive relief from the courts, and when the officials understood from the outset the purpose of the strike was to induce, influence or coerce a change in conditions and compensation, amounts to a passive or implied consent to such strike. Upon the facts here, uncontroverted and stipulated as they are, the city had no choice but to obey the directive of the Legislature.

When the city stipulates that it knew the employees were striking, it cannot be heard to say that it has a discretion to choose to call the illegal acts of the employees by some other name or refuse to recognize what it has stipulated in relation to the strike.

In addition, the court found that under R.C. 4117.03(A)(B) granting and paying increments to the strikers was prohibited. It accordingly concluded that the city of Cincinnati and all its officers must be and are restrained and enjoined from executing or performing the agreement so as to pay any compensation, direct or indirect, in the form of salary, wages or otherwise to any and all persons who were employees of the city and then participated in a strike against the city in excess of that compensation, received by such person immediately prior to such strike for at least one year from the date of appointment, reappointment, employment or re-employment of such person.

In compliance with the appeals court order (officially entered on June 29), the city first withheld pay increases from the strikers' checks on July 2. The money so retained is to be held in escrow pending a final determination of the dispute by the Ohio Supreme Court.

RHODE ISLAND

CERTAIN STATE POLICE DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL GRANTED BARGAINING RIGHTS

An amendment to the Rhode Island state employee bargaining statute (Title 36, Chapter 11, sec. 36-11-1(a), General Laws of Rhode Island) extends the definition of "state employee" to include state police department members and employees below the rank of lieutenant. Effective April 30, 1970, the amended portion of the law now reads:

State employees shall have the right to organize and designate representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining with respect to wages, hours and other conditions of employment. State employees, as used herein, shall include employees and members of the department of state police below the rank of lieutenant.

Rhode Island also has a mandatory teacher negotiation statute (NRD, 5-67, C-7) which was enacted on May 11, 1966, effective the same date.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, AUGUST 1970

Data reported by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) indicate that the August 1970 Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure stood at 136.0, an 0.2 percent rise above the previous month and the smallest month-to-month change registered since December 1968. The August figure put the all-items index 5.7 percent above that of a year ago. BLS noted that increased charges for consumer services (especially household services other than rent and mortgage interest charges) accounted for most of the August rise. Commodity prices rose slightly that month, while food prices and charges for transportation services declined in comparison to July rates. An estimated 146,000 workers will receive cost-of-living salary increases based upon the August CPI.

PUBLIC HEARINGS ON EXECUTIVE ORDER 11491 HELD

A review of the first year of operations under Executive Order 11491 began in October and is scheduled to be completed by January 1, 1971. Enacted on October 29, 1969 (NRD, 12-69, 5, 16), the Order provides for periodic review in its requirement that the Civil Service Commission "from time to time, report to the [Federal Labor Relations] Council on the state of the program with any recommendations for its improvement." The review was conducted as a public hearing so that the interests of agencies, unions, employees, and the general public could be considered.

Issues currently before the Council involving changes in Executive Order 11491 prompted the decision to schedule hearings, according to the Council chairman. Considerable dissatisfaction reportedly has arisen over a portion of sec. 20 of the Order which prohibits pay for employees spending time as union representatives in negotiation with management. The hearings were designed to provide a medium through which individuals and organizations officially could record criticism of the Order.

SCHOOL-BOARD MEMBERS AND SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS AS NEGOTIATORS

For the past four years, the NEA Research Division has conducted a national survey of written negotiation agreements and procedures in school systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more. Each year survey respondents were asked similar questions regarding the involvement of school-board members and school superintendents in negotiation with teachers organizations. Four years ago negotiation sessions most often were conducted only by school-board members or superintendents, with the superintendent advising both the board and teacher negotiators. Today, the majority of negotiation sessions are being conducted by a team of board members, superintendents, and other school administrators, with the superintendent advising only the board's negotiators. The percentage of school systems in which the superintendent negotiates with full or limited authority has remained fairly constant over the four-year period; the number of superintendents acting as neutral resource persons has diminished slightly, while more superintendents are becoming nonparticipants in negotiation sessions. Other school administrators who participate in negotiation constitute the only personnel category which has registered a slight increase each year. Table 1 provides comparative percentages for the four survey years.

Fourteen states reported 50 or more school systems with written negotiation agreements in 1969-70. Data on the role of the superintendent in negotiation and on who negotiates for the school board were tabulated in separate contingency tables for each of these states and for the country. Survey data for previous years on the role of the superintendent in negotiation sessions, negotiators for the school board, and state patterns in negotiation were reported in the September 1967, December 1967, January 1968, September 1968, and October 1969 issues of the DIGEST.

NEGOTIATED PROFESSIONAL IMPROVEMENT LEAVES CONTAINED IN COMPREHENSIVE CLASSROOM TEACHER AGREEMENTS

The following analyses of four short-term and long-term, paid and unpaid professional improvement leaves drawn from 978 comprehensive classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year present an over-all picture of the nature and incidence of such leaves in contracts negotiated in school systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more. Of the 978 reported agreements, 765 (78.2 percent) offered either individually or in various combinations long-term sabbatical, and research, study, and travel leaves and/or short-term school visitation and educational conference leaves. Table 1 presents the incidence of the four types of leaves among the 978 agreements analyzed, and indicates the paid or unpaid nature of each leave.

TABLE 1.—PROFESSIONAL IMPROVEMENT LEAVES CONTAINED IN 978 COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS, 1968-69

Type of leave	Agreements containing designated content
	Number	Percent
1	2	3
TOTAL NUMBER OF COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS	978	100.0%
TOTAL AGREEMENTS CONTAINING PROFESSIONAL IMPROVEMENT LEAVE PROVISIONS	765	78.2
Long-term leaves	692	70.8
Sabbatical (with pay)	563	57.6
Research, study, and travel (without pay)	295	30.2
Short-term leaves	428	43.8
Educational conferences (with or without pay)	322	32.9
School visitation (with or without pay)	325	33.2

Short-term leaves for school visitation and educational conferences were negotiated in 428 (43.8 percent) of the 978 agreements. These leaves most always were paid and were granted as needed (and approved) for a few days per school year. A majority (90.6 percent) of the agreements containing short-term leave provisions also offered one or both long-term leaves; of this majority, 64.3 percent offered sabbatical leaves.

Long-term sabbatical, and research, study, and travel leaves were found in 692 (70.8 percent) of the 978 agreements analyzed. Sabbatical leave (always with pay) was contained in 563 agreements (57.6 percent) thereby making it the most frequently negotiated type of professional improvement leave. Research, study, and travel leaves were negotiated in 295 agreements; of these, 166 agreements (56.3 percent) also offered sabbatical leave. Both types of long-term leaves generally were granted for one semester or more, for similar purposes, and under similar conditions. However, those research, study, and travel leaves found in agreements without sabbatical leave provisions tended to have stringent requirements nearly identical to sabbatical leave requirements. Conversely, research, study, and travel leaves contained in agreements which also had sabbatical leave provisions tended to have more lenient requirements; for instance, the years of prior service required before leave often were fewer than for sabbatical leave, and the teacher taking leave usually was under no obligation to return to the school system.

Of the 563 agreements containing sabbatical leave provisions, 348 (61.8 percent) also granted teachers one or more of the other three types of professional improvement leaves. Table 2 indicates the various combinations of professional improvement leaves found in agreements with sabbatical leave provisions.

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: SABBATICAL LEAVE PROVISIONS

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 comprehensive agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with an enrollment of 1,000 or more reveals that 563 agreements (57.6 percent) contained sabbatical leave provisions. Sabbatical leave is defined as a leave of absence with full or partial pay for one semester or more for the purpose of improving the professional skills of teachers, administrators, or other professional school system personnel. Table 1 presents a state-by-state breakdown of the number of comprehensive agreements containing sabbatical leave provisions.

All sabbatical leave provisions found in the 563 agreements were analyzed for rate of pay and length of leave. A comparison with similar data derived from agreements effective during the 1967-68 school year reveals that the percentage of comprehensive agreements with sabbatical leave provisions increased 17.1 percentage points between the two school years. Table 2 relates the rate of pay to the length of leave and compares these data for the 1967-68 and 1968-69 school years. The salient difference between the provisions analyzed each year is the 16.2 percentage point increase in provisions allowing a combination of full pay for one semester and partial pay for two semesters of sabbatical leave.

*These figures are based upon the total number of comprehensive agreements containing sabbatical leave provisions.

A sample of 140 sabbatical leave provisions was selected for further analysis of written, negotiated content. The selected provisions were taken from every fourth agreement of the 563 agreements containing sabbatical leave provisions, and the analysis herein makes no attempt to cross-reference these provisions with any other pertinent content found in a given agreement. Of the 140 selected provisions, two established joint teacher-board study committees to review or formulate sabbatical leave policy, and two tied existing board policy into the agreement. The remaining 136 provisions contained specific negotiated content concerning sabbatical leaves.

As indicated in Table 3, specific provisional content governing sabbatical leaves can be classified into five broad areas: the reasons for which leave is granted, requirements governing a teacher's eligibility for such leave, procedures for the selection of leave recipients, benefits received during the leave, and conditions upon return from sabbatical leave. The categories listed in Table 3 (as well as those in succeeding tables) are not mutually exclusive since the 140 sabbatical leave provisions nearly always contained more than one feature.

Purposes

Sabbatical leaves generally are granted for a number of purposes. Of the 140 selected provisions, 95 (67.9 percent) stipulated that the leave could be used for professional study, 50 (35.7 percent) provided sabbatical leave for purposes of travel, and 39 (27.9 percent) mentioned research as a purpose for such leave. In 10 provisions (7.1 percent) writing served as a possible purpose for sabbatical leave, while 15 provisions (10.7 percent) allowed leave for professional improvement purposes, including participation in "worthwhile programs" deemed beneficial to the school or system. In addition, five provisions (3.6 percent) considered employment in another teaching position or in a related field of work as purpose for sabbatical leave. Rather than strictly defining the purposes for which leave could be granted, 12 agreements allowed leave for "other" purposes contingent upon approval of the designated person or body. Forty-five provisions simply referred to the leave as sabbatical without further definition.

Requirements

As indicated in Table 4, 121 agreements containing eligibility requirements for sabbatical leave specified that the teacher seeking leave must have served a certain number of years in the school system. Of these provisions, 83 stipulated that the service be continuous, and the remaining 38 provisions did not indicate the nature of service. A majority (118) of the 121 provisions required prior service of five to seven years. In an August 1969 arbitration case a contract clause stating that "teachers who have served seven years of full service . . . shall be eligible to apply for sabbatical leave" was interpreted to mean that a teacher could apply for leave during his seventh year of service, but would be ineligible to take the leave until completion of that year. The arbitrator accordingly directed the Putnam Valley (N.Y.) education board to consider the merits of a sabbatical leave application filed by a teacher during her seventh year of service.

Some provisions stipulated that the teacher seeking leave be tenured, while others required the teacher to have a life or permanent certificate. A few provisions specified that the teacher must have achieved a certain professional level (an M.A. degree or the equivalent in credit hours) before applying for sabbatical leave. Another selection criterion was the stipulation that the applicant be a 12-month employee. Only three of the 140 provisions analyzed set a maximum age limit for eligible sabbatical leave applicants.

When applicants' personal qualifications were found equal, they could be selected according to various combinations of factors such as seniority, whether they previously had taken a long-term leave, and the order in which they made application. In most cases, seniority was a deciding factor only when all other qualifications were equal; a few agreements stipulated that seniority was the dominant selection criterion. A second Putnam Valley, New York, arbitration case involved the local board's violation of a negotiated clause providing that if sabbatical leave applications exceeded 5 percent of the teacher unit, "seniority of service in this district and date of application" would determine leave recipients. When the board denied leave to a teacher whose application was received three weeks prior to that of a teacher with equal seniority, it contended that additional factors such as age and loyal service to the district also could be considered in evaluating the application. But the arbitrator held that since the parties "chose to confine the solution [to excessive applications] to the two criteria indicated and no others" and since the disputed 1969-70 clause was merely carried over from the previous agreement, acceptance of the board's interpretation of the clause "would be tantamount to reverting to 1967-68, ignoring thereby the obvious purpose for the introduction of the clause, i.e. to delineate the criteria to be applicable in place of the discretion of the Board."

Another commonly negotiated criterion to be used in determining the eligibility of sabbatical leave applicants was program of study. Of the 69 provisions including this requirement, 36 indicated that the proposed program would be reviewed before candidate selection, and 33 provisions stated that the program would be judged according to its potential value to the school system. The quality of the teacher's previous service was a factor in 19 provisions, although none named the criterion for evaluation. Another requirement appearing in some agreements was the stipulation that the applicant be accepted in a grant-in-aid program. Table 4 indicates the incidence of specific eligibility requirements among the 140 pertinent provisions.

Screening and Selection

Of the 140 selected agreements, 126 contained provisions outlining various procedures for the selection of sabbatical leave recipients. Eighty-six provisions specified the final date for filing a leave application; six of these provisions additionally allowed the closing date to be waived under unusual circumstances, such as late acceptance in a financial aid program. Although all but two of the 62 provisions indicating who ultimately selects leave recipients stated that this power rested with the school board, applicants usually were to be initially screened and approved by the superintendent or other administrators. Less frequently a joint teacher-administrator committee conducted the preliminary screening, and in a few agreements a teacher committee performed that function.

The maximum number of teachers allowed to take sabbatical leave in any one year was stipulated in 107 provisions as either a negotiated figure, or a percentage differing between and ranging from 1 percent of the teaching staff to 5 percent of the total professional staff. In addition, some provisions stated that sabbatical leaves were to be apportioned among various buildings, administrative areas, or professional categories. Although the grievance procedures in many agreements apply to sabbatical leave provisions, only two provisions directly referred to use of the grievance procedure: one prohibited it, and one permitted it. Table 5 lists the various screening and selection procedures.

Benefits

Benefits negotiated for sabbatical leave recipients most frequently concerned salary. All but four of the selected provisions (those establishing committees and referring to board policies) allowed teachers a stated amount while on sabbatical leave: 10 provided only full pay, 34 provided full or partial pay, and 70 agreements provided only partial pay. While the rates of partial pay varied, 96 provisions (a majority of those providing only partial pay and those providing a combination of full or partial pay) stipulated payment at 50 percent of the teacher's regular salary. Others provided rates of pay at 33-1/3 percent, 55 percent, 60 percent, 66-2/3 percent, 70 percent, 75 percent, and 90 percent of salary. A few provisions did not define the rate of pay, and four gave either mathematical formulas or a flat rate. Of the 104 provisions analyzed, 51 stated that a teacher retains some fringe benefits during sabbatical leave; some made a general statement, while others listed specific benefits. Table 6 provides a breakdown of the payments provided and fringe benefits retained during sabbatical leave.

Return

In a number of agreements, negotiated conditions relative to a teacher's return from sabbatical leave included a statement that the teacher must submit to school authorities a report or records and transcripts which describe, evaluate, or verify his leave. A majority (117) of the 140 selected provisions required the teacher to serve a certain number of years in the school system (usually one to three years) for each year of sabbatical leave taken, unless unusual circumstances prevented fulfillment of such an obligation. Most provisions mentioning job placement upon return from leave specified that the teacher would have his same position or be given a position comparable to his former one. Five provisions guaranteed the same job on return. Of the four provisions listed in the "other" job placement catetory in Table 7, one stated that the returning teacher was not guaranteed his same position, two provided that the position on return was to be one of benefit to the school and its pupils, and one provision offered the teacher the same or a better position. All but one of the 68 agreements mentioning salary on return from sabbatical leave stipulated that the leave period was to be considered as teaching experience. Table 7 indicates the nature and incidence of various conditions affecting teachers returning from sabbatical leave.

Four selected sabbatical leave provisions are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Westport School District, Westport, Connecticut Sabbatical Leave

I. Authorization

A. Sabbatical leave of absence shall be granted to members of the Westport public school professional and administrative staff subject to provisions of Sections II to VI below. The granting of such leave is subject to the approval of the Board of Education upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools, when, in their considered judgment, the professional competence of the staff member and the general welfare of the public schools will be benefited.

B. Sabbatical leave shall be granted for a period of not less than one (1) full semester nor for more than two (2) full consecutive semesters.

II. Eligibility and Qualifications

A. An applicant must hold a life or permanent certificate.

B. An applicant must have seven (7) consecutive years of service as a full-time staff member in the Westport public school system.

C. Subsequent sabbatical leaves will be authorized only after eligibility has been re-established by an additional seven (7) years of service as a full-time staff member.

D. No more than two per cent (2%) of the professional employees will be granted sabbatical leave for any school year.

E. Insofar as possible, a proportionate division of leaves shall be granted to the various groups of the professional staff.

F. The applicant must file with the Secretary of the Board of Education a written agreement that he will remain in the service of the Westport Public School system, subject to Section VII below, for a period of one school year after the expiration of the leave. Conditions governing default of this agreement are given in Section VII below.

III. Purpose of Sabbatical Leave

A. Sabbatical leave is granted to professional personnel to permit them an opportunity for improving their ability to render educational service. Such improvement is usually achieved by formal study, research and/or writing, and travel. Applications for other types of experiences will be considered on their merits and may be approved by the Board of Education upon the recommendation of the Superintendent.

B. Application requirements and procedures:

1. Applications for sabbatical leave must be filed on the prescribed form prepared by the Assistant Superintendent.
2. Applications are to be filed with the Sabbatical Leave Committee through the Assistant Superintendent for Personnel.
3. Applications for leaves beginning in September must be filed by December 1 of the previous year. The Board of Education, however, reserves the right to grant exceptions.
4. The Superintendent shall give notice to the applicant whether the request is granted or rejected within sixty (60) days after the due date of filing the application.
5. The application shall contain:
   a. A statement of the purpose of the leave both with regard to the teacher and the Westport schools.
   b. An outline and discussion of the program.
   c. Evidence of professional sponsorship as indicated in Section C following.
   d. Written comments on the purpose of the leave by the administrator (principal, director, department chairman) with whom the matter appropriately rests.
   e. A statement regarding any compensation the teacher expects to earn or be awarded during the period of the leave and of the conditions to be fulfilled by the candidate in this condition.

C. Each applicant shall offer, whenever possible, evidence of professional sponsorship. In the case of formal study, such evidence would be a statement of acceptance by a university in a planned program.

For research programs a statement of the awarding of a grant, or a statement from a recognized authority that he has reviewed the proposal and will undertake to sponsor it, should be submitted.

Proposals for writing should present evidence of prior commitment by a publisher, or a commitment from a recognized authority to serve as an editorial consultant.

For travel where professional sponsorship is inappropriate, the applicant shall present a statement of the outcomes expected to be useful to the teacher and/or his colleagues in the school program.

D. Exceptions shall be granted at the discretion of the Superintendent and the Board of Education.

IV. Sabbatical Leave Committee

A. Applications and reports relative to sabbatical leave shall be handled by the Sabbatical Leave Committee. It shall be the duty of the Committee to make recommendations to the Superintendent on all applications for sabbatical leave.

B. The Sabbatical Leave Committee shall be constituted as follows:

1. There shall be six (6) members.

2. The Assistant Superintendent for Personnel shall be a member and act as chairman.
3. The President of the Westport Education Association shall be a member.
4. Two additional members shall be appointed by the Superintendent of schools.
5. Two additional members shall be appointed by the Executive Board of the Westport Education Association.

V. Requirements and Status While on Leave

A. Financial

1. Compensation shall be three-quarters of the salary which would be received if the staff member were performing his normal duties in the school system.
2. Grants and/or other subsidies obtained by the staff member during the period of leave shall not reduce the above compensation.
3. Payments including all benefits (Blue Cross, CMS, Major Medical, retirements, etc.) shall be made in the same manner and at the same time as the payments to other staff members.
4. The staff member shall keep the Business Office informed of his mailing address.
5. The leave shall also operate as a leave of absence without pay from all other school activities.

B. Reports

1. The staff member shall immediately request approval from the Sabbatical Leave Committee for any substantial changes in the original approved planned program, including the award of a grant or other compensation not contained in the original application. Full particulars about and reasons for the change must be supplied. A change will be approved only if it does not substantially alter the original purposes of the leave or change is required and is beyond the control of the staff member.

   The Committee's reaction to the change in plans shall be submitted to the Superintendent and the Board of Education so that they may take any necessary action. The candidate shall be notified of the decision of the Superintendent and the Board at the earliest possible moment.

   Reports shall be filed with the Sabbatical Leave Committee, through the Assistant Superintendent for Personnel, as follows:

   a. Sometime between June 15 and July 15, a report confirming the status of the leave as originally approved. Any changes should be reported at this time.
   b. In February, a progress report at the approximate mid-point of the program, containing sufficient information to confirm that the leave is proceeding according to the approved plan.
   c. In June, or at the completion of the program, a final report, containing sufficient information to demonstrate that the leave has fulfilled the approved plan and the general purpose for which the sabbatical leave is granted.

C. Termination

1. A sabbatical leave, once granted, may not be terminated before the date of expiration of the approved plan, except as otherwise provided herein.

   The leave may be terminated by mutual agreement of the staff member and the Board of Education.

   The leave may be terminated by the Board of Education if the staff member is discharged under the terms of the so-called tenure law. In this instance, the staff member shall be required as part of the agreement to make restitution of funds paid to him while on leave.

VI. Requirements and Status Upon Returning

A. At the expiration of a sabbatical leave, the staff member shall be restored to his position or to a position of like nature, seniority, status, and pay, provided that the staff member remains eligible for reinstatement.

B. A term of sabbatical leave shall entitle a staff member to an automatic salary schedule increment, or to any other salary increases which would normally have accrued to him at the beginning of the next full year of school following his return to service in the system.

C. If a staff member does not remain in the Westport School System for one (1) year immediately following his sabbatical leave, he shall, within one (1) year repay to the Board of Education an amount of money which shall bear the same relation to the compensation paid as the unexpired position portion of service bears to one school year (figured as 10 months).

D. Each staff member returning from sabbatical leave shall file a final report with the Sabbatical Leave Committee not later than one (1) month after the day on which the staff member again takes up active service. The report shall include the names of the institutions attended, courses or activities pursued, credits received, experience gained, or the itinerary of travel, together with an appraisal of the professional value of the activities while on leave and the manner in which the knowledge and experience gained may be applied to the benefit of the school system. A staff member shall not be considered as having completed the requirements of the sabbatical leave until his final report has been approved by the Sabbatical Leave Committee. This final report shall be transmitted to the Board of Education.

Dracut School System, Dracut, Massachusetts

Section 17–Sabbatical Leave Policy

1. The Dracut School Committee, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools, may grant a Sabbatical Leave of Absence for approved study, research or travel to members of the Professional Staff who have completed at least six (6) consecutive years of experience in the Dracut Public Schools.

2. Prior to the granting of such a Sabbatical Leave of Absence, the member of the Professional Staff shall enter into a written agreement with the School Committee that upon the termination of such leave he will return to service in the Dracut Public Schools for a period equal to twice the length of such leave and that, in default of completing such service, he will refund to the town of Dracut an amount equal to such proportion of salary received by him while on leave as the amount of service not actually rendered as agreed bears to the whole amount of service which was agreed to be rendered. If his failure to serve in the Dracut Public Schools for a period equal to twice the length of his Sabbatical Leave following the official termination of such leave is due to his illness, disability, or death, or if he be discharged from his position by the Dracut School Committee, the member of the Professional Staff shall be released from the terms of the aforesaid agreement.

3. The purpose of the Sabbatical Leave Policy shall be:
   a. Recognition of professional excellence as a teacher or administrator.
   b. Encouragement of professional growth for teachers and administrators.
   c. Improvement of the Dracut Public Schools.

4. Applications for Sabbatical Leave shall be submitted to the Superintendent of Schools in writing, and in such form as may be required by the Superintendent, no later than November 1st of the school year previous to the school year for which the leave is being requested.

5. Not more than three Sabbatical leaves of absence shall be granted for any school year.

In case the number of applications shall exceed the number of Sabbatical Leaves of Absence that the School Committee plans to grant for a particular school year, the recommendation of the Superintendent shall be made in accordance with the following principles of selection considered as a collective entity:
   a. Length of Service, with preference in the selection process being given to those longest in the service of the Dracut Public Schools.
   b. The award of scholarships, fellowships or grants by a college or university.
   c. Participation in an approved program of Advanced Graduate Study leading to a higher degree, certificate, or level of academic concentration.
   d. Educational value of the proposed Sabbatical Leave of Absence to the Dracut Public Schools.
   e. Distribution of Sabbatical Leaves of Absence by Grade Level or Administrative Areas of Responsibility, with care being taken that the allocation of grants to any particular group shall not be comparatively excessive.

6. During the course of a Sabbatical Leave of Absence, summary monthly reports of progress should be made to the Superintendent of Schools.

Upon completion of a Sabbatical Leave of Absence, the member of the Professional Staff shall submit a comprehensive report to the Superintendent of Schools containing transcripts of all college or university work done while on leave, or any other pertinent data or interpretative material considered essential to an evaluation of his program.

7. The period of time associated with the Sabbatical Leave of Absence shall be considered an equivalent period of regular professional service in the Dracut Public Schools for purposes of salary determination, and the scheduled annual increments will be given on this basis.

8. Members of the Professional Staff on a Sabbatical Leave of Absence shall retain tenure status, and all other prescribed rights or benefits which would otherwise be theirs if they were actively teaching in the Dracut Public Schools during the period of leave.

9. Sabbatical Leaves of Absence may be combined with programs of study, research, writing, or travel which are financed by outside, non-commercial agencies or organizations such as colleges, universities or foundations.

10. A member of the Professional Staff who has been granted a Sabbatical Leave of Absence must serve for an additional six (6) consecutive years of service in the Dracut Public Schools before being eligible for consideration for a second Sabbatical Leave.

11. Sabbatical Leaves of Absence shall not be granted for less than one full semester nor more than one full school year.

12. A member of the Professional Staff on Sabbatical Leave of Absence shall be entitled to receive as compensation the amount of one-half (½) the salary which he would have earned in the service of the Dracut Public Schools if he had not been on a Leave of Absence.

For Teachers, "salary" will be interpreted to mean the total annual salary, excluding any supplemental payments for special assignments such as extra-curricular duties, that they would have been paid for the particular year during which they were on Sabbatical Leave.

For Administrators, "salary" will be interpreted to mean the total annual salary that they would have been paid for the particular year during which they were on Sabbatical Leave.

13. Members of the Professional Staff on Sabbatical Leave of Absence shall not engage in remunerative work while on leave except as hereinafter provided. Scholarships and fellowships in approved colleges and universities which do not interfere with the prescribed program of professional improvement are excepted. If other remunerative work is desired by the member of the Professional Staff while on a Sabbatical Leave of Absence, arrangements satisfactory to the Superintendent of Schools shall be made.

Nothing in this Sabbatical Leave Policy is to be interpreted as guaranteeing a Sabbatical Leave of Absence to any member, or group of members, of the Professional Staff, and the School Committee reserves the right to limit the number of such leaves to be granted in any given school year.

The Dracut School Committee shall effect a decision on all applications for Sabbatical Leave by the following designated date in any calendar year: no later than the Regular April meeting.

UFSD No. 10, Baldwin, New York

Article XI–Sabbatical Leave

Beginning in the 1969-1970 school year the following terms will become effective and replace the Board's existing policy:

A. Sabbatical leave will be granted for purposes of Board-approved programs of study. After every seven (7) years of full time continuous employment, a teacher shall be eligible for a sabbatical leave during one or both terms in the school year. During this leave, the teacher shall be considered to be in the employ of the District. Teachers who are on sabbatical leave for a single semester shall receive full salary for the duration of the leave; teachers who are on sabbatical for both semesters of a school year shall receive one half of their annual salary for the duration of the leave. Applications for sabbatical leave must be filed on or before March 1, 1969. Each application shall detail the program of study that is to be followed.

No more than 12 sabbatical leaves during any one school year will be approved by the Board. Of these 12 leaves, no more than six (6) shall be for a single semester at full pay. Should applications in either or both categories (i.e. full and/or half year) exceed the limitations set forth herein, preference will be given on the basis of length of continuous service in the District, and the number of years of service without a sabbatical leave or since the last such leave.

B. A teacher, upon return from sabbatical leave, shall be restored to his former position, if possible, or to a position of like nature and status, and shall be placed at the same position on the salary schedule as he would have been on had he taught in the District during such period.

C. Upon return from sabbatical leave, a teacher must serve in the District at least one school year.

Greece Central School District No. 1, Rochester, New York

Article XIII–Sabbatical Leave

In the interest of rewarding professional performance and encouraging independent research, achievement and professional growth, the Board shall adhere to the following policies in respect to granting sabbatical leaves to teachers who have served Greece Central School District #1 for five (5) or more cumulative years.

1. No more than three (3) per cent of the staff, with tenure, will be granted sabbatical leave at any one time.
2. A leave may be granted for a time not to exceed one (1) year. All leaves shall be at full pay. When a full year of leave is granted, full tuition shall be reimbursed by the District for courses undertaken at an accredited university or college and providing the tuition is not paid for by a source other than the teacher himself. Teachers on leave shall be at full pay or reimbursement at a rate which is offset by fellowship, grant or other remuneration.
3. All persons taking leave shall remain an employee of the school district and shall be entitled to all benefits.
4. A recommending committee of sabbatical leave applicants will be composed of three (3) teachers appointed by the executive committee of the GCTA and three (3) representatives chosen by the Superintendent.
5. In passing on applications for sabbatical leave, the committee will apply the following criteria: benefit to district; improvement of instruction.
6. Any teacher who desires to apply for sabbatical leave shall make such application on a form prescribed by the Superintendent and shall submit such application to the Superintendent by January 15 immediately prior to the beginning of the school year for which the leave is sought. Notification of sabbatical leave shall be made known to the applicant by March 15.
7. Unsuccessful applicants for sabbatical leave shall be informed in writing of their rejection, at the same time successful applicants are notified.
8. A teacher on sabbatical leave may not engage in remunerative activities without express permission of the school board.
9. A teacher who takes a sabbatical leave shall not voluntarily terminate his employment in Greece Central School District #1 for a three (3) year period following the expiration of such leave.

SELECTED RESEARCH, STUDY, AND TRAVEL LEAVE PROVISIONS FOUND IN COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS

An analysis of the 978 comprehensive agreements reported in school systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more in 1968-69 indicates that 295 systems (30.2 percent) negotiated a long-term unpaid leave of absence for research, study, and travel. Similar in purpose to a sabbatical leave, this type of professional improvement leave often is granted to teachers who are unable to fulfill sabbatical leave requirements. Upon a written request and at the discretion of the school board, teachers with a minimum of two to three years' teaching experience or service in the system may be granted a research, study, and travel leave for one to two years. The minimum length of time allowed generally is one semester. As such a leave is considered a period of active duty, the teacher returns to his same position or a comparable one, and either remains on his same salary step or is raised to the next highest step on the salary schedule. Some provisions stipulate that, upon expiration of the leave, a teacher's accumulated sick leave shall be returned to him, while others pay health care and retirement benefits during the leave of absence. Generally, a research, study, and travel leave must directly benefit the school system and lead to an increase in teaching effectiveness.

Specific items contained in various negotiated provisions include:

- Application for leave must be made well in advance (30 to 60 days) of the actual leave date and/or by a specified annual date so that a suitable replacement can be obtained.
- Leaves generally will be granted only on a school-year basis, although the board may, at its discretion and in the interests of the school system, allow a leave to begin or end in mid-year.

- Many provisions stipulate that only tenured teachers are eligible for research, study, and travel leaves, but some also extend eligibility to probationary teachers.
- Reasons for which leave may be granted include a program of formal study at an accredited institution, educational research, either foreign or domestic travel, and in the event a teacher receives a fellowship, internship, or scholarship.
- A teacher requesting such leave must submit a written plan of study or travel to the specified administrator for approval.
- A joint committee will be responsible for recommending such leaves and working out the details of each leave.
- Only a specified maximum number of teachers (ranging from six to ten) will be granted leave in any given school year. Seniority and the quality of the program submitted are factors to be considered in selection.
- A requested leave may not be unreasonably denied, but if a denial is deemed unreasonable it may be grieved.
- In some provisions, a leave may be renewed for a specified period of time, or may be extended for one additional year.
- Failure to return to active service upon expiration of the leave shall be considered a resignation, barring mitigating circumstances.

Reprinted below are six negotiated research, study, and travel leave provisions. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Cheshire Public Schools, Cheshire, Connecticut

Article XII, Section 12.1–Leaves of Absence

Educational leaves of absence: Teachers who have demonstrated superior capacity for five years under the provisions of the Cheshire Evaluation Plan may apply for an extended leave of absence without pay for purposes of increasing professional competence by making written application to the Superintendent. The Board, on recommendation of the Superintendent, may grant such leave for not less than one semester and not longer than one school year.

a. All applications for educational leave of absence must be submitted to the Superintendent not less than sixty (60) school days before the leave is to begin.

b. Applicants must satisfy the Board that the study and/or travel or work experiences for which leave is to be granted will benefit the school system and lead to an increase in teaching effectiveness.

c. A recipient of educational leave of absence will also:

1. Be guaranteed the right to return to the teaching position or equivalent that he/she has occupied during the school year prior to the year of leave, and,
2. On return from leave, be placed on the salary schedule step which he would occupy had he been teaching during the leave time.

Joliet Public Schools, Joliet, Illinois

Article V, Section V–Leave Policies–Professional Improvement Leave

All tenure teachers shall be eligible for a one year leave of absence, without pay, for professional improvement. The applicant for such leave shall show a program of formal study, research work, or travel, either foreign or domestic. This type of leave of absence may be granted to a maximum of six (6) teachers per school year. All requests for such leave must be submitted in writing prior to March 1.

A Professional Improvement Leave Committee will be formed to work out details of leave and to recommend such leaves. This Committee will consist of the Superintendent, a principal and three (3) Union representatives. The Superintendent will chair the Committee. Seniority within District 86 and quality and relevance of the program presented shall be considered in granting such leaves.

Dartmouth Public Schools, North Dartmouth, Massachusetts

Article XX, Section B–Extended Leaves of Absence

A leave of absence without pay of up to two (2) years will be granted to any tenured teacher enrolled full time in an accredited college or university for graduate study in the individual's field of instruction, if such study will directly benefit the school system. Upon return from such leave, a teacher will be considered as if he were actively employed by the Committee during the leave and will be placed on the salary schedule at the level he would have achieved if he had not been absent. Such leaves will be granted on a school year basis unless the Committee feels it would be in the best interests of the school system to allow them to begin or end in mid-year.

Flint Community Schools, Flint, Michigan

Article XIV, Section 1–Leaves of Absence–Study Leave

A teacher may submit a plan for a year of fully scheduled academic study which substantially contributes to his competence in his teaching assignment. Such plan will be reviewed by the division head and if approved the leave shall be granted. One year experience credit will be granted upon presentation of evidence of successful completion of the plan as previously approved by the division head.

Only one such leave will be granted to a teacher unless he is requested to take additional study leave by the Board.

No more than ten study leaves for which experience increments are granted will be approved in any one academic year. Denial of study leave may be grieved on the grounds that such denial is unreasonable, provided that no denial shall be unreasonable if ten study leaves have been granted in that academic year.

Buffalo Public Schools, Buffalo, New York

Article X, Section A(1)–Leaves of Absence for Study, Travel, and Special Services

A. Leaves of Absence–Leaves of absence may be granted to permanent and probationary employees of the Board of Education as follows:

1. Leaves of Absence for Study, Travel, and Special Services–Leaves of absence with, or without, pay may be granted to probationary and permanent employees of the Board for study, travel or special services when approved in advance by the Superintendent of Schools under the following conditions:

a. Leaves for Study–Study for which leaves may be granted shall be limited to study in an accredited institution of higher learning or under a fellowship grant from a recognized foundation or a research organization engaged in educational research. Plans for such study shall be submitted to the Superintendent in writing in advance, and shall be so designed as to improve the individual's skill and competence in his area of service.

b. Leaves for Travel–Leaves for travel may be granted for the following reasons:
   1. Travel conducted by an accredited institution of higher learning for which course credit is granted by the institution.
   2. Travel planned cooperatively with the Superintendent of Schools, plans for which shall have been submitted in writing and approved in advance. Such plans shall constitute a predetermined program designed to improve the individual's competence.

c. Leaves for Special Service–Special service leaves may be granted for full time service when such service is directly related to the teacher's area of work. Such leaves shall be limited to special services performed for or with an institution of higher learning, a foundation or research organization, a state education department, the United States Office of Education, the Peace Corps, or similar institutions or organizations, plans for which shall have been submitted in writing and approved in advance. Such plans shall constitute a predetermined program designed to improve the individual's competence. Leaves may not be granted for the purpose of accepting a regular position in another school system, except for approved participation in an exchange teacher program.

d. Time during which the individual is on leave for study, travel or special service, as described in this Article, or on political leave as described below, shall be credited toward increment. Sick time allowance may not be used, nor does it accrue in connection with leave for study, travel or special service.

2. Application for Leaves–Formal application for leaves of absence specified in Paragraphs (a.), (b.) and (c.) of this subdivision are to be submitted to the Superintendent on prescribed forms at least thirty (30) days before the effective date of leave; provided that application for leaves effective

September 1 must be filed no later than the preceding July 1. Such application shall certify (i) purpose of the leave, (ii) plans for the use of the leave, (iii) date upon which the individual shall return to service, and (iv) agreement that failure to return to active service on the expiration of the leave granted shall be deemed by the Board of Education and the individual to constitute a resignation unless such failure is the result of illness or some other factor that precludes the good intentions of the teacher to return to service on the date of expiration.

Bristol Public Schools, Bristol, Rhode Island

Article X, Section 3–Leaves of Absence–Extended Leaves

A. Leaves of absence without pay may be granted upon application, by teachers on regular appointment for the following purposes:

1. Study related to teacher's certification field.
2. Study to meet eligibility requirements for a certification in the teaching field, other than that held by the teacher.

B. Upon return from any excused leave, a teacher will resume all retained credits that were held at the time that the excused leave was granted. Upon the teacher's return he will be assigned to the same position which he held at the time said leave commenced, if available, or if not, to a substantially equivalent position, if available, or if not, to be assured the first occurring vacancy in any position from which he is qualified and which he requests.

SELECTED SCHOOL VISITATION AND EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE LEAVE PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS

Of the 978 school systems which filed a copy of their 1968-69 comprehensive agreement in the NEA Research Division depository, 428 (43.8 percent) negotiated a short-term paid professional improvement leave for the purpose of school visitations, educational conferences, or both. Such leaves generally are granted upon the individual teacher's request, with the prior approval of the supervising principal or the superintendent, and in the interest of providing an opportunity for professional improvement. Table 1 presents a state-by-state breakdown of the number of agreements containing such provisions.

School visitation leaves allow the teacher to observe new or different teaching techniques, and gain ideas for improving his own classroom instruction methods; these leaves usually are granted for one or two days and include visits within the teacher's school, within the system, or outside the system. Educational conference leave also generally allows the teacher one to two days of paid leave to attend or participate in professional and educational meetings, departmental and state education department conferences, or specialized panels and lectures. Many provisions stipulate that the visit or conference for which the teacher requests leave must be of personal value and/or related to the teacher's area of expertise, or must benefit the over-all effectiveness of the system's instructional program.

School visitation and educational conference leaves most often are specified as separate leaves. In some provisions leave is deducted from the teacher's sick leave accumulation or from other leaves, such as personal business leave or a professional leave allowance. Table 2 indicates the number of agreements specifying the length and nature of the leave allowance.

TABLE 2.—AGREEMENTS SPECIFYING THE LENGTH AND NATURE OF SCHOOL VISITATION AND/OR EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE LEAVES, 1968-69

Many provisions state that reasonable expenses incurred during attendance at an educational conference will be reimbursed by the local school board following approval of a request accompanied by a voucher. Some agreements allow reimbursement only if funds have been budgeted for that purpose, while others provide a flat daily rate to defray the costs of travel, lodging, meals, and registration fees. In a recent arbitration case the contractual right of the Griffith (N.Y.) Institute Faculty Association to participate in policy changes was found violated by the superintendent's unilateral determination that the local board would no longer reimburse teachers for expenses incurred while attending a state-wide departmental conference. Although the Association agreed that the superintendent was to make the final decision on policy changes, the arbitrator held that under a contract allowing teachers to "participate cooperatively" in discussions leading to policy changes, the superintendent could not unilaterally depart from past practice.

Specific items negotiated in selected school visitation and educational conference leave provisions include:

- Requests for leave must be filed with the principal or superintendent and approved well in advance of the actual leave day so that a teacher's absence will not interfere with the school's educational program.
- Leave will be granted subject to the availability of substitute teachers.
- If permission for a requested leave is denied, the teacher will be given written reasons for the denial. However, permission shall not be unreasonably withheld.
- Some provisions allow leave only for tenure personnel, while others grant additional leave days to probationary teachers.

- Leave will not be granted immediately preceding or following a vacation or holiday, or during the first and final weeks of the school year.
- Unused visitation days may accumulate to a specified maximum, or may be used for attending professional and educational conferences.
- Oral or written reports must be submitted after the visitation or conference day.

Examples of negotiated school visitation and educational conference leave provisions are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Scottsdale Public Schools, Scottsdale, Arizona

Article XI, Section 4(D)–Personnel Policies and Procedures, Leaves of Absence–Professional Day Leaves

1. Two days leave with full pay will be granted to each member of the certificated staff for the following purposes:
   a. School and classroom visitations
   b. Participation in an educational panel or lecture
   c. Graduate Testing
   d. Other requests are considered on individual merit
2. Procedures and Limitations–The following shall be adhered to in the granting of Professional Day Leaves:
   a. All leaves will be limited to those which do not interfere with the educational program of the school and that the teacher, principal, and either Director of Elementary or Director of Secondary Education agree are of value to the staff member or to the school system.
   b. Leaves are to be planned so that a majority of teachers in a department or grade level in an individual school is not absent at the same time.
   c. The number of staff on leave on a given day is subject to the availability of qualified substitutes.
   d. Because of the uniqueness of the first week and final two weeks of the school year, only in extreme circumstances will Professional Day Leaves be granted during these times.
   e. All requests for Professional Day Leaves are submitted to the principal for approval at least two weeks prior to the date of the leave and three weeks for out-of-state requests.

Decatur School District No. 61, Decatur, Illinois

Article XI, Section I–Leaves of Absence–Visiting Day

A staff member may be allowed one (1) visiting day each year with full pay.

1. Visitation may be within or outside the Decatur School system at such place or places as present opportunity for growth in the staff member's field of work and must be mutually agreed by the staff member and the supervising administrator.
2. Visiting days may not be taken on the first or last day of school, on the first or second working day preceding or following a vacation or holiday or on days when final examinations are scheduled.
3. Unused visitation days may accumulate to a maximum of three (3) days.
4. The plan and report of the visitation should be a cooperative enterprise between the staff member and the supervising administrator.
5. On the approval of the supervising administrator, a staff member may use allowable visitation days for purposes of attending professional meetings.

Fort Wayne Community Schools, Fort Wayne, Indiana

Article XIV, Section B(6)–Absence and Paid Leave Policy–Paid Leave, Paid Professional Leave Days

An allocation of one (1) day for each five (5) teachers will be made to establish a bank of paid days to be assigned to each unit to be administered by the unit head. The total number of days allocated will not be less than the number of days obtained by dividing five (5) into the total number of full-time classroom teachers. The allocation for each unit will be rounded to the nearest whole number of days. After the total unit allocations are made, any unused remaining days will be administered by the Instruction Department under the Assistant Superintendent for Instruction to teachers who are not physically located in one particular unit. A teacher wishing to attend a professional meeting, workshop, conference, or seminar may request permission through his unit head to the Assistant Superintendent for instruction. If permission is granted, a substitute will be provided to replace the teacher using paid professional leave day or days.

The individual unit head may request professional leave days for a teacher without using the established bank of days so long as a substitute is not required to fill the vacancy created by the teacher who is attending a professional meeting, and so long as the educational program is not negatively affected.

A ten (10) dollar per day allowance will be made to supplement expenses incurred in using paid professional leave days if travel is outside a fifty-mile radius of Fort Wayne.

Buchanan Public Schools, Buchanan, Michigan

Article VIII, Section B(1)(2)(3)–Leave Pay–Absences Other Than Illness

1. A maximum of three school days per school year in addition to ten days annual sick leave shall be allowed for interschool visiting, intraschool visiting, professional meetings and conventions, according to the individual's need or affiliation. It shall be understood, however, that any member of the faculty officially designated by the school administration to attend a meeting or convention sponsored by an educational or professional organization shall be allowed all reasonable expenses. The time thus used shall not be considered part of the regular three-day allowance, and no deduction from salary shall be made for such absence. Any teacher wishing to use the above three days or any part of same should make arrangements with the administration in plenty of time to arrange for a substitute, etc.
2. This three-day allowance shall not be cumulative in any way.
3. Any half-day absence due to legitimate causes cited in the above paragraphs shall be considered a portion of this three-day allowance.

Niskayuna Public Schools, Schenectady, New York

Article XI, Sections E and F–Leaves–Educational Visitation; Educational Conferences and Out-of-District Travel

(Section E) As an opportunity for professional improvement, a teacher may be allowed three full days each year for educational visitation with no loss in pay. This will be granted on advance approval of the principal. Educational visitation includes visits to classrooms within or outside the Niskayuna System.

(Section F) Attendance at conferences called by the State Department is always encouraged and is automatically granted over and above the three days of Educational Visitation.

The Superintendent of Schools is authorized to approve out-of-district travel of teachers on school business under the following conditions:

1. Application is submitted in advance on forms provided by the district.
2. The application is approved by the principal.
3. Funds budgeted for this purpose.
4. The cost in time, in substitute service, if any, and in reimbursement of expense is consistent with the probable benefit to the educational program of the schools.

Cincinnati Public Schools, Cincinnati, Ohio

Article VI, Section 2–Teacher Absence–Visiting Days

Teachers may, with permission of the superintendent, be absent for not to exceed two days in any one year without loss of pay, except in the case of a beginning teacher who may be absent for not to exceed three days without loss of pay, for the purposes of studying the work of some other school or in some other place or institution in Cincinnati or elsewhere. The work to be observed shall be closely related to the regular duties of the teachers and there shall be good reason for believing that the visits will be of value to the schools.

No visiting day shall be allowed during the three school days immediately preceding or following a vacation or holiday, except under specific assignment by the superintendent, nor in any case or at any time when the work of the schools will be unduly interrupted or hampered thereby.

DISMISSAL OF PROBATIONARY TEACHERS WITHOUT SPECIFIC CHARGES AND A HEARING UPHELD

Taking issue with recent decisions dealing with the dismissal of nontenure teachers, the Massachusetts Supreme Court upheld the Boston School Committee's dismissal of six nontenure teachers without prior notice of specific charges and without an opportunity for a hearing on the merits of the decision to dismiss. While plaintiffs produced two cases ruling that a probationary teacher constitutionally is entitled to a hearing upon dismissal, the court found no denial of due process or equal protection of the laws in the instant dismissals and held that "most of the cases in which the question has been considered have concluded that in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a probationary teacher may be dismissed without a hearing."

The six probationary teachers had been assigned to a predominately black elementary school which became the object of a community control controversy at the beginning of the 1968-69 school year. On September 5, 1968 (the second day of school), police prevented demonstrators from entering the school building; the demonstrators led pupils to a neighboring community school. The six probationary teachers joined the pupils and taught classes at the "liberation school" for the entire day "without informing, consulting with, or obtaining the consent of their superiors at the school."

As a result, the six teachers were refused admittance to the elementary school on September 6 and were informed by the superintendent of a seven-day suspension for their "unauthorized absence" of the previous day. Later that day, plaintiffs were told that a hearing "on your suspension" would be held September 11. No additional notice was given the teachers, nor were any specific charges levied against them.

At the September 11 hearing, plaintiffs sought a continuance and requested a public hearing. The Boston School Committee, however, voted to terminate their employment 30 days after delivery of notice and additionally suspended the six for the 30-day period for "conduct unbecoming teachers." While a closed hearing was granted by the committee on September 25, plaintiffs filed suit rather than attend.

According to the court, the teachers argued that "a governmental agency may not constitutionally discharge any employee, regardless of his probationary status, without first providing him an opportunity to be heard." In addition, plaintiffs contended that the Massachusetts state tenure law which grants "the right to hearing on discharge or suspension only to teachers on tenure, [denies] probationary or nontenure teachers the equal protection of the laws."

In examining recent precedents holding that a probationary teacher constitutionally is entitled to a hearing on a dismissal decision, the court found itself "unsure of the precise constitutional basis" used in Lucia v. Duggan in which a U.S. district court ruled improper the dismissal of a nontenure teacher for refusal to shave his beard. The court pointed out that in Lucia the federal district court had refused to declare the Massachusetts tenure law "unconstitutional as denying nontenure teachers equal protection" because "there are valid reasons for treating the probationary teacher differently from the permanent teacher." But the court found Lucia irrelevant to the instant proceeding because the hearing given plaintiff in Lucia was found lacking in due process by virtue of its dual rule-making and adjudicatory nature. While the federal district court in Lucia would not rule that plaintiff had a constitutional right to wear a beard, it did hold that plaintiff's appearance was "at least an interest . . . which may not be taken from him without due process of law."

The court also examined Roth v. Board of Regents of State Colleges (NRD, 9-70, 6) in which the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin held that a decision not to retain a teacher "may not rest on a basis wholly unsupported in fact, or on a basis wholly without reason." While the federal district court recognized that there may be "a very wide spectrum of reasons [for nonretention], some subtle and difficult to articulate and to demonstrate," it held that such reasons should be articulated and respected. The court in the instant case, however, concluded that > such reasons are not amenable to proof at a hearing or to review by the judiciary. We therefore choose to follow the greater weight of authority [i.e., that absent a statute to the contrary, a probationary teacher may be dismissed without a hearing.] We note, however, that in the instant case the judge found, on sufficient evidence, that the school committee terminated the contracts of the six plaintiffs because of their leaving the [elementary school] on September 5, 1968, and that the plaintiffs "were not in any way penalized by the committee" on account of their views on community control of or participation in the direction of the school system.

(Anne Decanio, et al. v. School Committee of Boston, Massachusetts Supreme Court, July 3, 1970.)

- Two other cases reported in recent issues of the DIGEST also have dealt with the dismissal of probationary teachers. In Michael A. Domenicone v. School Committee of the Town of Smithfield (NRD, 10-70, 14), the Rhode Island Education Commissioner repudiated the concept that "a school committee may act in an arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable manner with impunity in the termination of a teacher's contract" and sustained the appeal of a nontenure teacher who was discharged without a statement of charges or a hearing. The commissioner found that "simple justice as provided not only by the laws of this State but by the Constitution of the United States demands that [the teacher] know the cause for dismissal or nonrenewal of contract and have an opportunity to be heard on it." Then in Elvin Albaum v. Thomas F. Carey, et al. (NRD, 6-70, 7) the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York found that "substantial federal questions" were raised by a probationary teacher who, having been denied tenure, argued that the New York tenure statute deprived him of his First Amendment rights of free speech and free assembly. Specifically, the court questioned the "chilling effect" exerted upon teachers' academic freedom by court decisions allowing education boards "full and untrammeled discretion in granting tenure" and discussed the "intangibles" and difficulties involved in tenure decisions. Doubting whether "a single federal judge should undertake to construe a state statute so as to avoid a major constitutional issue," the court ordered that a three-judge federal court be convened to hear the matter.

TENURE MATTERS EXCLUSIVE TO STATE EDUCATION LAW AND OUTSIDE PERB JURISDICTION

A decision of the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, found that the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) exceeded its jurisdiction by adopting regulations for hearing and determining a reprisal charge, and ordering a school board to reinstate a discharged nontenure teacher. Ruling that the teacher's remedies lay under the state's Education Law rather than the public employee bargaining statute (the Taylor Law), the appellate court held that in our opinion the Taylor Act as enacted in 1967 was not so designed as to imply that PERB would have the responsibility and duty of regulating and securing all of the rights of public employees either expressly or inherently granted therein. The fractionalizing of remedies available to teachers does not appear necessary in view of the remedies available under the Education Law . . . to protect such rights as teachers may be granted under the Taylor Act . . . . It is difficult to perceive that [the 1969 unfair labor practice] amendment to the Taylor Act . . . which was subsequent to the institution of the present proceedings, was intended by the Legislature to take from an administrative agency (such as the Education Department) the right to settle disputes within its own framework, as has been the practice for many years, and grant PERB the power to assume such authority. It would result in opening the door to invasions by PERB of all administrative agencies which, by statute and regulations, have established practice and procedures relied upon by both the agency and its employees. The Taylor Act notably does not purport to mandate literal enforcement of orders made by PERB.

The case at bar was initiated on April 26, 1968, when a probationary teacher employed by Ockawamick Central School District filed a reprisal charge with the PERB alleging that the local education board unlawfully had denied her tenure "because of her organizational activities and for no lawful reasons." A complaint against the board subsequently was entered by the PERB on July 25, 1968, alleging that the teacher's appointment "was terminated and she was not granted tenure because of her activities on behalf of the Ockawamick Faculty Association."

Employed on a probationary status since 1965, the teacher was commended for her work following each of her first two years in the Ockawamick district; during her third year she was recommended for tenure by her supervisors and the district superintendent. Then at a March 11, 1968, meeting, the local board denied her tenure and terminated her employment effective September 1, 1968. Two board members later said that was the first time in their experience where tenure was denied in the face of favorable recommendations by professional administrators.

The teacher also served as local Association president and actively had engaged in contract negotiation with the district. In the summer of 1967 while discussing the mechanics of Association recognition with the local board president, the teacher was told that the coming year when her tenure would be considered was "a most important year." Then in January 1968 after the teacher had discussed negotiation under the Taylor Law with another faculty group, she was told by her supervisor that she was getting "quite a reputation as a rabblerouser." Two months later a letter signed by the teacher was sent to the local board complaining that the board's negotiator (and president) did not have the power to reach an agreement; the board negotiator expressed his displeasure with the letter at a March 7 negotiating session. Four days later the teacher was denied tenure, although she was not notified of the action until April 9.

On the basis of evidence presented during the August hearing, a PERB hearing officer found that "as the record now stands . . . it reveals a classic case of reprisal . . . . In the opinion of the hearing officer the motivation underlying refusal of the board to grant tenure was to punish the complainant for her association activities." Finding the local board's defense of its action to be "skimpy, vague and unconvincing," the hearing officer recommended on October 18, 1968, that the PERB direct the Ockawamick board to employ the teacher effective September 1, 1968.

During the hearing, however, the local board moved to dismiss the teacher's complaint and declined to participate in the hearing on grounds that the PERB lacked jurisdiction to proceed in the matter. Specifically, the board asserted that the Taylor Law confers no power upon the PERB to determine reprisal charges involving a public employer, that the teacher was dismissed under provisions of the Education Law, that such a dismissal is not subject to review by the PERB, and that the teacher's sole remedy was under the Education Law. The hearing officer denied all motions to dismiss.

In subsequent proceedings the PERB determined that it had jurisdiction to hear and determine the teacher's claim, explaining:

> Admittedly, the [Taylor] Act does not in haec verba grant power to this Board to hear and determine claims of reprisal against public employees. However, §205.5(k) provides that this Board shall have the power "To make . . . such rules and regulations . . . and to exercise such other powers as may be appropriate to effectuate the purposes and provisions of this article."
>
> The purpose of this Act is in part "to promote harmonious and cooperative relationships between government and its employees". . . . Thus, the Legislature, in §202 of the Act, granted to public employees the right to form, join and participate in any employee organization of their own choosing.
> If this grant of rights is to be meaningful and to effectuate the purpose of the Act, then these rights must be exercised in an atmosphere of free choice and not in an area of intimidation or fear of reprisal . . . . Clearly . . . the power to deal with acts of reprisal against public employees for exercising their rights is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act. . . . This Board does not dispute that [the Ockawamick board] has broad discretion in granting or denying tenure. However, in this proceeding the Board is simply determining whether the employee was penalized for exercising the rights granted to her by the Legislature. The agency mandated to effectuate this Act is this Board, and not the public employer, be it a board of education or otherwise.

Having asserted jurisdiction, the PERB found the hearing officer's conclusion to be "well supported by the record" and agreed that the teacher "was denied tenure because of her activities on behalf of an employee organization." The PERB accordingly ordered the Ockawamick board on December 11, 1968, to restore the teacher to her former employment as of September 1, 1968, and compensate her for wages lost as a result of the board's action.

Several months later the PERB brought an action in the Supreme Court for Columbia County, seeking a judgment enforcing its December order. The Ockawamick board asked that the PERB's petition be dismissed and its findings and order set aside on grounds that the PERB had no jurisdiction to hear and decide the alleged reprisal, that the teacher followed a procedure contrary to the Education Law, and that the hearing officer's recommendation and the PERB's order were not supported by the evidence. In ruling upon the jurisdictional question, the court noted that the teacher was on probationary status at the time she was dismissed and > her right to an appointment on tenure was subject to the provisions of §3013 of the Education Law. This section provides that before a teacher shall be granted an appointment on tenure, the teacher shall serve a probationary period of not to exceed five years and that the services of a probationary teacher "may be discontinued at any time during such probationary period." It is well settled law that a teacher has no vested rights to tenure during the probationary period and that the services of a probationary teacher may be discontinued without a hearing and without giving the reasons therefor.

The PERB, however, contended that an education board's right to deny tenure to a probationary teacher "must now bow to the provisions of the Taylor Law to the extent that such a denial of tenure must not be in violation of a teacher's right to organize, join and participate in employee organizations." But the court found no provisions in the Taylor Law (as originally enacted in 1967) relating to acts of reprisal or other unfair labor practices by public employers and no express authorization for the PERB to prevent unfair labor practices. The PERB argued that such authority was implicit in the statute and was necessary to effectuate the statute's purpose and protect public employees' organization rights under the statute, but the court concluded:

> This argument is not persuasive in respect to the case at hand, wherein the effect of the hearing was to require the board of education to state its reasons for denying tenure to a teacher, and the result of the determination and order would be to compel the board of education to reinstate a teacher who had previously been denied tenure. . . . The court finds no language in the statute which indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to give PERB the power to exercise any control over the tenure provisions of the Education Law. . . . Accordingly, the court concludes that PERB did not have authority under [the Taylor Law] . . . to hear and determine the complaint of [the teacher] and to issue an order directing the board of education to reinstate her.
> The petition is dismissed, and the findings and order of PERB are hereby set aside.

In affirming the lower court's judgment on appeal, the appellate division of the state supreme court concluded that while amendments to the Taylor Law ostensibly prohibit unfair employer practices and specifically empower the PERB to "establish procedures for the prevention of improper employer and employee organization practices," the Education Law expressly provides procedures whereby probationary teachers may seek review of their dismissal by appeal to the Commissioner of Education and/or article 78 of the CPLR to the courts. In the absence of a clear grant of power to PERB to enforce statutory rights of teachers the statutory rule of construction [that where one thing is expressed another is excluded] . . . requires that the statutory remedies provided in the Education Law are exclusive. NORTH DAKOTA

TEACHERS JUDGED GUILTY OF CRIMINAL CONTEMPT FOR DELIBERATELY STRIKING AND PICKETING IN VIOLATION OF PERMANENT INJUNCTION

A trial court's summary criminal contempt conviction of three teachers who violated a permanent injunction by conducting an illegal strike, remaining absent from their positions, and picketing their school was upheld by the North Dakota Supreme Court in finding no infringement of defendants' rights of free speech and peaceable assembly. Despite defendants' arguments to the contrary, the high court ruled that persons charged with petty criminal contempts may be punished summarily and have no constitutional right to a jury trial. Moreover, the court held that the nonviolent nature of defendants' picketing was immaterial, explaining:

The evidence established, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the defendants violated [the injunctive] order by conducting picketing and striking against their school district and by remaining unlawfully absent from their posts as teachers. The fact that this was done peaceably and without violence is immaterial. The deliberate conduct of the defendants was in willful violation of the order of the court, and it therefore was contemptuous. Picketing, even though it is peaceful and without violence and disorder, and even though it does not actually obstruct a governmental function, if used for the purpose of fostering and supporting an illegal strike against a governmental employer, is unlawful and may be enjoined.

On April 2, 1969, more than 100 teachers employed by Minot Public School District No. 1 went on strike, thereby forcing the schools to close. The district filed a civil suit seeking to enjoin the strike; a temporary restraining order was issued by the district court on April 7. At an April 9 hearing, defendants were found to have engaged in an illegal strike and conducted unlawful picketing in intentional violation of the court's temporary restraining order, which was made permanent on that date.

Defendants in the instant appeal before the state supreme court were found to have violated and disobeyed the district court's permanent restraining order by remaining absent from their positions and picketing, either with or without signs, various school buildings. At an August 18 contempt hearing, the district court found the three teachers guilty of criminal contempt, sentenced each to 30 days in jail, and levied fines of $250 plus $15 costs (the maximum sentence provided under Section 27-10-02, North Dakota Century Code). The jail sentences subsequently were suspended on condition of good behavior and with the proviso that defendants refrain from further unlawful picketing.

On appeal, defendants asserted that Section 27-10-13, North Dakota Century Code, is illegal because it allows the court to decide whether the accused has committed the offense charged and thereby denies the defendant his constitutional right to a jury trial. In examining case law, the state supreme court found that criminal contempt is a crime "in the ordinary sense" and is punishable by fine, imprisonment, or both, that the state "has held that one charged with contempt is not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right," and that in criminal contempt cases "a judge sits as both judge and jury, and his decision has the effect of a jury verdict."

The court also cited Bloom v. Illinois in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that serious criminal contempts should be subject to constitutional provisions for trial by jury, while petty contempts may be tried without a jury. Applying Bloom to the instant proceeding, the court explained that in Bloom the Supreme Court went on to say that when the Legislature has not expressed a judgment as to the seriousness of an offense by fixing a maximum penalty, the best evidence of the seriousness of the offense is the penalty which actually is imposed upon the defendant in the action.

Our statute provides a specific penalty for criminal contempt, under which . . . any person guilty of an act punishable as for criminal contempt may be punished by a fine of not more than $250 and by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than thirty days. Although the United States Supreme Court, in Bloom, did not define petty or serious offenses, that Court, in the case of Cheff v. Schnackenberg . . . held that a defendant charged with criminal contempt, where the penalty was six months' imprisonment, was not entitled to a jury trial. . . . Where the Legislature, in the statute under which the defendants in these cases were charged, has fixed the maximum penalty for the offense of criminal contempt at thirty days in jail and a $250 fine, we find such criminal contempt to be petty criminal contempt. Therefore, the defendants were not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right.

Defendants additionally asserted that the district court's permanent restraining order was void because it restricted their fundamental constitutional rights of freedom of speech and assembly. The state supreme court, however, found no merit in the contention, emphasizing that "the overwhelming weight of authority in this country holds that the State may deny its employees the right to strike, and it constitutionally may enjoin peaceful picketing. Such denial is not an infringement of the constitutional rights of such employees." The court also reprimanded defendants for their deliberate violation of the permanent injunction, pointing out that "orderly judicial procedure would require anyone who disagrees with an order of the court, and who believes such order to be invalid, to test the validity thereof in court. He should not deliberately violate such order merely because he, personally, does not agree with it."

Finally, defendants argued that the district court erred in finding them guilty of criminal contempt for picketing, because such activity did not impede or obstruct a governmental function and was not violent or disorderly. The state supreme court, however, determined that the picketing, "even though it was peaceful, was for an unlawful purpose [an illegal strike] and may be enjoined." The court thus affirmed the district court's final order and warrant of commitment entered against each defendant. (State of North Dakota v. Mary Heath, et al., North Dakota Supreme Court, June 2, 1970.)

SCHOOL DISTRICT'S EXCESSIVELY STRICT DISSEMINATION POLICY RULED UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND VOID

The U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York ruled unconstitutional a school district's administrative rule prohibiting the use of school mailboxes and all other school facilities for the dissemination of any materials other than strictly defined "routine internal distributions" of the exclusive bargaining representative. Finding the district's rule overly prohibitive, the court declared it void on its face and held that local teachers "were put in a position of having to pay (literally and figuratively) for their First Amendment rights. This is a price that the state is constitutionally prohibited from extracting."

The suit before the court was brought by the president of the Bay Shore (N.Y.) Classroom Teachers Association (BSCTA) in an attempt to prevent UFSD No. 1 officials from acting against teachers for distributing a BSCTA publication and other literature on school property. At issue was Section 11F-21 of the district's administrative manual which prohibited the use of "faculty mailboxes, as well as all other school building facilities" for disseminating all literature except the "routine internal distribution of any exclusive negotiating agent." "Routine internal distributions" were further defined by the manual as "notices of meetings, elections, results of elections and social events. The distribution of newsletters, position papers, materials of other organizations, or any other communications which do not concern themselves with the routine operation of an exclusive negotiating agent shall be prohibited."

While the dissemination rule had been discussed during negotiation and incorporated by reference into the settlement reached, the court held that it "was never agreed to in any collective bargaining sense—it was already a part of the '[Administrative] Manual' when the parties sat down to negotiate." The court accordingly dismissed the district's contention that since the BSCTA had acquiesced in the rule during negotiation, it had no remedy other than through negotiation or arbitration.

As to the district's argument that no constitutional issue was raised by the rule and that the district had authority under the New York Education Law "to establish rules and regulations concerning the order and discipline of the schools," the court cited Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School District in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that the exercise of "comprehensive authority" by school officials must be consistent with "fundamental constitutional rights." That is, the high court ruled in Tinker that "where there is no finding and no showing that engaging in the forbidden conduct would 'materially and substantially interfere with the requirement of appropriate discipline in the operation of the school', the prohibition cannot be sustained." The U.S. District Court additionally held that the mere "vesting of title to school property in the Board . . . cannot ipso facto support its promulgation of 11F-21."

While the district argued that the distribution of BSCTA material during negotiation is disruptive, the court found no "specific allegation that such disruption ever took place" and determined that the district's rationale "does not comport with the requirements of Tinker." For the high court made it clear in that case that "the mere fear of disturbance will not suffice; that a regulation must be based on '. . . facts which might reasonably have led school authorities to forecast substantial disruption or material interference with school authorities.' " The federal district court accordingly concluded in the instant case that "the fact that 'tension and turmoil' surround the collective bargaining process, although undoubtedly true, is not the kind of interference that would save this wide prohibition."

Noting that in Tinker "a particular expression was involved" whereas in the present matter "a whole range of possible speech is forbidden by 11F-21 without the slightest justification," the court rejected the district's contention that the dissemination rule prevented it from becoming a censor of material distributed on school property. The court pointed out that the district "can accomplish the same objective by permitting all distribution, to the extent that such distribution does not materially and substantially interfere with the school's operation," and parenthetically noted that "the present board policy permits any mailed item to be distributed through the faculty mailboxes." Finding the "entire Board rationale . . . undermined" by that interpretation of the disputed rule, the court held:

> It can hardly be argued that the fear of litter and/or disturbance is any less by the requirement that literature come into the school enclosed in an envelope or wrapper bearing a postage stamp. As to such mail the Board is not burdened with a censorship function since all such mail is placed directly in the appropriate faculty mailbox. The court has refrained from going off on this ground for the very reason that, even if the Board were to revise its present policy by not permitting mailed items to be placed in the faculty mailboxes, 11F-21 would still fall as an unwarranted prohibition of free speech rights which the Board may not deny to its teachers.

The federal district court ruled the dissemination rule void on its face as an "overbroad prohibition of . . . First Amendment rights," enjoined enforcement of the rule, and awarded the BSCTA costs and disbursements. (Michael Friedman v. Union Free School District No. 1, U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York, June 15, 1970.)

Board Findings and Rulings

MICHIGAN

ISSUANCE OF INDIVIDUAL PROBATIONARY CONTRACTS DURING NEGOTIATION NEITHER ILLEGAL NOR COERCIVE

A Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) trial examiner found that the Kearsley Community School District did not commit a violative act by requiring probationary teachers to sign individual employment contracts for the ensuing year while negotiation of collective economic matters was pending with the Kearsley Education Association (KEA). Noting that the "legality and usefulness of [individual] contracts is generally conceded as long as they do not circumvent a collective bargaining agreement," the examiner cited the Bullock Creek decision (NRD, 10-69, 7) as controlling of the instant case since it was held there that "the issuance of individual employment contracts is not a refusal to bargain or interference with employee rights." The MERC subsequently agreed that Bullock Creek disposed of the present matter and ordered the charges dismissed.

A 1968-70 contract between the KEA and the local board contained no salary schedules for the 1969-70 school year, so the parties reopened the contract in 1969 for negotiation of 1969-70 economic matters. In June 1969, however, the board asked the system's approximately 35 probationary teachers to sign contracts for the coming year; the letter of notification added that "if you do not come to the [administrative] office [to sign a contract], we will assume that you are not planning on coming back to Kearsley School next year." The parties' then current agreement contained a sample "special probationary contract" which left blank the salary to be paid and indicated that any individual contract "shall be expressly made subject to and consistent with the terms of this or subsequent agreements."

Following the district's action, the KEA charged that requiring probationary teachers to sign individual contracts during salary schedule negotiation interfered with and undermined the bargaining process. Moreover, the KEA alleged that the district's assumption that a teacher would not be returning for the coming year if he failed to sign was coercive and constituted a veiled threat. On the other hand, the district claimed that the individual contracts met the specifications of the collective agreement, that its action did not violate the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA), and that the Association's charges were arbitrary and capricious attempts to undermine negotiation.

Noting that the Association did not support its argument that individual employment contracts interfere with or undermine the bargaining process, the trial examiner discussed the parties' employment relationship, pertinent provisions of the state's school code, and the unique nature of probationary teaching contracts:

> The fact that an employment contract is enforceable by both parties is an inherent right and obligation under any bilateral contract and in no way impinges upon the collective bargaining relationship, since even where strikes, lockouts, or withholding of services are permitted the law presumes, even without an employment contract, the continuance of the employment relationship and the bargaining status of the union. Thus, the existence of an employment relationship is separate and distinct from the rights and benefits that may accrue by means of collective bargaining after that relationship is established.
> The Michigan Legislature has seen fit to provide in . . . the School Code that even non-tenure teaching personnel may have the benefit and protection of both a private employment contract and a collective bargaining agreement. Further, as fully discussed in Bullock Creek, the Legislature specifically provided in . . . the School Code . . . enacted after PERA that there could not be any conflict between the private employment contract and the collective bargaining agreement, and this new section gives due supremacy to the collective agreement if any inconsistency develops in the provisions of the two contracts.
> The [KEA] in its brief notes that the employment of school teachers, especially non-tenure teachers, is somewhat unique in that they do not usually contract for a full calendar year and do not enjoy continuous employment as do most employees. It is obvious that the Legislature recognized this unique characteristic of teacher employment when it enacted the aforesaid Sections . . . of the School Code. These sections . . . are recognition of the fact that the intent of a non-tenure teacher to return the following school year is not presumed in view of the regular three-month hiatus between duties. These sections enable a school [illegible] to ascertain what teachers it will have available i[illegible] [illegible]aber and to give it an opportunity to recruit replacem[illegible] [illegible]ere needed. Thus, [I do] not see any basis for holding t[illegible] the existence of private employment contracts interferes with and undermines the collective bargaining process.

As to the KEA's allegations of coercion, the trial examiner found that a similar charge was advanced in Bullock Creek and had been rejected by the MERC. There the district had told the Association bargaining committee that teachers who failed to return signed contracts by a given date would be considered "insubordinate" and subject to discharge; in the instant case the MERC examiner held that the Kearsley district did not go so far in its assumption that teachers who failed to come to the office did not plan to return the coming school year. Rather, the district's statement was "a logical assumption which follows from the very right to ask for an individual contract in the first place." The examiner thus concluded that the district's action in reaching that assumption could not "in any way violate any right protected by PERA" and that even if the action was coercive, it was not related to the KEA or to teachers' protected activities under the PERA:

> The individual employment contracts requested or demanded by [the district] in no way impinged upon the right of the [KEA] to bargain collectively in regard to wages, hours and working conditions, nor has any viable argument been advanced as to how much individual employment contracts frustrate in any way the collective bargaining process. In the instant case the contract was in a form prescribed by the collective bargaining agreement between the parties, and the blank space for the designation of the salary was expressly left to the negotiation of the collective bargaining agreement. It might just as easily be argued herein that the [district] would have been derelict in its contractual (and statutory) obligations if it had failed to secure such individual employment contracts.

The examiner accordingly recommended that the KEA's charges be dismissed; this recommendation later was adopted by the MERC in its agreement that the Bullock Creek decision was controlling of the instant matter. (Kearsley Community School District and Kearsley Education Association, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, June 5, 1970.)

- Three other cases reported in recent issues of the DIGEST also have dealt with the relationship between individual employment contracts and collective agreements during negotiation. In Elmbrook Education Association v. Elmbrook Schools, Joint Common School District No. 21 (NRD, 6-70, 12), a Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission trial examiner held that the district unlawfully required local teachers to sign individual contracts containing negotiable salary items when the contracts did not specify that such items would be superseded by any subsequent collective agreement negotiated by the Association. According to the examiner, such activity on the part of the district "impedes and has a debilitating effect on the right of teachers to organize and be represented in collective negotiations."

Then in a case involving the Gibraltar (Mich.) School District (NRD, 10-70, 9), the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) determined that during negotiation of a collective agreement the district illegally withheld fringe benefits from teachers who refused to sign individual contracts while paying benefits to teachers who signed. Finding that the district's "attempt to secure individual contracts was part of a policy and program to discriminate between groups of teachers," the MERC held that contracts submitted in this context are "not the type of individual contracts contemplated by [the state] School Code."

Finally, in the face of a negotiation impasse, a New Jersey superior court judge (NRD, 11-70, 4) upheld the Fair Lawn education board's unilateral imposition of a salary schedule upon the school system and its subsequent mailing of contracts to nontenure teachers because the situation involved "a type of emergency that calls for a decision at once." Stating that a school board cannot risk having no nontenure teachers under contract because of a negotiation impasse, the judge stipulated that the individual contracts provide that the terms of any collective agreement reached would inure to the nontenure teachers' benefit.

NEW JERSEY

SINGLE UNIT FOR SCHOOL NURSES AND TEACHERS RULED APPROPRIATE

In resolving a representation question involving school nurses employed by the South Plainfield education board, the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) decided that a one-year contract negotiated with the South Plainfield Education Association (SPEA) and covering the nurses should be given full effect, despite the nurses' attempts to change their bargaining representative. Finding that the board's grant of recognition to the SPEA was made in good faith at a time when that organization's majority status as representative of a unit including school nurses was not disputed, the PERC held that the board "was free to pursue contract negotiations to a conclusion . . . and no evidence of a contrary intent [by the nurses] can operate to alter the express terms of the agreement." The PERC also determined that it would be inappropriate to separate the nurses from the existing unit since "it is not enough to observe that nurses enjoy a community of interest among themselves."

The case arose when the New Jersey State Nurses' Association filed a June 17, 1969, petition with the PERC seeking certification as representative of the South Plainfield nurses. During hearings before a PERC trial examiner, it was found that when the board and the SPEA began negotiation of a 1969-70 contract in November 1968, the SPEA asked that school nurses be placed on the teachers' salary schedule. On December 12, 1968, the parties agreed that the bargaining unit would include school nurses, and a board resolution of January 14, 1969, recognized the SPEA as majority representative of a unit comprised of teachers, school nurses, guidance counselors, and two other job classifications. At that time the majority status of the SPEA was not questioned, because the SPEA had represented local teachers for some six or seven years. Moreover, there was no evidence that the school nurses did not wish to be included in the recognized unit.

Also on January 14, the board made an offer with respect to the nurses. Dissatisfied with the offer, the nurses urged the SPEA to negotiate a better offer; the SPEA attempted unsuccessfully to do this at least until March 1969. A 1969-70 settlement eventually was reached by the parties on June 11, 1969, and contained a separate nurses' salary schedule incorporated by reference into the contract.

In the meantime, however, the school nurses joined the New Jersey State Nurses' Association in February 1969. The SPEA subsequently agreed to release the nurses in a March 21, 1969, letter sent to the nurses' association, but the South Plainfield board was not officially notified of this action until October 31, 1969. The nurses' association asked the PERC for recognition on April 11 and then filed its representation petition on June 17, six days after the SPEA and the board had reached the agreement covering school nurses.

During the hearings, the trial examiner found that SPEA action "may not have been completely consistent. On one hand, they released the nurses from the negotiating unit. On the other hand, they concluded and signed a collective agreement which covers the nurses." While regarding "stability—but not inflexibility—as an important consideration in the development and implementation of the policy desired by the legislature" when the New Jersey Employer-Employee Relations Act was enacted, the examiner held that > to deny a recognized negotiating agent—such as the South Plainfield Education Association in the instant case—a reasonable opportunity to negotiate a contract after being recognized would not contribute to stability. This conclusion is not based upon the Rules and Regulations of the [PERC] which became effective August 29, 1969—several months after the petition in this case was filed. However it is evident that the Commission recognized this consideration because the Rules which they did adopt do make provision for a protected period during which negotiations may take place following recognition.

> Nevertheless, [I agree] that the Rules should not be applied retroactively. To find otherwise would require a finding that the [SPEA] is not entitled to a protected period . . . because the conditions precedent thereto . . . were not satisfied in this instance.
> The Board of Education acted in good faith in recognizing the unit which included nurses. They signed this agreement which covered nurses. The majority representative of the employees also signed an agreement covering nurses . . . . Based upon the above, [I find] that the contract signed June 11, 1969 by the Board and the [SPEA] should continue in effect. However, this finding does not preclude the possibility of a recommendation that an election be directed at some future time if the unit is found to be appropriate.

As to whether the eight nurses involved constituted an appropriate unit, the trial examiner found that teachers and school nurses share a community of interest and have no apparent conflict of interest, as evidenced in another PERC case in which both classifications were included in a single unit. But the examiner also noted "a number of factors which set the nurses off," thereby making the single unit not "the only appropriate unit." In recommending that the nurses be found to constitute an appropriate unit, the examiner held that "no election should be directed during the term of the current agreement between the [SPEA] and the Board. . . . Therefore, there would be no election until sometime after June 30, 1970."

Both the board and the nurses' association filed exceptions to the trial examiner's recommendations, but the PERC held that the board's grant of exclusive recognition to the SPEA for a unit including school nurses was made in good faith. As such, the board "was not obligated to yield to the nurses' request for severance . . . . nor was it obligated to recognize the [SPEA's] attempted disclaimer of representation for nurses . . . [which was] immaterial in view of the [board's] refusal to depart from the boundaries of the recognition it had granted."

In adopting the recommendation that the contract be given its full effect, the PERC explained that the parties' bilateral agreement was not altered by the nurses' intent to appeal their inclusion in the SPEA unit in that such an intent > is not a reservation by the signatories to the contract whereby the nurses' status is undetermined or held in abeyance pending the [PERC's] determination.

> This is not, therefore, a situation where the parties to this contract, the public employer and the [SPEA], have inserted a unit reservation. Rather, the provision merely sets forth a fact relating to a third party beneficiary of the contract. We do not construe this provision in the agreement as creating any infirmity in the binding nature of the contract relating to the nurses nor do we conclude that this requires the granting of a severance election to the nurses.
> It is axiomatic in labor relations that in determining an appropriate unit or in achieving an agreement, the specific wishes of each group may not always be satisfied. . . . However, one of the principles of labor relations is that employees who are found to constitute an appropriate unit are governed by the contract negotiated by their exclusive negotiating representative. . . . Whether this unit is one established by this Commission or is one agreed upon by the parties to a contract is not material providing it is basically an appropriate unit. Thus, where as here, the parties to a contract have agreed upon an appropriate unit without a reservation, the existence of some dissatisfaction by [members] of the unit will not constitute a basis to separate or sever a dissatisfied group from an appropriate unit.

Noting that the contract at issue already had expired, the PERC additionally disposed of the unit question by finding it inappropriate "to permit the separation of nurses from the contract unit":

It is not enough to observe that nurses enjoy a community of interest among themselves. . . . The issue is whether their interests are so distinct from those with whom they were formerly grouped as to negate a community of interest. It is true that a nurse's training and qualifications differ from that of a teacher but she is not limited thereby, for the school nurse functions in both the medical and educational spheres. . . . The medical characteristics of the job are dominated by educational interests and integrated with the teaching process in order to achieve a common object, the education of students. In addition to this overriding interest, nurses share with teachers a variety of common conditions such as hours, fringe benefits, daily supervision by the school principal, as well as formal classroom instruction duties. . . . Furthermore, in this case, the nurses have been included with the teachers for purposes of representation for approximately six years. . . . Accordingly, the nurses should not be removed from the existing unit.

UNCHALLENGED PRIOR INCLUSION OF DEPARTMENT CHAIRMEN IN TEACHER UNIT RULED "ESTABLISHED PRACTICE" EXCEPTION TO STATUTORY PROHIBITION

The New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) held that department chairmen employed by the Henry Hudson Regional School District should continue to be represented in the existing teacher bargaining unit since the local board voluntarily and without challenge had "discussed" economic matters from 1963 to 1968 with an employee organization representing a unit of teachers and chairmen. Although the state's mandatory Employer-Employee Relations Act was not enacted until 1968 and a hearing officer determined that the chairmen in question were supervisors under the Act, the PERC found that the district's bargaining history constituted an "established practice" exception to the statutory exclusion of supervisors from units of nonsupervisory personnel.

Section 7 of the Act provides in pertinent part that the right to form, join and assist any employee organization or to refrain from any such activity . . . shall not extend to any managerial executive . . . nor, except where established practice, prior agreement or special circumstances, dictate the contrary, shall any supervisor, having the power to hire, discharge, discipline, or to effectively recommend the same, have the right to be represented in collective negotiations by an employee organization that admits nonsupervisory personnel to membership.

On January 15, 1969, the local board recognized the Henry Hudson Regional Education Association as representative of a unit comprised of teachers, department chairmen, and four other job classifications. Negotiation of a 1969-70 agreement ensued, but the district questioned inclusion of department chairmen in the existing unit due to their alleged supervisory status. A 1969-70 agreement covering department chairmen was negotiated, but the district informed the Association that it would dispute continued unit representation of department chairmen with the commencement of 1970-71 contract negotiation. As a result, the district filed a December 12, 1969, petition with the PERC seeking clarification of the existing unit.

During April 1970 hearings before a PERC hearing officer, it was found that department chairmen interview and recommend applicants for teaching positions, evaluate teacher performance and submit recommendations to the local board for consideration in retention, dismissal, and tenure decisions, and effectively recommend the granting or withholding of increments through teacher evaluations. Determining that such duties essentially empower the department chairmen here involved "to effectively recommend with regard to . . . [the] hire, discharge, [and] discipline of teachers in the district," the hearing officer found the department chairmen to be supervisors within the meaning of sec. 7 of the Act.

The hearing officer then examined testimony relative to the relationship between the local board and the Association since 1963, when the board voluntarily undertook "discussions" of salaries and fringe benefits affecting an unchallenged unit of teachers and department chairmen represented by the Association. He noted that before the 1964 school year department chairmen received no pay differential; sometime afterward, however, additional payments for chairmen were set at $150 and then rose to $300 plus $25 per teacher supervised. Finding that "give and take," "haggling," considerable discussion, and changes in the parties' positions admittedly had occurred, the hearing officer concluded that what transpired from 1963 through 1968 was collective negotiation on behalf of teachers and chairmen, not as extensive in range of subject matter as under the Act, but substantively significant for the salary and money items covered. Furthermore . . . I find that in fact this was not really different from the later negotiation under the Act—the indispensable process of "give and take" remained the same, only formality and detail took hold.

In considering whether any of the statutory exceptions to the prohibition against including supervisors in a unit of nonsupervisory personnel were applicable to the instant matter, the hearing officer determined that the "prior agreement" exception was inapplicable because the parties' 1969-70 agreement was concluded without prejudice to the right of the Board to raise the question of the propriety of the inclusion of department chairmen in the unit under the Act. Moreover, the pre-Act negotiations were not formalized in a collective agreement because, in the state of the law as it then existed, the Board was not required to recognize the Association as the exclusive representative or to negotiate concerning terms and conditions of employment or to enter into a contractually binding agreement.

This is not to say, however, that conduct short of imposed or enforcible representation in a unit of teachers and department chairmen for collective negotiations could not and did not characterize the relationship of the parties during the pre-Act years of 1963-68 involved herein. . . . Clearly . . . while it could be said that Article I, paragraph 19 [of the state constitution which allows public employees to "present to and make known to the State . . . their grievances and proposals through representatives of their own choosing"] did not mandate good faith "collective bargaining," the right to public employee good faith "collective negotiations" in the aspects material herein certainly lodged within the constitutional guarantee in the period before the Act. And while such right was effectuated with [the Act] in 1968, there was no legal impediment to the recognition of this right by implementation in practice such as voluntarily occurred on the part of this Public Employer in the period 1963-68.

As department chairmen had been represented in the bargaining unit without challenge from 1963 to 1968 and the parties had engaged in a "give and take, proposal and counter proposal, type of extended discussions of economic issues eventuating in understandings," the hearing officer held that a pattern of collective negotiation had evolved "that in substance is equatable in practice to that prescribed in the state of the law as it now exists." He accordingly determined that the exception of "established practice" was evident, explaining:

In my opinion the legislature intended by the use of "established practice" as an exception to the unit exclusion of supervisors, to signify that the normal unit standard of "community of interest" could be discounted where, as here, the actual experience over a period of time evidences the feasibility of commingling for purposes of collective negotiations. . . . Manifestly, to give force and effect to "established practice" during the infancy of the Act requires that resort be had to the years preceding the effective date of the Act in 1968, there being no separate effective date or stay for implementation of the exceptions. It follows . . . that pre-Act negotiations may be employed as background evidence to test the occurrence of the commingling of supervisors and nonsupervisors in the same unit and the manner in which such negotiations were conducted albeit the Public Employer was not obligated, as a matter of law, to conduct itself in the fashion later mandated by the Act.

Further, I am convinced and find that five years is a sufficient period of time to warrant the description of "established". . . [and] find . . . that continued inclusion is "dictated" within the meaning of . . . the Act.

The PERC subsequently adopted the hearing officer's findings and recommendations in full. (In the Matter of Henry Hudson Regional School District Board of Education and Henry Hudson Regional Education Association, Inc., New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission, August 14, 1970.)

Negotiation Notes

WINTON ACT AMENDED

Amendments to the Winton Act, California's public-school teacher "meet and confer" law, define the terms "meet and confer" and "persistent disagreement," provide procedures for the resolution of "persistent disagreements," authorize written agreements, and extend the Act's coverage to community college employees. In addition, all references in the Act to employee negotiating councils have been amended to read "certificated employee council." The amendments, enacted by the state legislature in Assembly Bill 820 and Senate Bill 293, became effective November 24, 1970.

Sec. 1 of the Act (sec. 13060 of the Education Code) was amended by a new paragraph allowing "any academic senate or faculty council established by a school district in a community college to represent the faculty in making recommendations to the administration and governing board of such school district with respect to district policies on academic and professional matters."

An amendment to sec. 3 of the Act (sec. 13081 of the Education Code) defined "meet and confer" as meaning that a public-school employer or its representatives and employee organization representatives "shall have the mutual obligation to exchange freely information, opinions, and proposals; and to make and consider recommendations under procedures in a conscientious effort to reach agreement by written resolution, regulation, or policy of the governing board effectuating such recommendations."

Sec. 3 also now defines a "persistent disagreement" as a dispute arising under the meet and confer article "that has not been resolved to the mutual satisfaction of the parties . . . within a reasonable period of time after the initial presentation of proposals, which shall be not less than 30 days, except by mutual consent." Sec. 5 of the Act (which adds sec. 13087.1 to the Education Code) then provides that parties meeting and conferring under sec. 4 shall adopt "a procedure for the resolution of persistent disagreements which may include factfinding and shall adopt rules and regulations establishing such a procedure, which procedure shall be mutually acceptable to the parties."

If the parties cannot agree upon a procedure, they are mandated (at the request of either party) to refer the persistent disagreement "to a committee of three persons, one selected by the school employer, one selected by the employee organization or the certificated employee council . . . and in turn those persons shall select the third member." The committee's findings, which shall not be binding, are to be reported at a public meeting of the parties; public reportage of the committee's recommendations (which also are advisory) is contingent upon prior written agreement of the parties.

Other amendments to the Act extend the definition of "public school employer" to include "the governing board of a school district," allow the employer to designate certificated or classified employees as its meet-and-confer representatives, provide that nothing in the Act shall prohibit a public-school employer from making the final decision regarding all meet-and-confer matters specified in sec. 4 of the Act, and specifically name the Act. The full text of the Winton Act, as amended, is reprinted in the "Texts" section of this issue of DIGEST; all amendments are italicized.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

BOARD OF LABOR RELATIONS ESTABLISHED TO ENSURE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATION AND BARGAINING RIGHTS

By order of the District of Columbia commissioner, a five-member Board of Labor Relations was established, effective June 19, 1970, to ensure the "orderly and efficient operation of government by encouraging the practice of collective bargaining, by protecting the right of employees to organize and to designate representatives of their own choosing, and by providing procedures for preventing the interference by employers and employees with the legitimate rights of the other."

The Board is empowered to resolve disputes concerning unit determination among public employees, conduct representation elections, certify exclusive bargaining representatives, and hear unfair labor practice charges and "issue an appropriate remedial order binding on the parties, or . . . make recommendations to the Mayor" (officially referred to as the Commissioner of the District of Columbia). In addition, the board shall resolve negotiation impasses "through factfinding or final and binding arbitration," determine negotiability questions, and decide whether a dispute is grievable. It may review appeals of arbitration awards pursuant to a grievance procedure, but only if "the arbitrator was without or exceeded his jurisdiction; the award on its face is contrary to law and public policy, or was procured by fraud, collusion, or other similar and unlawful means." The board also is to establish a list of mediators, factfinders, and arbitrators.

Two board members were to be chosen by the District of Columbia Commissioner from lists of three names each submitted by "each labor organization representing a significant number of District Government employees." Two management members also were to be selected by the commissioner from a list of five names proposed by "an ad hoc committee representing management within the District Government." The four members so selected then were to submit a list of three names to the commissioner for selection of an impartial fifth member to serve as board chairman. According to the order, all board members shall hold office for three years, will be eligible for reappointment, shall hold no other full- or part-time positions paid by District or federal funds during the term of appointment, and shall be compensated by the District when actually performing services as board members. The order further provides that the board may delegate any of its functions to three-member panels comprised of the chairman, one labor member, and one management member.

The full text of the commissioner's order is reprinted in the "Texts" section of this DIGEST.

FLORIDA

ATTORNEY GENERAL HOLDS PUBLIC EMPLOYEES MAY NOT BE DEPRIVED OF ORGANIZATION RIGHTS UNDER STATE CONSTITUTION

In an advisory opinion, the Florida attorney general found "there can be little doubt that the state or any of its political sub-divisions may not . . . deprive public employees of their right of freedom of association, self-organization or the right to join or to continue as members of any employee or labor organization." While emphasizing that recent state court decisions (NRD, 11-70, 3) have prohibited public employee strikes, the attorney general held that the state constitution guarantees public employees the right to organize for purposes of collective bargaining.

However, the Florida governor stated in a May 1970 executive order (NRD, 9-70, 12) that he would veto any bargaining measure passed by the legislature "in order to preserve the orderly processes of government." According to the governor, "union bosses cannot put themselves between the people and their employees nor usurp the power entrusted by the people in their duly elected officials, who are responsible to the people."

NEW YORK

PUBLIC EMPLOYER MAY DELEGATE ITS NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY TO A DESIGNATED PERSON OR BODY, ACCORDING TO PERB COUNSEL

An advisory opinion issued by counsel to the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) supported a public employer's prerogative under the Taylor Law to designate who will negotiate on its behalf, so long as negotiation is conducted in good faith. In response to an attempt by the representative organization at Onondaga Community College to gain direct access to the college's board of trustees for purposes of discussing academic matters, counsel to the PERB pointed out that community college teachers are employed by the county, not by the board of trustees. As the county in this case had left responsibility for the negotiation of academic matters to the board and the college president (who acted as a liaison to the board), it was found that "if the academic matters . . . are negotiable . . . the [college] president may properly act as negotiator on behalf of the employer and the union would not have a right of direct access to the board of trustees."

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, SEPTEMBER 1970

Data released by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items index rose 0.4 percent in September to 136.6 (1957-59=100). The September figure put the CPI 5.6 percent above that of a year ago, reportedly the smallest year-to-year increase since October 1969. Most of the September increase was attributed to an 0.6 percent advance in consumer services charges, a substantial rise in apparel prices, and the fact that the prices of houses "rose significantly for the second month in a row." Prices of commodities other than food registered an 0.6 percent rise that month, compared with an 0.2 percent increase in July and August. According to BLS, an estimated 70,000 workers will receive cost-of-living increases based upon the September CPI.

SUPREME COURT TEST OF FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT OATH ABANDONED

A Justice Department appeal of a decision rendered by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia in the case of National Association of Letter Carriers v. Blount (NRD, 12-69, 3) was dismissed by agreement of the parties on September 1, 1970, and accordingly removed from the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States. The action left standing the 1969 ruling by a three-judge federal district court panel which declared unconstitutional portions of a federal statute (5 U.S.C. § 7311) and the implementing Post Office employment oath which prohibited government employees from asserting the right to strike or holding membership in any organization asserting the right to strike.

Statistics

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: SELECTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF DEPARTMENT CHAIRMEN OR SUPERVISORS

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 negotiated classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 84 agreements (8.6 percent) with provisions covering various policies and practices relative to the selection and assignment of department chairmen or supervisors. Although the majority of the provisions concerned department chairman, other members of the administrative and supervisory staff occasionally were covered.

Of the 84 pertinent provisions, four established joint teacher-board committees to study or review the appointment of department chairmen; these provisions have been eliminated from the following content analysis. The remaining 80 provisions contained specific negotiated content falling into four broad subject areas: authorization or justification for the position; requirements and responsibilities of the position; procedures for screening and selecting applicants for the position; and compensation for and length of service in the position.

Table 1 indicates the incidence of the major negotiated content areas among the 80 provisions analyzed, while succeeding tables present a detailed analysis of each broad subject area. Categories listed in the tables are not mutually exclusive since most provisions contained more than one feature. The analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements, and no attempt is made to cross-reference the analyzed provisions with other negotiated content which indirectly may affect the selection and assignment of department chairmen or supervisors. In addition, many of the sample provisions reprinted here represent only the pertinent portion(s) of negotiated articles containing peripheral and/or unrelated subject matter.

Authorization or Justification for Position

The majority (74) of the 80 pertinent provisions dealt only with various types of department chairmanships. The remaining six provisions individually applied to principals and department chairmen, principals, superintendents, principals and superintendents, all supervisory staff, and all administrators below the rank of superintendent. Of the 74 provisions concerning department chairmen only, 41 simply identified the position, while 33 provisions additionally indicated whether the position was system-wide, confined to one building, or applicable to elementary and/or secondary schools. Nine of these 33 provisions stipulated that two positions of varying degrees of responsibility were involved in the department chairmanship; differentiations between building chairmen and system-wide chairmen were found in two of the nine provisions, while the remaining clauses simply provided for two positions which seemed to be in departments within one building. Ten of the 74 provisions applying to department chairmen stated that the position was not considered to be supervisory, two held that it was supervisory or administrative, and two provisions allowed unit representation for department chairmen.

All provisions (32) which specifically named the position's area of authority or identified criteria for establishing it pertained to department chairmen. The unit of authority (i.e., the department) was delimited either by naming each department according to subject area, or by providing the conditions under which various sectors of the instructional program might become departments. The establishment of departments usually was predicated upon achieving a minimum number of teachers in a given subject area; this minimum figure ranged between two and five, with most agreements specifying four or five. Table 2 indicates the number of agreements containing subject matter naming the departments or identifying criteria for establishing departments. Reprints of four sample negotiated provisions follow the table.

6.1 Each major department within the high school—English, mathematics, social studies, and science shall have a department head.

6.8 A department chairman may become a department head when there are five or more teachers in a department, including the department chairman. (Thomaston, Connecticut)

* * *

A. In all departments of the junior and senior high schools, having five members or more, the principal shall appoint a department member as chairman. Departments of a school having less than five members, except for those departments identified in C below, may be combined with other departments in that school. The physical education department in the junior high school shall continue to have a department chairman. The department chairman shall exercise such coordinating and administrative functions as have heretofore been performed, including serving as liaison between the teachers of the department and the school administration. A department chairman shall not be considered a supervisory employee.

C. In each junior high school, there shall be appointed a coordinating teacher in industrial arts, home economics and art. Each of these teachers shall be released from one period of non-instructional duties, the equivalent of one class period. Should a scheduling conflict prevent the implementation of this paragraph, the parties shall confer as to a solution. (Southfield, Michigan)

* * *

B. Department Chairmen

1. There will be a department chairman in each subject area of the Junior-Senior High School.
   e. Department chairmen shall be appointed on a district-wide basis in the following subject areas: (1) Music; (2) Health, Physical Education and Driver and Safety Education.
   Special Note: Art—every effort will be made to coordinate the activities of the art teachers in grades K-12 during the 1968-69 school year so that the Art Department may possibly become a district-wide department in the 1968-69 school year. (Valatie, New York)

A. There shall be a chairman in the senior high schools for each of the following departments when deemed necessary or desirable by the superintendent: English; Science; Math; Social Studies; and Business Education.

B. Each teacher in the department is a member of that department. Where the number of teachers in a department is less than three, the department may be combined with a related department as determined by the building principal. (West Allis, Wisconsin)

Requirements and Responsibilities of Position

Of the 24 provisions stating required qualifications for the position, 23 applied to department chairmen and one to all administrators below the rank of superintendent. The most common requirements of prospective chairmen included being a member of the department in question, achievement of a certain level of academic preparation, and prior teaching experience of a specified number of years. Of the 18 provisions referring to various academic qualifications, 10 required an M.A. degree or the equivalent in credit hours; a majority of these 10 provisions required that the degree or credit hours be in the department's subject area. Several other provisions required some graduate work and preparation in the field, or named specific courses to be taken.

Prior service qualifications outlined in 21 agreements varied according to the length and nature of service or experience required. Six provisions required experience, but did not indicate the exact nature of the experience; two of these provisions, however, stipulated subject area experience. Eight provisions individually specified three or five years of subject area experience, three provisions respectively called for one, two, and five years of experience in the department involved or the school system, and two provisions required total teaching experience of four and five years, respectively. The remaining clauses merely stated that length of prior service was a consideration.

Other qualifications included ability to work with the staff, teaching performance, and work in program development. In one instance, a joint committee was to study the required qualifications. Table 3 outlines the various position qualifications specified in agreements and is followed by excerpts from two pertinent negotiated provisions.

The criteria for the selection of the department chairmen are:

1. Be a tenure teacher.
2. Have at least three years of teaching experience in their subject area, one of which must be in the Madison District.
3. Have the ability to communicate effectively with members of their department and work harmoniously with members of the administration.
4. Have a major in the subject area in which they are teaching.
5. Normally have at least 20 semester hours beyond their Bachelor's Degree.
(Madison Heights, Michigan)

Minimum requirements for the position of coordinator:

1. Five years satisfactory experience as a teacher in the subject area;
2. Permanent certification, or working toward permanent certification, as a teacher;
3. A master's degree or enrollment in a master's degree program;
4. At least six hours of graduate work in supervision which may be completed within one year after appointment; (Suggest courses in principles of supervision and curriculum development.)
5. Active membership in a professional organization in the subject area;
6. A demonstrated ability to work easily and efficiently with staff members;
7. Faculty personnel who have filled such positions in past three years but who do not meet the above requirements will be considered to have continued eligibility for appointment to the position. Such a person shall serve in an "acting" capacity with the same benefits and responsibilities as those who meet the requirements.

Only those provisions applying to department chairmen named duties and requirements adhering to the position. While the nature and language of the 46 provisions covering department chairmen's duties varied greatly, department chairmen usually serve in an advisory capacity vis à vis the administration and relieve the administration of direct supervision and coordination of each department. In some cases the functions of department chairmen overlapped or included functions traditionally reserved for the administration, but the bounds of authority were not always clearly defined. Department chairmen generally were required to act as a liaison between their department staffs and the administration, coordinate programs, materials, curricula, and staff work, aid in the review and development of curricula, and oversee the inventory and storage of equipment and supplies. Other responsibilities included assisting the administration in hiring new teachers, assisting new staff members, observing and evaluating teachers in the department, and working with department fiscal matters.

Table 4 indicates the incidence of the various duties assigned to department chairmen among the provisions analyzed. The categories conform closely to contractual language, but they are not mutually exclusive. The three "Miscellaneous" categories refer to infrequently negotiated items such as reviewing duties (e.g., teacher lesson plans, grading policies), coordinating functions (e.g., field trips), past practices which were not explained, and instances in which department chairmen's duties were to be determined by an individual or a group. Reprints of sample negotiated provisions follow the table.

II. Function and Role:

1. The department chairman is directly responsible to building principals for the program carried out in the respective buildings.
2. The following responsibilities are assigned:
   1) Hold periodic departmental meetings to plan, organize, and evaluate program.
   2) Arrange conferences with and classroom observations of all department probationary staff.
   3) Work with the department in developing the departmental budget.
   4) Review with the building principals all recommendations for changes in departmental policy.
   5) Be responsible for program 7-12 unless the elementary level is stipulated.
   6) Maintain a file of curriculum and instructional materials.
   7) Be responsible for knowing, communicating, and interpreting state and local policies to staff and administrators. (Clinton, New York)

2. Department supervisors, who may not be assigned to other administrative positions, have a dual and major responsibility, including classroom visitation and evaluation of staff in respective departments plus the functions of department chairmen.

3. Major responsibilities of supervisors in the departments for which they are responsible involve:
   a. Sufficient classroom visitation to observe teaching;
   b. Individual conference following visitation to set up ways of improving teaching and noting strength;
   c. Assisting in planning classroom activities;
   d. Explaining procedures, school policies, etc., to teachers;
   e. Assisting teachers with problems;
   f. Working with the superintendent and principals and committees in course construction and revision—setting up objectives, studies of subject matter and learning activities, experimental testing materials, (including texts) recommended for adoption;
   g. Evaluation of teaching efficiency—submission of reports on scheduled basis.

4. Responsibilities of department chairmen. The time required for classroom visitation and other activities for evaluation of personnel is beyond that which can be provided for department chairmen at this time. Primary responsibilities will be as follows:
   a. Holding monthly department meetings devoted to matters of a professional nature and common interest;
   b. Assistance to teachers in planning classroom activities, assignments, etc.;
   c. Working with the superintendent, principal and/or committees in course construction and revision, setting up objectives, studies of subject matter and learning activities, experimental testing of materials, evaluation of instructional materials;
   d. Explaining procedures, school policies, etc., to teachers. On occasion, substitute teacher arrangements may be made to permit days of classroom visitation for department chairmen for auditing purposes in order to observe the department program in action. The primary responsibility for staff evaluation in these departments, however, is not the department chairman's. (Mt. Pleasant, New York)

C. Department chairmen shall have the following duties:
   1. Coordinate departmental activities.
   2. Provide liaison between departmental teachers and supervisory personnel.
   3. Preside over monthly departmental meetings and submit minutes of such meetings to the building principal.
   4. Collect, review, collate and synthesize ideas and recommendations of departmental teachers for presentation to the committee responsible for the selection of instructional materials and supplies.
   5. Make studies and recommendations for text book selections or revisions and for curriculum.
   6. Assist in the orientation and guidance of new departmental teachers.
   7. Maintain the departmental inventory and submit a recommended budget to the building principal.
   8. Maintain and recommend acquisition of new departmental equipment.
   9. Perform such other duties related to the foregoing duties as may be assigned from time to time by the building principal. (West Allis, Wisconsin)

Screening and Selection Procedures

Fifty-eight provisions pertinent to department chairmen, principals, superintendents, or other supervisory staff contained procedures for screening and selecting applicants for the position. Final authority for appointing department chairmen rested (in descending order of frequency) with the school board, the superintendent, teachers in the department, the principal, and "the administration." In the 29 provisions placing final selection of department chairmen with any administrative body or administrator, teachers in the department were allowed to make recommendations to the person(s) making the decision. Three other provisions also allowed teachers to make recommendations in the appointment of principals and superintendents.

Final authority for the selection of department chairmen rested with one person or a single staff classification in 15 provisions. Teachers in the department made the selection in seven provisions, the board in three provisions, the principal in three provisions, the superintendent in one provision, and the administration in one provision. Seven provisions indicated that the selection of department chairmen was the combined responsibility of the board, various administrators, and/or the faculty, but the role of each group or individual in the decision-making process was not specified.

In two agreements seniority was named as a factor in the selection of department chairman; one stipulated that seniority in the district was the determining qualification when all other qualifications were equal. Miscellaneous rules applying to the selection of both department chairmen and supervisors included the posting of vacancies, the date or time of year when selection is made, the date of notification of action, and notification to unsuccessful applicants of the reasons for their rejections. Table 5 provides a breakdown of screening and selecting procedures as separately applied to department chairmen and other supervisory personnel. Reprints of sample negotiated provisions setting forth such procedures follow the table.

[a]One additional agreement contained screening and selection procedures for both department chairmen and principals.

Sample negotiated provisions are:

A. Selection. Before selecting a department chairman, the building administrator will meet with the department concerned to ascertain its preferences. Any department that wishes to do so may hold an election in order to determine the preferences of the teachers involved. The department may indicate to the building administrator the results of the election as their preferences. Such preferences shall have great weight with the building administrator when he selects the department chairman. No person will be appointed department chairman without the consent of the teacher involved. Department chairmen shall be selected from within the building personnel of the department concerned, and whenever possible will be selected by May 1 of each school year for the following year. Department chairmen are members of their department system-wide curriculum committee. (Dearborn, Michigan)

* * *

A. The teachers in any department or grade level in elementary, junior high or senior high may each year select from among their number a Department Chairman. The Department Chairman may exercise such coordinating and administrative functions as have heretofore been performed including serving as liaison between teachers of the department and the school administration. Such chairmen shall not be considered supervisory or executive employees.

D. The provisions of this Article shall apply to both building department chairmen and system-wide department chairmen. (Farmington, Michigan)

* * *

E. Appointments for the foregoing positions shall be made for a period of one year as follows:

1. The principal shall submit a recommendation to the Superintendent;
2. An advisory committee selected by the Association shall make its recommendation by October 1, 1968 to the Superintendent;
3. The Superintendent shall appoint the secondary department chairmen. The decision of the Superintendent is final and not subject to the grievance procedure if the above procedure is followed. (Orchard Lake, Michigan)

O. Hiring and Assigning Principals. Prior to the hiring and/or assignment of any building principal, the Ithaca Teachers Association will be notified and will appoint a committee of not more than 5 members from the building involved to investigate and recommend relative to the applicants. After the initial screening by the administration, the committee will be advised of the names and qualifications of the candidates being considered for the position and will be afforded an adequate opportunity to interview any or all of said candidates upon its request. After said interviews and such other inquiry as the committee shall deem fit to conduct, and consultation with the Superintendent, the committee will make a confidential report of its evaluation and recommendations to the Superintendent for consideration in hiring and assigning.

P. Hiring and Assigning Superintendent of Schools. Prior to the hiring and/or assigning of a Superintendent of Schools, the Ithaca Teachers Association will be notified and will appoint a committee of not more than 9 members to review and recommend relative to the applicants. The committee will be advised of the names and qualifications of the final candidates being considered for the position and afforded an adequate opportunity to interview any or all of said candidates upon its request. After said interviews and such other inquiry as the committee shall deem fit to conduct, and consultation with the appropriate committee of the Board, the Ithaca Teachers Association committee will make a confidential report of its evaluation and recommendations to the Board for its consideration in hiring and assigning. (Ithaca, New York)

Compensation and Length of Service

All provisions which stipulated the position's term of service, allowed some released time for the performance of duties, and provided additional financial compensation applied to department chairmen. Eighteen provisions variously stated the department chairman's term of service as one year (nine provisions), two years (five provisions), three years (two provisions), five years (one provision), and permanent contingent upon satisfactory performance (one provision).

Provisions granting released time and/or financial compensation for department chairmen numbered 46. Those granting a specific amount of released time for the performance of duties provided one period per day (eight provisions), two periods per day (two provisions), or one day per month to secondary-school department heads and one-half day per month to elementary-school department heads (one provision). Several of these provisions also allowed teachers to be released from homeroom duty or extra duties. Agreements granting varying amounts of released time according to the number of teachers in a department or the nature and amount of departmental work usually provided a range of daily teaching assignments for department chairmen varying from one to five classes. In those instances where the assignment of teaching periods to chairmen depended upon the number of teachers in the department, a specific number of teaching periods was assigned in relation to a specific number of teachers.

Of the provisions allowing additional compensation for department chairmen, 22 provided a flat amount above regular salary stated either as an exact sum (18 provisions) or as a percentage of salary (four provisions). Seven provisions allowed varying amounts of additional compensation according to the number of teachers in a department or the department's subject area. Four provisions did not define the amount of compensation. Table 6 indicates the number of agreements containing various released time and/or financial compensation provisions relative to department chairmen. Excerpts from five sample negotiated provisions are reprinted following the table.

Sample negotiated provisions are:

In most circumstances, these teachers would hold the position of department chairman for at least two years. (Madison Heights, Michigan)

* * *

A. Department chairmen shall be released from normal teaching loads as follows:

Number of teachers (excluding chairman)	Released time
1 - 10	One period
11 - 20	Two periods

B. In addition to the foregoing, Department Chairmen will be relieved of homeroom and other special duties. However, all Department Chairmen shall have at least one regular classroom teaching assignment.

C. The professional period of Department Chairmen shall be used for supervision.

D. Clerical assistance shall be provided departments as follows: One additional clerk-typist shall be assigned to the High School for staff use. The Superintendent shall be authorized to hire additional temporary clerical assistance during peak periods. The Department Head shall request this additional assistance through the Principal. Present clerical employees shall be assigned to each academic department. (Huntington, New York)

The following should serve as suggestions in providing equitable professional loads for the department chairmen in the East Irondequoit School System. The suggestions are made with awareness that most department chairmen would feel a greater need for department supervision than the district is presently able to afford. Therefore, it should be recognized that these suggestions are made within the light of the present financial commitments of the district.

The department chairman's load would normally vary, depending upon the following three factors:

1. Number of personnel to be supervised in the department.
2. Size of departments' annual budget and amount of specialized supplies and equipment to be cared for.
3. Other unusual situations that might exist within the department. This would exclude such things as a large number of inexperienced teachers, experimental programs, departments that cut across disciplinary lines.

There is also the practical problem that there are a certain number of sections to be covered in each department, and this may mean that a department chairman will have to take an extra section one year, or may be freed of a regular section during a year.

In calculating the schedule for department chairmen, the following general rules should be considered:

Assuming a 35-period week, excluding lunch, department chairmen should have the following assignments:

1. 5 periods per week for general departmental supervision.

2. 1 period per week for each member of the department to be supervised.
3. 1 preparation and planning period per week for each class assignment.

Therefore, the daily assignments of chairmen in various size departments would follow the pattern as outlined below:

Teachers to be supervised	Daily schedule
1 to 5	From 5 teaching assignments to 4 teaching assignments
6 to 10	From 4 teaching assignments to 3 teaching assignments
11 to 15	From 3 teaching assignments to 2-1/2 teaching assignments
16+	2 teaching assignments

(Rochester, New York)

The appointment of Department Chairmen is authorized in each of the Secondary Schools in each of the subject areas on the following basis:

Number of teachers in department	Differential	Class load
1	$ 470	5
2-3	565	4
4-5	660	4
6-7	755	4
8-9	850	3
10-11	945	2
12-13	1,040	2
14-15	1,135	2
16-17	1,230	2
18-19	1,325	2
20 or more	1,500	1

The number of teachers in any given Chairman's Department is to be determined by counting each full time teacher and each part-time teacher including himself as one teacher. (Spring Valley, New York)

D. The chairman of each department shall be appointed for a three-year term on a rotating basis by the principal with the approval of the superintendent. (West Allis, Wisconsin)

ELEMENTARY PARENT-TEACHER CONFERENCE

In order to promote the welfare of elementary students through contact with their parents, the District and the Association hereby acknowledge the need for elementary parent-teacher conferences. Teachers shall participate in such conferences upon the following basis:

A. All elementary school classroom Teachers, excluding special education and kindergarten, shall be relieved of classes for two half days for the purpose of reporting to and conferring with parents.

B. All kindergarten Teachers shall be relieved of classes for two half days per session taught for the purpose of reporting to and conferring with parents.

C. For Teachers who have in excess of 27 students, substitutes shall be employed as follows:

1. Where the aggregate number of students in excess of 27 for all "excess" classes in any one elementary school equals at least six but not more than fifteen, one substitute shall be provided for one day.
2. For each additional ten "excess" students beyond 15, one (1) substitute shall be hired.
3. The "excess" students shall be totaled separately for each elementary school.
4. The substitutes so hired shall be used only for the purpose of relieving Teachers having such "excess" students, to enable their participation in parent-teacher conferences.
5. An equitable amount of substitute time shall be assigned among Teachers having "excess" students.
6. Any elementary classroom Teacher who has a full slate of conferences (four (4) in a two hour evening block) for two (2) or more evenings, shall be provided a substitute for the afternoon of the second and subsequent such days, commencing at 1:30 P.M.
7. Preparation for and scheduling of parent-teacher conferences shall be accomplished as follows:
   a. Prior to faculty meeting: The Administration shall have all family cards updated, shall prepare a separate stack for each Teacher, each stack to have an approximate equal number of cards, and shall band and mark each stack with the appropriate Teacher's name.
   b. At the faculty meeting:
      (1) The Administration shall review with the faculty the directions for procedure and distribute to the Teachers the appropriate banded and marked family cards.
      (2) Teachers attending the meeting shall remain at the meeting until completion of scheduling for multi-teacher conferences and shall return their assigned pack of family cards to the Principal before leaving. The time required for this scheduling should be approximately 1¼ to 1½ hours.
      (3) Multi-teacher scheduling: At the Faculty Meeting the family cards distributed to each Teacher will contain the names of some of his pupils and siblings in other classrooms. Each Teacher will be responsible for initiating the cooperative scheduling of those parents who will have more than one conference. In the span of the month set aside for conferences, each Teacher should be able to schedule these parents consecutively. The Principal is to be notified of any problems, which problems are to be resolved prior to the time a Teacher leaves the meeting. A parent should not be scheduled for more than three (3) conferences on one day and should not be scheduled cooperatively more than once.
      (4) Single conferences are those for parents with one child in the building and are to be scheduled after multi-conferences to fill in any gaps.
      (5) Teachers will be required to have tentative conference sheets, class lists and pencils for the faculty meeting.
      (6) Where afternoon conferences are scheduled, students will be dismissed at noon on that day.
      (7) Where evening conferences are to be held, the last conference shall be completed no later than 9:00 P.M.
      (8) All other conferences may be scheduled on regular school days when the Teacher has adequate time.
      (9) Contacting the parents: It is the Teacher's professional responsibility to make the initial and one additional attempt if necessary to schedule the parent. If unsuccessful after these two attempts, the names of unscheduled parents are to be sent to the Principal who will then assume responsibility for the scheduling.

      Teachers in notifying parents of scheduling are not to provide on the return slip a place for parents to indicate their choice of time for a conference. Proposed conference time is to be indicated on the notice.

Parents who find the scheduling inconvenient can then request a more appropriate time. (Baldwinsville, New York)

SELECTED NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS GOVERNING TEACHER PROMOTIONS AND TEMPORARY ASSIGNMENTS TO HIGHER CLASSIFICATIONS

An analysis of 978 comprehensive agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more indicated that 360 agreements (36.8 percent) contained a negotiated provision relative to the promotion of teachers to higher classifications, 45 agreements (4.6 percent) provided negotiated procedures for the temporary assignment of teachers to higher classifications, and 103 systems (10.5 percent) negotiated both promotion and temporary assignment provisions. Table 1 provides a state-by-state breakdown of the incidence of teacher promotion and temporary assignment provisions among the agreements analyzed.

Promotions are permanent assignments to higher classifications, while temporary assignments are expedient measures designed to maintain the continuity of school operations when persons in higher classifications are temporarily absent for reasons of emergency, leaves of absence, or while screening and selecting candidates to fill vacancies. Temporary assignments generally do not last more than a few days or weeks, but they may extend longer under extraordinary circumstances. Teachers assigned to higher positions on a trial basis who later return to the teaching ranks may be excluded from the recognized bargaining unit (depending upon the bounds of recognition) for the period of the assignment, but regain unit representation upon return to teaching, and retain their tenure status and all prior accumulated benefits. Specific contractual mandates concerning temporary teacher assignments to higher classifications include:

- Higher positions to which teachers may be temporarily assigned generally are stipulated as those of principal (where there is no assistant principal or other comparable administrator) and department chairman.
- Persons eligible for temporary assignment may include the entire teaching staff, teachers with the greatest seniority, or the most senior department members.

- Some agreements allow a principal to delegate his authority to particular teachers when necessary, while others simply state that teachers will be appointed to undertake temporary assignments.
- Conditions necessitating temporary assignments may include a principal's short-term absence, various emergency situations, and administrative or departmental vacancies.
- Compensation for temporary higher assignments variously is designated as a specified hourly rate, as payment at the administrator's hourly rate if the assignment lasts one full day or more, or as payment on a pro-rated basis. Some agreements simply specify that the teacher will suffer no loss in pay.
- Temporary assignments may be performed without compensation if a teacher is willing to undertake the responsibility without pay, if the assignment lasts less than one day or does not involve one or more consecutive days, or if the teacher is expected to handle only emergency situations requiring immediate attention.
- The length of the temporary assignment period is governed by the length of the absence, emergency, or vacancy involved, although some agreements provide that temporary assignments to vacant positions shall last no longer than a specified period of time.

Promotional positions generally are defined as positions paying a salary differential and/or those of a supervisory or administrative nature. They may include the positions of coordinator, department chairman, counselor, administrative assistant, assistant principal, principal, assistant superintendent, and occasionally specialist. As a vacancy in a higher job classification occurs, the school board or superintendent generally publicizes the opening on school bulletin boards, in periodic bulletins or newsletters, in the administrative office, or through notices enclosed with paychecks. Summer vacancies and/or vacancies occurring at the end of a school year are publicized through letters to officers of the representative organization and teachers who previously asked to receive such notices.

In an April 1970 arbitration award, a contract clause providing for the posting of vacancies occurring in positions "other than classroom teacher" was interpreted to require the Kingston (N.Y.) City School District to post an opening for the position of superintendent. While the district contended that certain appointments were left solely to its discretion, the arbitrator was unable to sustain the contention in the absence of any negotiated exceptions to the clause.

Posting periods vary from five days to 30 or more days with most agreements specifying that notice be posted as far in advance as possible or practicable. Some agreements require the posting of all vacancies by a particular date or month of the year. In the event of temporary emergency vacancies, posting periods may be waived or significantly reduced. Posting notices generally set forth the date by which application must be made, procedures for applying for the vacancy, required job qualifications, and a job description including salary.

Requirements governing a teacher's eligibility for promotion include appropriate degree and certification status, satisfactory prior service, the length of prior service in the system, an appropriate professional and experiential background, and good references or recommendations. In some school systems a standardized promotional test is administered and a minimum acceptable score specified. Subjective considerations include health, character, personality, administrative capabilities, and the applicant's ability to relate to students, his peers, and the public.

Specific negotiated items concerning application, selection, and appointment procedures include:

- Applicants from within the system are encouraged, and a number of agreements state that they will be given preference or first consideration during the selection process.
- Teachers generally must apply in writing to the superintendent or his designated representative within a time limit specified in the posting notice. Many systems provide a formal application blank, and the applicant receives written acknowledgment of his application.
- In some instances, an application must be accompanied by a transcript of the applicant's academic work and/or an attached list of qualifications for the position.
- Eligibility lists or application files are maintained in some systems with the requirement that a teacher maintain his eligibility by submitting to a new interview every other year, or bring his application up to date or submit a new application when applying for a specific promotional position. An arbitrator held, however, that the New Haven, Connecticut, school board was not barred from hiring two outside administrators who were not on the local eligibility list to fill positions of principal when the promotion clause referred "clearly and compellingly" to promotional eligibility requirements for teachers alone. While the clause stipulated that outside applicants for promotion "must meet the same conditions" as applicants from within the system, the arbitrator ruled that a literal reading of that phrase could not be sustained within the "teacher" context of the entire clause.
- Once eligible candidates for an opening are identified, many agreements outline various preliminary screening procedures including testing, evaluation or rating by an immediate supervisor or principal, and initial consideration by a three- to five-member joint committee.

- In most agreements, candidates are to be interviewed by a joint evaluation or selection committee which then recommends one to three candidates to the superintendent, personnel director, or school board for final consideration and/or selection. Teachers applying for several promotional positions usually are to be interviewed only once. If no final candidates are recommended at this step, notice of the position vacancy is to be reposted.
- Criteria used in recommending and/or selecting appointees include supervisors' evaluations, references or recommendations, merit considerations or ratings, and seniority. If two applicants are equally qualified, the tenure teacher with greater seniority often is selected. Most agreements specify that no discrimination will be shown. In an arbitration case involving the Boston School Committee, a teacher was found wrongfully denied promotion to a supervisory position because of a low biennial merit rating which left him with an inadequate number of "points" for promotion. The arbitrator found it sufficient, however, to say that a corrected biennial rating and a corrected rating list for supervisor would assure the teacher's candidacy for any future promotion. Another arbitrator held that the Warwick (R.I.) School Committee improperly denied promotion to a senior applicant for a science department chairmanship under a promotion clause stating that "where qualifications are considered equal, [system] seniority . . . shall prevail." Ruling that the committee had not produced "tangible evidence" that the grievant was less qualified for the position than the teachers promoted, the arbitrator said that "a mere count of science courses in undergraduate and graduate study does not represent sufficient evidence to warrant a conclusion that one individual with a generally fine record is not equal to others."
- The final appointment decision usually is made by the school board upon the superintendent's recommendation. If no appointee is named, notice of the vacancy is to be reposted.
- Candidates who are not selected for a promotion generally are given written notification of their rejection prior to public announcement of the final appointment. In some agreements, the applicant so rejected may request the reasons for his rejection or confer with the personnel director or superintendent.
- A number of agreements specify that neither the procedures for applying for a promotion nor an actual appointment to a promotional position may be grieved or submitted to arbitration, barring extraordinary circumstances such as a school board's unilateral action in violation of contractual guarantees.

Reprints of selected provisions governing teacher promotions and temporary assignments to higher classifications follow. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Temporary Assignments to Higher Classifications

Community Unit School District No. 9, Granite City, Illinois
Article XXX

At the beginning of each school year, someone from the staff in each building, where there is no designated assistant principal, shall be designated to act as principal at times when the regular principal or some other member of administration is not present. The person so designated shall be known to the entire staff and shall be compensated at a rate of $5.18 per hour payable to the nearest accumulated hour at the end of each school year. In cases of absence of the principal for a full day or more, the person designated to act as principal during the absence of the principal shall, unless some other administrator is present, receive payment for the days work on the basis of his position on the principals' salary schedule.

Revere Public Schools, Revere, Massachusetts Article IX, Section H—Teacher Assignment

Principals, in the event of their short-term absence, will be empowered to delegate authority within their buildings to teachers with seniority who are willing to accept the responsibility without compensation.

Clintondale School District, Mt. Clemens, Michigan
Article VIII, Section D—Transfers

Any teacher who shall be transferred to a supervisory or executive position, and shall later return to a teacher status, shall be entitled to retain such rights as are prescribed by the State Tenure Law.

Metuchen Public Schools, Metuchen, New Jersey

Item 1(b)–Agreements to be Implemented Through Board Policy–Department Chairman

In case of vacancy, the senior member of the department in terms of service within the district, will become Acting Department Chairman until such a time as a regular appointment is made by the Board. He will be compensated on a pro-rated basis. No vacancy will exist for more than one full school year.

Buffalo Public Schools, Buffalo, New York

Article V, Sections E and F–Compensation and Expenses

Whenever a teacher is appointed Acting Principal for one day or more, the teacher shall be relieved of his classroom duties for the period of the principal's absence. When a principal is absent for less than one day, and no substitute is provided, the teacher designated as Acting Principal shall not be expected to handle any matters coming into the principal's office other than emergency situations which require immediate attention.

When a teacher temporarily assumes the duties of another position for two or more consecutive days, the teacher shall suffer no loss in pay and shall be paid at the daily rate of the assumed position, if higher, for all such consecutive days.

Promotions

Derby Public Schools, Derby, Connecticut

Article XII, Section C–Working Conditions–Promotions

1. All vacancies in promotional positions caused by death, retirement, resignation, or by the creation of a new promotional position shall be filled pursuant to the following procedure:
   a. Such vacancies shall be adequately publicized, including a notice in every school (by posting, through the Superintendent's bulletin or otherwise) as far in advance of the date of filling such a vacancy as possible (ordinarily, at least thirty (30) days in advance and in no event less than two (2) weeks in advance.
   b. Said notice of vacancy shall clearly set forth the qualifications for the position.
   c. Teachers who desire to apply for such vacancies shall file their applications in writing with the Office of the Superintendent within the time limit specified in the notice.
      (i) If in the determination of the Superintendent the qualifications of applicants are substantially equivalent, preference should be given to qualified teachers employed by the Board.
      (ii) Promotional positions are defined as follows: positions paying a salary differential and/or positions on the administrator-supervisory level, including, but not limited to, positions as Superintendent, assistant superintendent, supervisor, assistant supervisor, director, assistant director, principal, assistant principal, department chairman, guidance director, counselor, and administrative assistant.
      (iii) All vacancies (as defined above in the case of promotional positions) for specialists and/or special project teachers shall also be filled pursuant to the procedure set forth in Paragraph (a) above.
      (iv) All appointments to the aforesaid vacancies and openings shall be made without regard to age, race, creed, color, religion, nationality, sex or marital status.

Bridgewater School District, Bridgewater, Massachusetts

Article IX–Promotions

1. For purposes of this Article, a "promotional position" is defined as any position paying a locally funded salary differential and/or any position on the Administrator-supervisor level.

2. Whenever any vacancy in a promotional position occurs during the school year, notice thereof shall be placed on a bulletin board in every school as far in advance of the date of filling the vacancy as possible. Written notice of any such vacancy occurring during the months of July and August will be sent to each teacher who shall have filed his name and summer address with the Superintendent for the purpose of receiving such notices. Notices of a vacancy shall state the qualifications for the position, its duties and the rate of compensation and a date, not earlier than fourteen (14) days after the notice is posted or mailed, by which any teacher desiring to apply for the position may file his written application with the Superintendent. Except on a temporary basis, vacancies will not be filled within fourteen (14) days from the date the notice is posted or mailed, as the case may be.

3. The Committee shall fill vacancies on the basis of merit and may seek applicants to fill the same in any manner and from any source it deems appropriate. When, in the opinion of the Committee, all other factors involved in merit are substantially equal, preference in appointment will be given to qualified teachers already employed by the Committee. Each teacher applicant not selected will receive a written notification of the action taken by the Committee. Appointments to promotional positions shall not be subject to grievance procedure or arbitration. Wherever reasonably practicable, appointments will be made not later than sixty (60) days after the notice is posted or mailed.

4. Appointments to promotional positions will be made without regard to the race, color or creed of the appointee or, except where the qualifications for the position may otherwise require, to his sex or marital status.

Lincoln Park School District, Lincoln Park, Michigan

Article VIII—Promotions

A. The Board shall be responsible for the selection of the Superintendent of Schools and all other members of the central office staff. All other positions in the school system carrying contractual compensation in lieu of the regular teacher contract and providing such position is one of an administrative and/or executive nature shall be considered as a promotional position within the meaning of this Article. This section shall also apply to high school and junior high school department heads, summer school and night school directors.

B. The Board of Education shall declare a position vacant and the Superintendent shall post a notice of the vacancy in the Office of the Superintendent and additional postings, accompanied by a job description, shall be made available to each school office where there may be eligible candidates. Any qualified candidate may apply at the Office of the Superintendent on the proper application form. No vacancy shall be filled, except in case of emergency on a temporary basis, until such vacancy shall have been posted for at least seven (7) days. Temporary appointments shall not extend beyond the current school year. During the summer, available positions shall be the subject of notice mailed to teachers' homes.

C. The Superintendent shall make the recommendation for a specific promotion to the Board of Education in open session after having sought the help and advice of an Evaluation Committee of five (5) people, three (3) selected by him and two (2) selected by him from a panel of seven (7) named teachers provided by the Association. Any committee may function if at least four (4) of its members are present to evaluate candidates.

D. The Superintendent shall consider the committee's opinions and evaluations in arriving at his decision in making his recommendation to the Board.

E. The Evaluation Committee shall make an objective evaluation of all qualified candidates and shall include the following criteria in reaching their final evaluations: academic background; personality; health; character; total teaching and administrative experience; length of service in Lincoln Park; ability to relate with children, the public and his peers; a demonstrated willingness toward community service, and an interview, if the committee deems necessary, of all interested candidates by said committee. However, preference shall be given to candidates from within the local system, providing qualifications are essentially equal.

F. In case there is no applicant for a vacancy, the Superintendent may recommend to the Board a person to fill the vacancy, provided the individual appointed meets the qualifications as posted and consents to the appointment.

G. The Evaluation Committee shall recommend the top three candidates, where possible. If the Superintendent or the Board cannot recommend or appoint one of the top three candidates recommended by the Evaluation Committee for the position, the position shall automatically be reposted and the promotional procedure repeated.

H. Ground rules for the functioning of the Evaluation Committee shall be established, printed, and distributed to committee members by the Superintendent or his designate.

I. Central office promotional positions will be subject only to paragraph B of this Article.

J. Promotional appointments will be made by the Board after the Superintendent's recommendation.

Dayton Public Schools, Dayton, Ohio

Article XX–Teacher Promotions

20.01 Definition. Promotional positions are defined as follows: Positions paying a salary differential and/or positions on the administrator-supervisory level, including, but not limited to the following positions: assistant director, principal, assistant principal, community school coordinator, administrative intern, and administrative assistant. The Board shall give first consideration to qualified candidates from within its own staff of employees when filling vacancies above the teacher level.

20.02 Publicity. Whenever a vacancy occurs in a position for which teachers are qualified, the Board will publicize the position by special bulletins to each school. Such bulletins shall include information concerning general responsibilities, qualifications, procedures for obtaining the position, and the deadline for filing the application. Basic criteria to be considered for each position will be indicated on all publicity.

20.03 Eligibility for Administrative Appointment:
1. Appropriate degree and certification status.
2. Satisfactory service on the position held at the time of application.
3. Appropriate experience background.

20.04 Promotional Examination. A promotional examination will be administered each school year, such examination being provided and graded by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, New Jersey. Date, time, and place will be announced. A candidate must obtain a score over the 50th percentile to qualify for further administrative consideration. A person failing to achieve the desired score may retake the examination after a lapse of one year.

20.05 Fee. There will be no charge for this examination to any Dayton Public School teacher who wishes to take it.

20.06 Field Analysis. The field analysis is based upon information obtained from evaluations made by principals and supervisors under whom the candidate has served. The rating will reflect the applicant's past and present performance in the classroom.

20.07 Initial Consideration. An initial consideration of candidates is determined by the results of the written examination and the field analysis.

20.08 Interview Committee. The interview committee shall consist of heads of three or more departments. The committee shall meet as needed to interview prospective administrative candidates and to nominate personnel for future administrative and supervisory positions.

20.09 Eligibility List. An annual review of the eligibility list, consisting of all who are interviewed, will be conducted by the Superintendent and the Personnel Department. *Candidates must understand that placement on the eligibility list does not guarantee promotion. Every applicant must be interviewed at least every other year.

20.10 Miscellaneous:
1. Final decision is the responsibility of the Superintendent who makes recommendations to the Board for personnel appointments.
2. The Superintendent may make temporary assignments of personnel to fill a permanent position. Such appointments shall extend until selection procedures are completed, but not beyond the current school year.
3. Reclassification or retitling of existing positions or the combination of two or more positions shall not require advertising of vacancies.
4. One interview may be held for more than one position in cases of teachers with more than one interest.

Cranston Public Schools, Cranston, Rhode Island

Article XVII–Promotions

A. Promotional positions are defined as positions requiring state certification and paying a salary differential over the regular teachers' salary schedule.

---

*Upon request, the Personnel Department will indicate to an interviewee his relative eligibility placement by quartile.

B. All vacancies in promotional positions shall be filled pursuant to the following procedures:
   1. A notice shall be posted in every school building clearly setting forth a description of, and the qualifications for, the positions, including duties and salary.
   2. Such notices shall be posted as far in advance as practicable, and at least ten school days before the final date for submission of applications.
   3. Teachers who desire to apply for such vacancies shall submit their applications in writing to the Superintendent or his specified representative within the time limit specified in the notice. Applications shall include qualifications for the position as well as other data requested in the notice and/or helpful in evaluating the applications.
   4. Teachers who apply and are qualified for such position shall be interviewed by a committee which shall include one person from the negotiating unit appointed by the Superintendent after consultation with the President of the CTA. Interview ratings for each qualified applicant shall be prepared independently by each member of the committee. Such ratings shall not be subject to the provisions of Article XIII. Recommendation for a vacancy shall be made by the Superintendent from among the top three applicants unless he decides to make no recommendation from such applicants.

C. Promotional positions shall be filled on the basis of the best qualified person available provided, however, that where two or more candidates are substantially equal in qualification, the applicant with the greatest seniority in the Cranston School System shall be given preference. The decision of the Committee, unless arbitrary, capricious, and without basis in fact, will be final.

D. The Association will be notified within a reasonable time when a promotional position becomes vacant after the end of the regular school year but before the opening of the fall semester. Teachers who wish to be notified of any vacancies in promotional positions occurring after the close of the school year but before the opening of the following school year may leave their name and a mailing address with the Superintendent. The administration shall send a notice of vacancy in promotional position to all teachers exercising such option. Applications from such teachers must be received by the Superintendent or his specified representative within ten (10) calendar days of the postmark date on the administration's notice to the candidate to be eligible for consideration.

E. All teachers who apply and are qualified for a promotional position shall be interviewed and shall subsequently be notified of the disposition of their application before the appointment is made.

CALIFORNIA WINTON ACT

As amended effective November 24, 1970

Sec. 1. Sec. 3501 of the Government Code is amended to read:

3501. As used in this chapter:

(a) "Employee organization" means any organization which includes employees of a public agency and which has as one of its primary purposes representing such employees in their relations with that public agency.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, "public agency" means the State of California, every governmental subdivision, every district, every public and quasi-public corporation, every public agency and public service corporation and every town, city, county, city and county and municipal corporation, whether incorporated or not and whether chartered or not. As used in this chapter, "public agency" does not mean a school district or a county board of education or a county superintendent of schools or a personnel commission in a school district having a merit system as provided in Chapter 3 (commencing with sec. 13580 of Division 10 of the Education Code.

(c) "Public employee" means any person employed by any public agency excepting those persons elected by popular vote or appointed to office by the Governor of this state.

Sec. 2. Article 5 (commencing with sec. 13080) is added to Chapter 1 of Division 10 of Part 2 of the Education Code, to read:

Article 5. Employee Organizations

Sec. 13080 of the Education Code is amended to read:

13080. It is the purpose of this article to promote the improvement of personnel management and employer-employee relations within the public school systems in the State of California by providing a uniform basis for recognizing the right of public school employees to join organizations in their professional and employment relationships with public school employers and to afford certificated employees a voice in the formulation of educational policy. Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to supersede other provisions of this code and the rules and regulations of public school employers which establish and regulate tenure or a merit or civil service system or which provide for other methods of administering employer-employee relations. This article is intended, instead, to strengthen tenure, merit, civil service and other methods of administering employer-employee relations through the establishment of uniform and orderly methods of communication between employees and the public school employers by which they are employed.

It is the further intention of the Legislature that nothing contained in this article shall be construed to restrict, limit, or prohibit the full exercise of the functions of any academic senate or faculty council established by a school district in a community college to represent the faculty in making recommendations to the administration and governing board of such school district with respect to district policies on academic and professional matters.

Sec. 13081 of the Education Code is amended to read:

13081. As used in this article:

(a) "Employee organization" means any organization which includes employees of a public school employer and which has as one of its primary purposes representing such employees in their relations with that public school employer.

(b) "Public school employer" means the governing board of a school district, a school district, a county board of education, a county superintendent of schools, or a personnel commission of a school district which has a merit system as provided in Chapter 3 of this division.

(c) "Public school employee" means any person employed by any public school employer excepting those persons elected by popular vote or appointed by the Governor of this state.

(d) "Meet and confer" means that a public school employer, or such representatives as it may designate, and representatives of employee organizations shall have the mutual obligation to exchange freely information, opinions, and proposals; and to make and consider recommendations under procedures in a conscientious effort to reach agreement by written resolution, regulation, or policy of the governing board effectuating such recommendations.

(e) "Persistent disagreement" means a disagreement between the parties to meeting and conferring required by this article that has not been resolved to the mutual satisfaction of the parties through such meeting and conferring within a reasonable period of time after the initial presentation of proposals, which shall be not less than 30 days, except by mutual consent.

13082. Except as otherwise provided by the Legislature, public school employees shall have the right to form, join and participate in the activities of employee organizations of their own choosing for the purpose of representation on all matters of employer-employee relations. Public school employees shall also have the right to refuse to join or participate in the activities of employee organizations and shall have the right to represent themselves individually in their employment relations with the public school employer.

13083. Employee organizations shall have the right to represent their members in their employment relations with public school employers. Employee organizations may establish reasonable restrictions regarding who may join and may make reasonable provisions for the dismissal of individuals from membership. Nothing in this section shall prohibit any employee from appearing in his own behalf in his employment relations with the public school employer.

13084. The scope of representation shall include all matters relating to employment conditions and employer-employee relations, including, but not limited to wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment.

Sec. 13085 of the Education Code is amended to read:

13085. A public school employer, or such representatives as it may designate who may, but need not be, subject to either certification requirements or requirements for classified employees as set forth in this code, shall meet and confer with representatives of certificated and classified employee organizations upon request with regard to all matters relating to employment conditions and employer-employee relations, and in addition, shall meet and confer with representatives of employee organizations representing certificated employees upon request with regard to procedures relating to the definition of educational objectives, the determination of the content of courses and curricula, the selection of textbooks, and other aspects of the instructional program to the extent such matters are within the discretion of the public school employer or governing board under the law. The designation of representatives, as provided herein shall not preclude an employee organization from meeting with, appearing before, or making proposals to the public school employer at a public meeting if the employee organization requests such a public meeting.

Notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 13082 and 13083, in the event there is more than one employee organization representing certificated employees, the public school employer shall meet and confer with the representatives of such employee organizations through a certificated employee council with regard to the matters specified in this section, provided that nothing herein shall prohibit any employee from appearing in his own behalf in his employment relations with the public school employer. The certificated employee council shall have not more than nine or less than five members and shall be composed of representatives of those employee organizations who are entitled to representation on the certificated employee council. An employee organization representing certificated employees shall be entitled to appoint such number of members of the certificated employee council as bears as nearly as practicable the same ratio to the total number of members of the certificated employee council as the number of members of the employee organization bears to the total number of certificated employees of the public school employer who are members of employee organizations representing certificated employees. Each employee organization shall adopt procedures for selecting its proportionate share of members of the certificated employee council, provided that such members shall be selected no later than October 31 of such school year. Within 10 days after October 31, the members of the certificated employee council shall meet and select a chairman, and thereafter such certificated employee council shall be legally constituted to meet and confer as provided for by the provisions of this article. Employee organizations shall exercise the rights given by sec. 13083 through the certificated employee council provided for in this section.

13086. Public school employers and employee organizations shall not interfere with, intimidate, restrain, coerce or discriminate against public school employees because of their exercise of their rights under sec. 13082.

Sec. 13087 of the Education Code is amended to read:

13087. A public school employer shall adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the administration of employer-employee relations under this article.

Such rules and regulations shall include provision for verifying the number of certificated employees of the public school employer who are members in good standing of an employee organization on the date of such verification, and where a certificated employee council is required by sec. 13085, for the size of the certificated employee council. The public school employer may require an employee organization to submit any supplementary information or data considered by the public school employer to be necessary to the verification of the number of members in an employee organization and such information or data shall be submitted by the organization within 10 days after request, provided that membership lists, if requested, shall not be used as a means of violating sec. 13086. In addition, such rules may include provisions for (a) verifying the official status of employee organization officers and representatives, (b) access of employee organization officers and representatives to work locations, (c) use of official bulletin boards and other means of communication by employee organizations, (d) furnishing complete and accurate nonconfidential information pertaining to employment relations to employee organizations and (e) such other matters as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this article.

Sec. 13087.1 is added to the Education Code, to read:

13087.1 A public school employer shall meet and confer with representatives of employee organizations or the certificated employee council pursuant to sec. 13085 with regard to a procedure for the resolution of persistent disagreements which may include fact finding and shall adopt rules and regulations establishing such a procedure, which procedure shall be mutually acceptable to the parties meeting and conferring. In the event the parties cannot agree on a procedure for the resolution of persistent disagreements, the parties, at the request of one of them, shall refer any persistent disagreement to a committee of three persons, one selected by the school employer, one selected by the employee organization or the certificated employee council, as the case may be, and in turn those persons shall select the third member. The committee shall report its findings to the parties at a public meeting of the parties. The committee may report recommendations to the parties at a public meeting upon the prior written agreement of both parties. Such findings and recommendations shall not be binding on the parties.

Sec. 13088 of the Education Code is amended to read:

13088. The enactment of this article shall not be construed as making the provisions of sec. 923 of the Labor Code applicable to public school employees and shall not be construed as prohibiting a public school employer from making the final decision with regard to all matters specified under sec. 13085.

Sec. 13089 is added to the Education Code, to read:

13089. This article shall be known and may be cited as the Gordon H. Winton, Jr. School Employer-Employee Relations Act or the Winton Act.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Order of the Commissioner No. 70-229, effective June 19, 1970, establishing a BOARD OF LABOR RELATIONS

Part I. Policy. The Government of the District of Columbia firmly supports the principle that, consistent with the paramount public interest, the efficient administration of the D.C. Government and the well being of employees require that an orderly and constructive relationship be maintained between employees and management.

Unresolved disputes in the public service are injurious to the public, the government and the employees. Protection of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively safeguards the public and employees from injury, impairment and interruptions and removes certain recognized sources of strife and unrest by encouraging practices fundamental to the friendly adjustment of disputes.

It is the policy of the District of Columbia Government to eliminate the causes of obstructions to the orderly and efficient operation of government by encouraging the practice of collective bargaining, by protecting the right of employees to organize and to designate representatives of their own choosing, and by providing procedures for preventing the interference by employers and employees with the legitimate rights of the other.

Part II. Composition and membership. Sec. 1. The board of Labor Relations shall consist of five members. The members of the Board shall have expertise in the field of labor-management relations and shall possess the integrity and impartiality necessary to protect the public interest as well as the interest of the District of Columbia and its employees. Members shall hold no other full or part-time office for which compensation is paid from District funds or from Federal grants to the District of Columbia; nor shall members receive compensation from labor organizations representing District Government employees.

Sec. 2. The members of the Board shall be appointed by the Mayor in the following manner: a. Two members shall be chosen from lists of three names proposed by each labor organization representing a significant number of District Government employees or units of employees in agencies subject to the labor-management relations program of the Mayor, as set forth in the District Personnel Manual. Both labor members shall not be appointed from a list submitted by the same labor organization, unless that person's name appears on more than one list. b. Two members shall be chosen from a list of five names proposed by an ad hoc committee representing management within the District Government. This committee shall be selected from among the directors of those departments and agencies subject to the labor-management relations program of the Mayor in which there is a substantial degree of representation by labor organizations. c. The four members selected as above shall propose a list of three names to the Mayor, from which the Mayor shall select an impartial fifth member, who shall be Chairman. If the members cannot agree on a list of nominees within 30 days, the Mayor shall select a Chairman. d. The Mayor may ask that additional names be submitted.

Sec. 3. The terms of office shall be three years. In the case of the initial selections, the Chairman shall serve for three years, one labor and one management representative shall serve for two years, and one of each shall serve for one year. The short terms shall be chosen by lot. All members shall be eligible for reappointment

Sec. 4. Any member of the Board may be removed for cause, after having been given a copy of the charges against him and an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in his defense upon not less than 10 days' notice.

Sec. 5. The procedure for filling a vacancy resulting from the expiration of a term of office shall be initiated at least 30 days prior to the expiration. Each member shall hold office until his successor is appointed and has qualified. If a vacancy occurs during a term, the new appointee shall hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term and until a successor is appointed and has qualified.

Sec. 6. If at any time any matter comes before the Board in which any member has any interest, direct or indirect, other than that of a taxpayer, the member shall publicly so state and his statement shall be recorded in the minutes of the meeting. He shall thereafter be disqualified from participation in the consideration of said matter.

Part III. Duties and Powers. Sec. 1. To determine in disputed cases appropriate bargaining units and related issues.

Sec. 2. To resolve appeals concerning the method of determining majority status and over the conduct of elections, and to certify exclusive bargaining representatives.

Sec. 3. To decide whether unfair labor practices have been committed and issue an appropriate remedial order binding on the parties, or to make recommendations to the Mayor as provided in paragraph 18(d)(2) of Chapter 25A, District Personnel Manual.

Sec. 4. To resolve impasses through factfinding or final and binding arbitration; to remand disputes if it believes further negotiations are desirable or if the matter comes under the jurisdiction of another authority.

Sec. 5. To make a final determination as to whether a matter is within the scope of collective bargaining.

Sec. 6. To decide whether a dispute shall be subject to a grievance procedure, and to consider appeals from arbitration awards pursuant to a grievance procedure. Such awards may be reviewed only for reasons that the arbitrator was without or exceeded his jurisdiction; the award on its face is contrary to law and public policy, or was procured by fraud, collusion, or other similar and unlawful means.

Sec. 7. To conduct investigations, hear testimony, and take evidence under oath at hearings on any matter subject to its jurisdiction.

Sec. 8. To administer oaths or affirmations and to require the attendance of witnesses with any necessary records or other records which have a bearing on the dispute. However, regulations dealing with the confidentiality of personnel files shall not be abrogated.

Sec. 9. To make final decisions and to take appropriate action on charges of failure to adopt, subscribe or comply with the Standards of Conduct for Labor Organizations.

Sec. 10. To make recommendations concerning desirable revisions or amendments to Chapter 25A, District Personnel Manual.

Sec. 11. To adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its business, and the carrying out of its powers and duties.

Sec. 12. To consider matters that would otherwise be within its jurisdiction arising in agencies not subject to Chapter 25A, District Personnel Manual under such terms and conditions as the Board by regulation may prescribe.

Sec. 13. To delegate any of the functions of the Board to panels of three of its members, each panel consisting of the Chairman, one labor member and one management member.

Sec. 14. To establish and maintain a list of mediators, factfinders and arbitrators, and to appoint same as provided in Chapter 25A, District Personnel Manual.

Part IV. Compensation. Members of the District of Columbia Board of Labor Relations shall be intermittent employees of the District of Columbia, and shall receive compensation when actually performing services as members of the Board.

Part V. Oath of Office. Each member of the Board before entering upon the discharge of his duties as such member shall take an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him as such member.

Part VI. Staff. The Board may appoint such staff as it determines necessary within the limits of available appropriations. Interim staff assistance may be furnished by the Personnel Office.

Part VII. Effective Date. The provisions of this order shall become effective immediately.

CRIMINAL CONTEMPT CONVICTION OF TEACHERS UNION FOR VIOLATION OF ANTI-STRIKE INJUNCTION UPHELD

The Illinois Appeals Court upheld a lower court's refusal to dissolve a temporary anti-strike injunction and its issuance of a show cause rule which resulted in the criminal contempt conviction of the Cook County College Teachers Union, Local 1600, and its president. Although the employer, the Cook County Board of Junior College District No. 508, moved to dissolve the injunction after a strike settling agreement was reached, the trial court denied the motion, and its decision was affirmed by the appeals court in holding that > we must remind teachers and public employees that the interests of unionism do not justify standing in defiance of law. If we do not do this, and if contemptuous and illegal conduct by teachers were condoned, either by school boards or by courts meekly acceding to requests made under pressure, there would be erosion and ultimately destruction of the high place in public esteem that unions enjoy in our society.

Local 1600 was recognized on October 11, 1966, as exclusive bargaining representative for a unit of full-time academic faculty employed by the board. Negotiation of a collective agreement began shortly afterward, but on November 30 the board filed a complaint seeking declaratory judgment and an injunction, alleging that the union was threatening to strike. The Cook County Circuit Court issued a temporary injunction on that date restraining the union from > participating in, or causing, inducing or encouraging, any strike or other concerted withholding of service, or interference with the performance of service, by any employee of plaintiff, or from picketing, parading or patrolling at or in the vicinity of the junior college campuses maintained and operated by plaintiff for the purposes of inducing such strike or other concerted withholding of services.

Although the president of Local 1300 did not see or receive a copy of the injunctive order, he knew it had been issued on November 30. Nevertheless, the union held a meeting of its membership that evening, and an estimated two-thirds of the board's teaching staff subsequently struck and picketed the board's campuses on December 1 and 2, 1966. The union's president was seen either picketing or in the vicinity of picketing during the strike.

Then on December 20, counsel to the board moved to dissolve the temporary injunction because the parties reportedly had settled their dispute. The circuit court, however, denied the motion and directed the board's attorney to file a petition for a rule on the union and its officers to show cause why they failed to comply with the temporary injunction. A petition was filed on December 21 and a rule was issued that day. Following other legal proceedings and the parties' ratification of a one-year agreement effective January 1, 1967, a hearing on the show cause rule was held on May 22, 1967. At the conclusion of the hearing, the union and its president were found guilty of criminal contempt; the circuit court imposed sentences of a $5,000 fine on the union, and a $1,000 fine and 30 days in jail upon the union president.

On appeal, the union alleged that the injunction was unconstitutional and void, that the board waived its right to seek punishment for contempt by its motion to dissolve the injunction, that the union's cause was prejudiced by the trial court's refusal to grant a change of venue, that the union president arbitrarily was singled out for punishment, and that the evidence presented did not prove the union guilty of contempt. The Illinois Appeals Court disposed of the first contention by finding that the trial court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and that "the questions defendants can raise in this appeal are whether the order finding them guilty of contempt is supported by evidence and whether it conforms to those rules of law which govern such proceedings."

As to the contempt issue, the union argued essentially that the injunction was directed at a labor dispute which, when settled, satisfied the party obtaining the injunctive order and thereby rendered the contempt moot at the time of its prosecution and strictly civil in nature. The appeals court, however, disagreed, explaining that > a useful test by which a civil contempt can be distinguished from a criminal one is the punishment imposed. When punishment is purely punitive: imprisonment for a definite term, fine for a certain sum of money, the contempt is said to be criminal. When punishment is a remedial or coercive measure: commitment of a contumacious party until he complies with the mandate of the court, a fine until there is obedience to the court's order, the contempt is said to be civil. . . . In the case before us no coercive order was issued for the benefit of [the Board]; no request for the contempt proceedings was made by Board. The trial judge . . . directed issuance of the rule in order to determine if [the union] had willfully violated a duly issued court order. Punishments the court imposed were fines in sums certain and imprisonment of [the union president] for a definite period. Thus. . . the proceedings were to determine whether defendants were guilty of criminal contempt of court. . . . Under no theory can a party that obtains an injunction bind the issuing court with condonation of contemptuous or illegal acts of those who violate the court's order.

In rejecting the union's third contention, the appeals court found the union's petition for a change of venue untimely since it had been filed long after the trial court had ruled on substantive issues in the case. The court also found no merit to the assertion that the union president arbitrarily had been selected for punishment in ruling that "it was not abuse of discretion for the trial judge to order proceedings against only [the president] and Union even though other individuals may have engaged in the same conduct." As to the adequacy of the evidence presented, the court concluded that "the recited evidence, none contradicted by defendants, proved beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants were guilty of contempt of court. . . . The fines and sentence of imprisonment which the trial court imposed manifest exercise of reasonable discretion." (Board of Junior College District No. 508, County of Cook and State of Illinois v. Cook County College Teachers Union, Local 1600, et al., Illinois Appeals Court, First District, June 26, 1970.)

APPEALS COURT REFUSES TO CLARIFY PREVIOUS AGENCY SHOP RULING

A May 28, 1970, decision of the Michigan Court of Appeals (NRD, 10-70, 4) which ruled agency shop "a valid bargainable issue in contract negotiations" was made final August 3 with the court's denial of a motion for clarification and a request for reconsideration and rehearing en banc. Stating that "proceedings in this court in this cause have now been terminated," the case as previously reversed and remanded eventually will come before the Wayne County Circuit Court for a determination of the relationship between payments to be made by Southgate Education Association (SEA) members and nonmembers under an agency shop clause contained in an agreement between the SEA and the Southgate Community School District.

As previously reported, the court of appeals had raised the question of what constitutes a nonmember's proportionate share of the cost of negotiating and administering a contract, and commented that "it is not clear . . . that agency shop or any form of union security agreement is a valid 'condition of employment' and subject to collective bargaining in the public employment sector." While holding that the state's public employee bargaining statute (the Hutchinson Act) did not indicate a legislative intent to eliminate agency shop provisions in public employee agreements, the court had explained that MCLA §423.211 [a portion of the Hutchinson Act) . . . requires the selected representative to bargain for all employees, union and non-union. If benefits derive from such bargaining, non-union as well as union members enjoy those benefits, and it would be inequitable not to require non-union members to pay their proportionate share of the cost of obtaining and administering such benefits.

It is apparent from reading article 2, § A . . . of the [Southgate] contract here involved that the validity of this agency shop provision hinges on the relationship between payment of a sum equivalent to the dues of SEA, MEA and NEA and a non-member's proportionate share of the cost of negotiating and administering the contract involved. If this payment is greater than or less than that proportionate share, the agency shop provision is in violation of MCLA §423.210 [a portion of the Hutchinson Act which prohibits public employers from discriminating "in regard to hire, terms or other conditions of employment in order to encourage or discouage membership in a labor organization"].

As the case's record at that time lacked proofs permitting a determination of the validity or invalidity of the Southgate agency shop provision, the court of appeals reversed and remanded the case and ordered the state board of education to join the action as a party. (Jean Smigel, et al v. Southgate Community School District, et al., Michigan Court of Appeals, August 3, 1970.)

TENURE NOT AUTOMATIC UPON SATISFACTORY EVALUATION OF PROBATIONARY TEACHER FOR TWO YEARS

The Michigan Supreme Court split 4-3 in favor of denying a probationary teacher's action seeking contract renewal and other relief following the Elk Rapids school board's decision not to rehire him for a third consecutive (and tenure-conferring) year. Relying upon the court's 1960 decision in Wilson v. Flint Board of Education, the teacher argued that under the Michigan Teacher Tenure Act tenure employment confers after satisfactory completion of the two-year statutory probationary period. The court, however, ruled that Wilson "does not settle the question here," and that plaintiff's constitutional rights of due process and equal protection of the laws were violated neither by the Act nor by the board's action.

Under the Michigan Tenure Act "all teachers during the first two school years of employment shall be deemed to be in a period of probation [Art. II, § 1] . . . [and] a third year of probation may be granted by the controlling board upon notice to the tenure commission" (Art. II, § 2). Art. III, § 1 then provides in pertinent part that "after the satisfactory completion of the probationary period, a teacher shall be employed continuously by the controlling board under which the probationary period has been completed, and shall not be dismissed or demoted except as specified in this act." Discharge, demotion, and appeals procedures applicable to tenure teachers specifically "shall not apply to any teacher deemed to be in a period of probation" (Art. II, § 4). Finally, Art. II, § 3 of the Act provides:

> At least 60 days before the close of each school year the controlling board shall provide the probationary teacher with a definite written statement as to whether or not his work has been satisfactory. Failure to submit a written statement shall be considered as conclusive evidence that the teacher's work is satisfactory. Any probationary teacher or teacher not on continuing contract shall be employed for the ensuing year unless notified in writing at least 60 days before the close of the school year that his services will be discontinued.

Plaintiff first was employed as a probationary high-school teacher in September 1966, and taught during the 1966-67 and 1967-68 school years. In late November 1967, the high-school principal evaluated plaintiff's teaching and found it satisfactory in every respect, stating that he would "not hesitate to recommend [plaintiff] for tenure at the end of this year." Plaintiff again was deemed a satisfactory teacher after a second evaluation in mid-January 1968, and the principal recommended that he be given a tenure contract for the 1968-69 school year. Nevertheless, plaintiff received a February 20, 1968, letter from the local board stating: "I regret to inform you that on February 12, 1968, the Elk Rapids School Board directed me to notify you that you would not be offered a contract for the 1968-69 school year."

In bringing an action seeking a writ of mandamus in the Antrim County Circuit Court, plaintiff alleged that the board had violated the requirements of Art. II, § 3, of the Act by not sending him "a definite written statement as to whether or not his work has been satisfactory." He contended that "a mere letter stating that he would not be given a contract does not meet the express statutory requirement." Furthermore, he alleged that > defendants' action in attempting to discharge plaintiff [has] been unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious, and defendants have attempted to deprive plaintiff of his employment without according him either the substantive or procedural due process of law to which he is entitled under the equal protection and due process clauses of the United States and Michigan Constitutions or the Michigan Teacher Tenure Act.

The board maintained it had a reason for denying plaintiff tenure, had acted according to its statutory rights, and was not bound to divulge the reason for its decision not to rehire. Counsel for the defense contended:

> It is the privilege and within the discretion of the school board to determine whether or not they will give a contract to anybody who is a probationary teacher, whether their work is satisfactory or unsatisfactory. The school board acted, and they told him he was not to get a contract for the next year. He complains as to not getting notice as to why.
> I don't believe that is necessary. This is a discretionary matter with the school board; and what plaintiff is asking this court to do is to substitute the orders of the school board by ordering the school board to give this tenure contract; and this is not within the provisions of the law or the Tenure Act itself, or the intention of the legislature.

On July 16, 1968, the trial court denied mandamus, emphasizing that plaintiff was not on a continuing contract for the ensuing school year, and that the school board's notice was neither a dismissal nor a termination of contract. The Michigan Court of Appeals affirmed that decision on May 26, 1969, in finding that the case was one of "not rehiring plaintiff, which the board could decide to do, and its action is controlling on the facts of this case."

In the instant appeal plaintiff contended that Art. II, § 3, and Art. III, § 1, of the Act "dictate that once it is established that a probationary teacher's work is satisfactory . . . the School District is obligated to rehire said teacher and, after two years of satisfactory service, a school board must grant him tenure in that School District, absent some compelling reason." In addition, he argued that under the express provisions of Art. II, § 3, a school board's decision > as to whether to renew the contract of a probationary teacher must be related to the satisfactoriness of the teacher's work in that District during the probationary period. Therefore, when plaintiff completed his second year of probation and the Board did not give him any notification that his work was unsatisfactory, he gained tenure status and, pursuant to the Tenure Act, the Elk Rapids Board had a clear duty to offer him a contract for the next school year.

Plaintiff cited Wilson as supportive of his interpretation for there the Michigan Supreme Court approved an order of the state tenure commission reversing the Flint board's dismissal of a teacher who had completed a three-year probationary period (as statutorily permitted), but had received no written statement regarding the nature of her work following her first two years of employment (the required statutory probationary period). The court emphasized that while a school board may grant a third year of probation for the benefit of the teacher, the Act does not specify that a board may require three years of probation in all cases. In the absence of a written statement assessing the teacher's work at the close of either her first or second year of service, the court ruled that the teacher satisfactorily had completed the probationary period at the end of her second year and was entitled to tenure status. As such, she could be dismissed only for reasonable and just cause and in compliance with portions of the Act adhering for tenure teachers.

However, the court found Wilson dissimilar to the case at bar because in Wilson "the issue . . . was whether the [school] board could establish a three-year probationary period," and then discharge a teacher at the end of that period without written notification of the quality of her work following her first and second years of employment. Pointing to the legal distinctions between tenure and probationary teachers, the court held that "the right to challenge a board's decision granted to the teacher who has acquired 'continuing tenure' is not granted to the probationary teacher." As plaintiff was not on a continuing contract, "the Board's notice was not a dismissal or termination of contract . . . and . . . the Board's action notifying plaintiff in writing that he would not be offered a contract for 1968-69 was authorized by statute."

The due process issue raised by plaintiff was rejected by the court in its finding that the Act violates neither the federal constitution nor the state constitution. Citing portions of a New Jersey Supreme Court decision in Zimmerman v. Board of Education of the City of Newark, the Michigan Supreme Court denied plaintiff's appeal on grounds that his contract relationship with the local board was not continuing. According to the Zimmerman ruling, > teacher tenure is a statutory right imposed upon a teacher's contractual employment status. In order to acquire the status of a permanent teacher under a tenure law and with it the consequent security of permanent employment, a teacher must comply with the precise conditions articulated in the statute. . . . Except for statutory conditions, a teacher is retained solely on a contract basis during his probationary employment. At the expiration of an annual contract period, the employment relationship ceases to exist unless a new contract has been entered into. . . . And except to the extent of constitutional or statutory limitations, there is no legal duty on the part of a board to re-employ a teacher at the end of a contract term.

The three dissenting Michigan Supreme Court judges, however, urged that a writ of mandamus should issue, and stated that the instant case "if not controlled by the letter, is certainly controlled by the spirit of Wilson." Summarizing the thrust of the Wilson decision, the minority explained that there the court held > that while the board might grant a third year of probation for the benefit of the teacher, it could not require it, and that the failure to give written notice as to whether or not the work was satisfactory during the statutorily provided two year probationary period was not conclusive evidence that the work was satisfactory.

> "The result of the above" we said, "is that the teacher has satisfactorily completed the probationary period, is entitled to the status of tenure, and may not be dismissed save for reasonable and just cause, and then only in compliance with the provisions of the act" . . . (emphasis added).
> Under the clear intendment of Wilson the plaintiff here is entitled to the status of tenure.

Examining the purpose of the Act as given in detail in various cases and interpretive material, the minority opinion asserted that "the whole thrust of the act is to limit the local board's power in its employment of teachers." The dissenting judges explained:

> We are not saying that the board lacks any discretion to retain or not to retain a probationary teacher. The probationary period is just that—a period of proof. We are saying that the intent of the entire act was to eliminate capricious and arbitrary employment policies of local school boards. This includes the probationary as well as the tenure period of employment. . . . The act spells out that probation is a period of trial. Its satisfactory completion requires that a teacher who completes his probation must be hired. At this point the board's discretion has been removed, and thereafter, cause must be shown for a teacher's removal. . . . Art. III Sec. 1 provides in part that "after the satisfactory completion of the probationary period a teacher shall be employed continuously by the controlling board under which the probationary period has been completed, and shall not be dismissed or demoted except as specified in this act." (Emphasis added.)
> The only fair reading of this section is that upon "satisfactory completion of the probationary period" the teacher is entitled to be given tenure by that board.
> "Shall be employed by the controlling board" takes it out of the boards' hands to decide whether or not to accord tenure.

Under the majority opinion, however, plaintiff was denied re-employment and a requested award of monetary damages, and the earlier decision of the Court of Appeals was affirmed. (Scott Munro v. Elk Rapids Schools, et al., Michigan Supreme Court, July 17, 1970.)

PROBATIONARY TEACHER'S NONRENEWAL GRIEVANCE DEEMED SUBJECT TO NEGOTIATED ARBITRATION PROCEDURES

In response to a dispute regarding the language and scope of a negotiated grievance arbitration clause, a Milwaukee County Circuit Court judge ruled that the clause should be construed liberally to allow employees "a fair opportunity to be heard on vital matters concerning their employment." Specifically, the court held that a grievance over the discharge of a probationary teacher is subject to arbitration for, while such a grievance was not named as an arbitrable matter in an agreement between the Greenfield Education Association (GEA) and Joint School District No. 6, neither was it specifically excluded. The court explained:

> One could argue that since the main purpose of these arbitration agreements is to avoid strikes, a premise that does not apply to city and municipal employees as they cannot legally strike, strict construction would be required. This court would adopt the reasoning that liberal construction should be adopted because they cannot legally strike and these employees should be aided by the arm of arbitration.

When a probationary teacher with three years' experience was denied renewal by the district, the GEA instituted normal grievance proceedings. The district, however, refused to go to arbitration, claiming that contract nonrenewal was neither a grievable nor an arbitrable subject under the parties' contract. During subsequent litigation, the GEA argued that owing to the broad language of the arbitration clause, the grievance must be covered by the agreement unless specifically excluded. The district cited a portion of a 1953 attorney general's opinion to the effect that a collective agreement made with a municipality should be strictly construed because "if not so interpreted [it] may tend to be detrimental to a vital government function."

In allowing the discharged teacher access to negotiated arbitration procedures, the court held that "legislative silence" regarding the enforcement of collective agreements cannot be equated "with a meaning that municipal employees can make valid collective bargaining agreements and then fail to honor them, unless each and every particular dispute is listed with particularity." Once a municipal employer has engaged in collective bargaining "the courts cannot allow a government agency to rely on the proposition that it should not abide by its own adopted resolutions . . . . Thus this court decides that arbitration agreements with municipalities are to be interpreted under the same standards as those of private employees and those agreements should be given liberal construction when interpreted by the court."

Although the district attempted to argue that nonrenewal of a contract was not the same as an arbitrary dismissal, the court concluded that the merits of the probationary teacher's claim would have to be determined by an arbitrator and, therefore, were outside the province of the court. NO DENIAL OF DUE PROCESS OR EQUAL PROTECTION FOUND IN COLLEGE'S REFUSAL TO BARGAIN WITH UNION

The U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, upheld a federal district court's denial of a petition for a mandatory injunction seeking to compel state-financed Delgado College to bargain collectively with a union as exclusive representative of some, but not all, of the college's faculty members. Pointing out that the state "has no statute permitting or requiring publicly owned educational institutions to bargain collectively with its teachers," the appeals court agreed with the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana that "this case presents no cognizable issue of due process or equal protection."

The ruling affirmed the federal district court's holding (NRD, 11-69, 3) that, while Delgado College is an agency of the city of New Orleans and the city had bargained with other unions representing municipal employees, no discrimination, anti-union bias, or denial of equal protection was evident in the college's refusal to bargain collectively with the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1130. That court had explained that > when a government official grants rights to some and denies them to others, this may constitute a denial of equal protection. But the executive branch is entitled no less than the legislature to reasonable discretion in handling its affairs and to a range of experiment in determining its course. Here no "intentional or purposeful discrimination has been shown". . . nor have "conspicuously artificial lines" been established. . . . School teachers have been legislatively classified differently from other public employees in many ways. . . . It is therefore not unreasonable and hence not unconstitutional for a legislature to exclude public school teachers from a public employees' labor relations act, which gives other state employees the right to bargain collectively. . . . It would appear that equal latitude may be exercised by executive officials in determining whether they should bargain collectively with school teachers as well as with various other classes of public employees. This is particularly true when public officials are presented with a demand that one union be recognized as exclusive bargaining agent for all teachers, whether or not the teachers are union members. Board Findings and Rulings

MERC NO LONGER WILL RELITIGATE ITS UNIT DETERMINATIONS AS JUDICIAL APPEALS NOW ARE PERMITTED

As a result of a Michigan Supreme Court decision and in response to a refusal to bargain charge entered by the Southgate Principals and Supervisors Association against the Southgate Community School District, the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) issued a policy statement declaring:

> Henceforth, this Commission will not, absent extraordinary circumstances, relitigate the appropriateness of a bargaining unit resulting from a Commission ordered election since the parties to the representation proceedings have the right to appeal the Commission's determination of an appropriate unit or the direction of election to the Michigan Court of Appeals, and thereafter to the Michigan Supreme Court. In the absence of an appeal to the Court of Appeals, the Commission's bargaining unit decision has become final, and not subject to collateral attack.

While acknowledging that under the National Labor Relations Act "an appropriate collective bargaining unit determination may be litigated in the form of a refusal to bargain unfair labor practice case," the MERC explained that a June 10, 1968, decision of the Michigan Supreme Court (Michigan State University Board of Trustees v. State Labor Mediation Board) "held that the Michigan [Hutchison] Act provides for judicial review of representation cases by the Court of Appeals. . . . Therefore, the necessity of refusal to bargain litigation in order to obtain judicial review of appropriate unit determinations of Commission decisions is eliminated."

In the instant matter, the Southgate district refused to bargain with its principals following a January 21, 1970, determination of the MERC that principals and assistant principals (as well as several other job categories) "are all supervisors within the meaning of [the Hutchinson Act], and are properly includable in a supervisory bargaining unit." Relying upon its Hillsdale Community Schools decision (NRD, 2-69, A-2, C-14), an appeal of which then was pending in the Michigan appellate courts, the MERC had ruled that a unit of "all professional supervisory employees" was appropriate and accordingly directed an election among eligible employees of the Southgate district.

In Hillsdale the MERC found that supervisory and executive public employees are eligible for representation under the Hutchinson Act, and that the Act contains no specific prohibition against supervisory units. Moreover, while the Act refers to sec. 423.9e of the state's Labor Mediation Act (LMA) which specifically excludes executives and supervisors in the private sector from LMA coverage, the MERC held that sec. 423.9e "is incorporated into [the Act] only for standards of unit determination and to provide a prohibition against supervisors and executives being included in the same unit with employees they supervise."

According to a trial examiner, the Southgate district in the instant action refused to negotiate in order to challenge the MERC's decision since the Michigan Supreme Court had not finally determined whether principals and assistant principals are supervisors and whether they are entitled to representation under the Act. Moreover, the district claimed that in the absence of such a ruling it had not committed an unfair labor practice by refusing to bargain. But the MERC emphasized that the Michigan Court of Appeals twice has upheld similar unit determinations. In dismissing the district's objections, the MERC held that its refusal to bargain constituted an unfair labor practice and ordered the district to negotiate with the Association. NEW YORK

PERMISSIVE LANGUAGE OF LEAVE CLAUSE ALLOWS SCHOOL BOARD TO DENY LEAVE ONLY IF SPECIFIC CONTRACTUAL CRITERIA ARE NOT MET

An advisory arbitrator determined that the permissive language of a negotiated academic leave of absence clause does not allow a school board absolute discretion to grant or deny such leave. Rather, use of the word "may" indicates that academic leave may not be granted if specific contractual criteria are not met, but that the board will grant leave following a good-faith determination that said criteria are met. In upholding grievances entered by two Fairport School District teachers who were denied academic leaves for the 1970-71 school year, the arbitrator additionally found that the local board exceeded the scope of its contractual discretion by allowing considerations (which were not contractual criteria per se) to become the "dominant motive" behind its denials of the teachers' leave applications.

At issue were portions of sec. IV(I) of a collective agreement negotiated by the district and the Fairport Education Association (FEA):

> 1) An academic leave of absence may be granted by the Board upon recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools to a teacher who has taught in the district for five years or more, for one academic year at one-half of the salary rate determined by the scale and step of the year of application on the salary schedule of the year of absence . . .
> 2) An academic leave of absence may be granted as above to a teacher who has taught in the district for ten years or more, for one academic year at the full salary rate determined by the scale and step of the year of application on the salary schedule of the year of absence . . .
>
> 4) A teacher may qualify to apply by:
>
> a. Having taught in the district for the number of years specified above;
>
> b. Submitting a written program of purposes, activities and benefits to the district. . . .
>
> 5) Criteria for determining the selection will include:
>
> a. Date of application.
>
> b. Availability of a qualified substitute.
>
> c. Value of the proposed study.
>
> d. Seniority of applicant.
> 6) The total number of staff members on any leave of absence shall be restricted to 2 percent of the teaching staff of any one building.

In late February 1970, two district high-school teachers filed applications with the superintendent for academic leaves of absence during the ensuing school year. One teacher proposed to conduct advanced study in health and physical education as preparation for eventual certification as a health instructor and in order to better qualify himself to deal with contemporary health and related issues. The other teacher planned to study a specific method of music instruction in Canada and Europe, as well as foreign schools' usuage of educational and closed circuit television. Their applications were denied by the local board, and the teachers' resultant grievances failed at three successive steps of the grievance procedure.

When the dispute was submitted to advisory arbitration, the Fairport board contended that it could grant leave if warranted, and that its discretion in denying the teachers' applications was exercised because of the district's fiscal condition and the fact that no funds had been allocated for 1970-71 academic leaves. It further maintained that the merits of the teachers' applications were "questionable as to both immediate and long range value to the district." The FEA, however, argued that use of the word "may" in the disputed contract clause was to "give the board reasonable [rather than absolute] discretion in determining whether an applicant meets the qualifications enumerated in the contract. In addition, since the only contractual fiscal condition was the 2 percent limitation and since academic leave was a negotiated benefit, the FEA contended that the district budget should provide for such leave. The FEA finally pointed out that the merits of the teachers' leave applications were not really questioned until the arbitration hearing.

Explaining that "ambiguous clauses in a collective agreement should not be construed narrowly and technically, but broadly so as to accomplish their evident aims," the advisory arbitrator disagreed with the district's claim to absolute discretion in denying a leave application: "Under this interpretation, the clause is deprived of any function at all, for the district would not be bound to any real contractual obligation." That is, since a contract's purpose is "to bind a party to something it might not do in the absence of that contract," the arbitrator held that disregard for the binding effect of the disputed clause would "render the clause meaningless." Finding the FEA's construction of the clause to be "the correct one," the arbitrator pointed out that allowing the board's discretion to extend only to criteria which are named in the contract > gives the board the final and determining voice in deciding if any applicant is qualified to receive academic leave, and who, among conflicting applicants is best qualified. On the other hand, it gives meaning to the clause by assuring that teachers receive, as partial consideration for the signing of the contract, a promise that the board will not act arbitrarily or capriciously, and that it will base its decision only on standards related to the criteria set forth in the collective bargaining agreement.

As to whether the board acted within its limited scope of discretion provided by the contract, the arbitrator found the district "extremely reluctant" to discuss the merits of the teachers' leave proposals, and noted that through all prior grievance proceedings the board "relied on the assumption that it had absolute discretion under the . . . agreement." The arbitrator thereby gained "a strong feeling that fiscal considerations were the dominant motive behind the denial of the applications." The district argued that even if this were true, a reasonable application of fiscal policy would be "sufficient to conform with contractual obligations of the proper use of discretion" because the criteria listed in the clause are not exclusive, and new criteria may be developed "if they are not arbitrary or capricious." While agreeing that the enumerated criteria are not exclusive, the arbitrator pointed out that they indicate the parties' intent and "any new standard must bear a reasonable relationship to these criteria." He concluded:

> Fiscal problems do not bear such a relationship, for, as the association made clear, the district's protection against financial hardship lies in the fact that only 2 percent of the teaching staff in any building may be granted such leave. To rule otherwise would put the association in the unfair bargaining position of listening to the board allocate sums to academic leave when it costed out association demands, only to discover later that no budgetary provision had been made. Academic leave is a cost item, and presumably the association surrendered one or another of its demands to get it into the contract. It is the responsibility of the district to either allocate funds to such items or not to consent to them in the first place. Since the district chose to obligate itself to grant academic leave when reasonable standards were met, it cannot say later that fiscal problems prevent it from living up to its obligation.

TEACHER MAY NOT BE TRANSFERRED FOR ENGAGING IN PROTECTED UNION ACTIVITY

In a two-sided case involving a teacher's transfer after his activities on behalf of the Milwaukee Teacher's Education Association (MTEA) and administrative criticism of his control of students, a Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) trial examiner recommended that the teacher be restored to his former position or an equivalent one in finding that the transfer was motivated in part by the teacher's "protected union activity." Noting that an adverse evaluation just prior to the teacher's transfer was his first "below average" rating and that subsequent testimony "was vague as to the reasons for the criticisms," the examiner ruled: "It has been held by this commission that regardless of how many valid reasons exist for action taken against an employee, if said action is partly motivated by protected union activities, then said action is unlawfully discriminatory and violates Section 111.70 of the Wisconsin Statutes."

First employed at Wells Junior High School in the Milwaukee school system in February 1968, the teacher was transferred at the beginning of the 1969-70 school year upon the recommendation of his principal. An evaluation of the teacher conducted by the principal in the spring of 1969 initially stated that "there can be no adverse criticism of [the teacher's] work in the classroom. He continues to plan well and to provide good learning activities for his pupils." However, the principal went on to say that the teacher > has displayed an overzealous attitude which on occasion has led to questionable judgment in dealing with matters outside his classroom. He has taken an active leadership role in criticism of the administration [and] the school, as well as of the superintendent's staff policies. This led to a polarization of this teaching staff which has caused considerable concern.

During testimony before a WERC trial examiner, it was found that criticism of the teacher's control of students occurred in the spring of 1969 after his confused handling of an incident where he was assaulted and injured by a female student; the girl's suspension a day after the incident occurred resulted in a parental inquiry and subsequent complaint. On other occasions the teacher had sent "referral cards to the office with with the word 'suspended' written on it, which amounts to a demand on the administration of the school to suspend said student. At the time a policy of clarification had been made to the staff by the administration wherein the staff was advised that suspension was not to be considered as a cure for all disciplinary problems."

The examiner found "sufficient evidence . . . seemingly supporting [the principal's] criticisms . . . [and supporting his] claim that the criticisms were based solely on [the teacher's] deficiencies in the area of student discipline and control." But he also found it "significant" that the principal's testimony as to the reasons for the criticisms was vague, and that "much of [his] explanation related to [the teacher's] alleged deficiencies in student control even though said deficiencies were subject to specific criticisms in another part of the evaluation."

In addition, the examiner held that the principal's recommendation that the teacher be transferred was motivated in part by the teacher's Association activities during the spring of 1969 when he processed two grievances dealing with local teachers' heavy teaching loads. In one instance, the teacher drafted a letter demanding a meeting between the faculty and the administration or teachers would stop taking extra classes (necessitated by a flu epidemic and a chronic shortage of substitute teachers); the principal reportedly was upset that he had not been asked to participate in the meeting resulting in the letter, and also indicated that the MTEA should not have gone over his head by writing the letter. This grievance was resolved several weeks after the epidemic when more substitute teachers were hired. The second grievance was entered by a gymnasium teacher who threatened to resign if her teaching load was not reduced. The teacher discussed this grievance with the principal who said that this teacher always had been a problem and that staff assignments were not the responsibility of the MTEA. The teacher's class load late was altered by the administration.

Based upon the principal's comments in reference to these two grievances, the trial examiner concluded that the principal's transfer recommendation was motivated in part by the teacher's MTEA activities and accordingly was discriminatory. CALIFORNIA

VALLEJO CITY CHARTER REVISED BY POPULAR VOTE TO PROVIDE COMPULSORY, BINDING ARBITRATION OF NEGOTIATION DISPUTES

Following passage of a public referendum, the city of Vallejo, California, revised its charter to include compulsory, binding arbitration as the final step in a three-step negotiation impasse resolution procedure. Voters approved by a wide margin sec. 809 of the new charter which provides for mandatory mediation in the event of negotiation disputes, followed by mandatory submission of any remaining unresolved matters to a three-member fact-finding committee whose report and recommendations are to be made public. By a considerably smaller margin, voters also passed sec. 810 of the charter which stipulates that > if the parties do not reach agreement within 10 days of the report and recommendations of the fact-finding committee, the issues shall be submitted to arbitration. . . . The [three] arbitrators shall consider all factors relevant to the issues from the standpoint of both the employer and the employee, including the City's financial condition. To the extent permitted by law, the decision of a majority of the Board of Arbitrators shall be final and binding upon the parties.

Sec. 810 additionally contains a no-strike clause holding that "any employee who fails to report for work without good and just cause during negotiations or who participates in a strike against the City of Vallejo will be considered to have terminated his employment with the City." In July 1969, Vallejo was the site of the state's first combined strike of police and firemen; the four-day walkout terminated with an amnesty agreement providing a 7 percent salary increase and various fringe benefits (NRD, 6-70, 15).

Although the city's charter was adopted by the local electorate earlier in 1970 and approved by the state legislature in August, the newly approved provisions will not become effective until April 27, 1971, following the results of a general municipal election.

DELAWARE

LABOR LAWS AMENDED TO REFLECT ESTABLISHMENT OF STATE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Amendments to the Delaware State Labor Relations Act, the public employee bargaining statute (which excludes school employees), and the Minimum Wage Act of the State of Delaware corrected statutory language to reflect the establishment of a State Department of Labor to function in place of the former state mediation service, the employment security commission, and the department of labor and industrial relations. The amendments were enacted by S.B. 660 and became effective July 6, 1970.

NEW YORK

DUES DEDUCTION FORFEITURE IMPOSED UPON STRIKING UNION NEITHER RECOGNIZED NOR CERTIFIED UNDER BARGAINING STATUTE

Finding no evidence of bad faith or extreme provocation on the part of the state of New York in its negotiation with one union representing state mental hygiene employees to the exclusion of another, the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) imposed a six-month dues deduction forfeiture upon the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) for an illegal series of strikes conducted at four state mental hospitals in mid-November 1968. In so ruling, the PERB reversed its hearing officer, although it did adopt the recommendation that penalties be confined to the four AFSCME locals representing employees at the strike locations.

A PERB hearing officer found that some 2,000 AFSCME members employed at the Creedmoor, Bronx, Buffalo, and Manhattan State Hospitals conducted walkouts because of alleged dissatisfaction with working conditions. Although the executive director of AFSCME Council 50 (an umbrella organization servicing the four locals involved) opposed the strikes, it was found that leaders and staff of Council 50 and the international union issued strike threats and actively participated in the strikes.

The precipitating cause of the strikes, however, was not grievances or working and economic conditions, but the fact that the governor's negotiating committee had begun formal negotiation with a competing union (the Civil Service Employees Association [CSEA]) of a 1969-70 contract covering mental hygiene employees at the four hospitals. Prior to the strikes, AFSCME agents had protested the state's continued recognition of and dealings with the CSEA as representative of the disputed bargaining unit; such recognition had been granted approximately a year earlier, but was to last only a year, at which time representation elections were to be conducted among state hospital employees. After the strikes began, Council 50 spokesmen indicated that they would end with the state's "breaking off negotiations with CSEA [and] endorsing . . . the [AFSCME] mental hygiene unit."

Despite contentions to the contrary, the PERB hearing officer determined that the AFSCME had caused, instigated, encouraged, condoned, and engaged in strikes by employees at the four state hospitals in violation of the Taylor Law. But, while finding no bad faith evident in the state's action, the hearing officer did find that the state had engaged in such acts of extreme provocation as to detract from or mitigate the union's responsibility for the illegal strikes.

In subsequent proceedings, the PERB agreed that Council 50 had participated in the work stoppages, noting that a union legally is responsible for prohibited strikes if any of its officers or agents are involved. Moreover, the PERB held that while the union was not recognized or certified pursuant to the Taylor Law, the law's strike prohibition and attendant penalties legislatively were intended to be applied beyond other statutory provisions, including those relative to representation rights. But the PERB rejected the hearing officer's finding of extreme provocation on the part of the state, explaining:

It is perhaps a logical application of the concept that extreme provocation detracts from the responsibility of the employee organization, to evaluate the alleged provocative acts of the employer from the subjective viewpoint of the affected employee organization. However, we do not believe that this was the approach intended by the legislature. The statutory formulation: ". . . the appropriate employer or its representatives engaged in such acts of extreme provocation as to detract from the responsibility of the employee organization for the strike," has a pejorative connotation which was not inadvertent. The legislature's intent was to codify the common-law prohibition against strikes by public employees, but to permit the mitigation of the penalty to be imposed against the employee organization where the strike was provoked by the misbehavior of the public employer.

The employer herein was not guilty of illegal conduct; indeed, the legality of the conduct complained of was specifically upheld by the New York State Court of Appeals. [See NRD, 6-70, 17, for background information on this point.] Further, according to the hearing officer, the conduct of the employer did not constitute bad faith; rather, he found that the actions complained of were dictated by valid administrative concerns. The criticism with which the employer can be charged is that it might have negotiated simultaneously with both [the AFSCME] and CSEA, as it did after the settlement of the strike. This non-exclusive negotiating procedure was ordered by PERB on November 30, 1967, but that order was overruled by the Court of Appeals and then rejected by the employer. Having accepted the hearing officer's findings of fact that the employer did not behave in bad faith or in violation of its obligation under the Act, we cannot find it guilty of extreme provocation.

QUESTIONS OF ARBITRABILITY PRESUMPTIVELY ARE ARBITRATOR'S RESPONSIBILITY IN BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTORS

A five-judge panel of the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, unanimously reversed a trial court's determination that arbitration of a grievance should be stayed because one of the issues in the grievance was untimely. Although contract language determines whether time limitations on grievances are "conditions precedent" to arbitration, the appellate court held that where contracts presume arbitrability and/or provide for arbitration, questions of arbitrability are to be determined by the arbitrator, not the courts (Matter of Long Island Lumber Company v. Martin).

As Long Island Lumber Company was a private sector ruling, the court examined public sector case law and the state's public employee bargaining statute (the Taylor Law) to determine whether that ruling is applicable to the public sector. According to the court, the three legal preconditions to binding arbitration of minor disputes are a statute or ruling enabling bargaining, standards for arbitration, and the limitation of arbitrable issues to the "law of the contract." The court pointed out that the Taylor Law mandates public employee bargaining, requires written agreements between public employers and recognized exclusive employee representatives, and authorizes the Public Employment Relations Board to establish mediation, fact-finding, and voluntary arbitration panels to resolve disputes.

The court also cited Central School District No. 1 v. Litz, et al. (NRD, 1-70, 5) in which the Onondaga County Supreme Court held that "it would fly in the face of the state policy of the legislature found in [the Taylor Law] which encourages grievance and arbitration procedures to hold that the ruling of Long Island Lumber Company v. Martin . . . was limited to the private sector." That opinion further stated that "the exercise of sovereignty includes the power to contract and to contract to arbitrate disputes," and concluded that "once a valid agreement has been entered into providing for arbitration, any controversy arising between the parties to the contract which is within the compass of those provisions must go to arbitration."

As such, the court in the instant matter held that the motion to stay arbitration should be denied, explaining that voluntary arbitration "long . . . [has been] accepted as a significant and effective method of resolving employer-employee disputes."

OHIO

VOTER DEFEAT OF SCHOOLS' OPERATING LEVY REQUESTS TERMED "DISASTEROUS"

Of a total of 243 operating levy requests for new property taxes entered on Election Day ballots across Ohio, only 68 new levies (28 percent) were approved by state voters making the November 1970 election "the most disasterous election in school history," according to the Ohio Education Association (OEA). Complete but unofficial election statistics reported by the OEA indicated that only four of the 175 operating levies subject to renewal were defeated by voters, but the OEA noted that "this marked the first time in recent history" that such had happened. School bond issues for the construction of new facilities registered a mere 23 percent approval rate in the election. Of all 484 bond and levy issues submitted to voters, 253 were passed for an approval rate of 52.3 percent, "the lowest over-all approval rate in Ohio history," OEA officials said.

Prior to the election, the OEA reported that 88 school districts were returning to the polls with operating levy requests which previously had been defeated. Forty-one systems had experienced one previous defeat, 22 districts had been on a ballot twice before, and 11 systems were returning for the fourth time. One of the remaining systems (Lancaster) was attempting for the seventh time to gain approval of a levy request, an effort which proved successful when local voters passed a 22.4 mill package which included a 10 mill renewal issue.

OREGON

REPRESENTATION ELECTION PERMITTED WHERE AUTOMATIC RENEWAL OF CONTRACT FORESTALLED BY RENEGOTIATION NOTICE

The Oregon Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) determined that a request for renegotiation under a contract's automatic renewal clause effectively constituted a timely "opening notice" which forestalled automatic renewal of the contract and nullified any prexisting contract bar to a representation election. While the Port of Astoria was not a public employer within the meaning of the state's bargaining statute when the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (ILWU), Local 50, petitioned the PERB for an election among certain port employees, the PERB held that a renegotiation request entered by the then recognized employee bargaining agent under the existing contract's automatic renewal clause opened the way for the rival union's election petition. An election accordingly was directed.

A contract between the port and the Clatsop-Tillamook Counties Building and Construction Trades Council became effective July 1, 1969, and was scheduled to expire June 30, 1970. The agreement contained a clause providing that it would "continue in effect from year to year thereafter," except that "if either party hereto desires to amend, modify or terminate this agreement upon the expiration date, a notice shall be required 60 days prior to such annual expiration date."

On April 30, 1970 (60 days prior to the contract's expiration), the trades council sent a letter to the port mentioning the "notice" required to forestall automatic renewal of the contract, requesting a wage increase, and asking that the agreement be amended by extending its effective date for an additional year. The ILWU's election petition, supported by pledge cards signed by a majority of unit employees, was filed with the PERB on the same date. According to PERB rules, a valid collective agreement with a term of up to two years serves as a contract bar to any election involving unit employees, although an election petition "may be filed not more than 90 calendar days and not less than 60 calendar days before the end of the two-year period.

In subsequent proceedings before the PERB, the ILWU argued that its petition met PERB filing requirements because the petition was entered 60 days before scheduled expiration of the existing agreement. But the PERB pointed out that the port did not become a public employer within the meaning of the state's bargaining statute until June 26, 1970, when it requested the use of PERB services and facilities. As such, the port was not subject to PERB rules when the ILWU petition was filed in April, and the ILWU "demand for recognition at that time was of no legal effect."

However, the PERB concluded that the trades council letter of April 30 (as conceded by the council) "constituted an 'opening notice' and did forestall the automatic renewal of the contract. The contract therefore terminated on June 30, 1970, and there is no contract now in effect between the port and the trades council that would bar an election under the rules of this board." The PERB explained that "the legal effect of [the automatic renewal] provision is the same as though it were worded 'shall continue in effect from year to year thereafter unless notice of amendment, modification or termination is given by either party to this agreement at least 60 days prior to the termination of this contract.' "

WISCONSIN

COURT SAYS WERC VESTED WITH EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION TO HEAR PROHIBITED PRACTICES COMPLAINTS IN MUNICIPAL EMPLOYMENT

In construing a seemingly ambiguous portion of Wisconsin labor law, the Milwaukee County Circuit Court (Branch 5, Civil Division) held that the legislature intended to vest in the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) "the exclusive jurisdiction of controversies concerning unfair labor practices and prohibited practices in municipal employment." To interpret the disputed statutory language to allow concurrent WERC and court jurisdiction would be "an unreasonable interpretation" which "would lead to unwise and impracticable consequences. It would eliminate the expertise of the commission, frustrate the development of a policy in employment relations, result in conflicting decisions and duplication of jurisdiction," according to the court.

Under sec. 111.70(4) of the Wisconsin municipal employment bargaining statute, the WERC is granted jurisdiction to hear prohibited practices complaints arising in municipal employment, although the procedure to be used in all such actions is governed by sec. 111.07 of the state's Employment Peace Act. That section, as amended in 1969, provides that "(1) any controversy concerning unfair labor practices may be submitted to the Commission in the manner and with the effect provided in this chapter, but nothing herein shall prevent the pursuit of legal or equitable relief in courts of competent jurisdiction."

When a fire fighter who was active in the local union was transferred by the West Milwaukee fire department and allegedly demoted thereby, the West Milwaukee Fire Fighters' Association, Local 1417, IAFF, brought a prohibited practices complaint in the circuit court charging that the transfer was calculated to discourage union membership and discriminate against plaintiff with regard to his terms and conditions of employment. Contending that sec. 111.07(1) vests the WERC and the circuit courts with concurrent jurisdiction to hear and determine prohibited practices controversies in municipal employment, the union sought an injunction against the transfer and an order restoring plaintiff to his former position. On the other hand, the employer argued that plaintiff had not utilized the provisions of a negotiated grievance procedure, and that sec. 111.70 vests exclusive jurisdiction in the WERC for hearing and determining prohibited practices complaints in municipal employment.

Noting that the question raised by the case "is apparently novel," the court determined that sec. 111.07(1), when construed in conjunction with declared public policy, "expresses the legislative intention to vest in the commission the exclusive jurisdiction" of prohibited practices disputes arising in municipal employment. While the union argued that the word "may" (as used in sec. 111.07) ordinarily implies permissiveness and/or the availablility of an option, the court held that > the word "may" in its permissive sense is not controlling. In statutory construction it is to be considered in connection with its context and subject matter and is to be construed as mandatory when such construction is necessary to give effect to the purpose and intent of the statute. . . . It is also a general rule that when the public interests or rights are concerned and where the public or third persons have a claim de jure to the exercise of the power, the word is construed as mandatory.

Citing an educator's interpretation of the word "may" as meaning that the WERC "is powerless to act until an alleged wrong is formally called to the attention of the commission by the filing of a complaint," the court agreed with that construction as applied to sec. 111.07(1) > in the sense that it provides the remedy and the procedure to be followed by the complainant to invoke the jurisdiction of the [commission] with respect to statutorily created unfair labor practices.

> The provision that nothing in the section shall prevent the pursuit of legal or equitable relief in the courts is not irreconciliable with exclusive jurisdiction of the WERC in unfair labor practices. While the position of this provision in the statute appears in connection with the jurisdiction of the commission, concededly an unfair labor practice may also violate common law rights over which the courts retain jurisdiction. Such instances would include a breach of contract suit or actions for injunctive relief for the prevention of breach of contract or violation of property rights. . . . In the case of a breach of a collective bargaining contract there may be a suit for breach of contract in the circuit court or a proceeding before the commission on a complaint charging an unfair labor practice. In the first case the suit would be brought for breach of contract in the traditional form of action, in the second on a proceeding before the commission on a complaint charging the violation of the terms of a collective bargaining agreement. . . . There is a very clear distinction between the suit in the circuit court and the proceedings before the commission.

Finding support for its interpretation of the statute in cases involving the New York Public Employment Relations Board and in various rulings pertinent to the powers and jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board, the circuit court concluded that it was without jurisdiction in the instant prohibited practices proceeding and accordingly dismissed it.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, OCTOBER 1970

Figures reported by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicate that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure for October 1970 stood at 137.4 (1957-59=100), an 0.6 percent rise above the previous month. BLS attributed most of the October rise to the fact that "prices of commodities other than food rose about twice as much as they usually do in October." In addition, new car prices advanced more than seasonally (reflecting price changes for both 1970 and 1971 models), and consumer services charges rose 0.5 percent. The October figure represented a 5.9 percent rise above the CPI all-items index of a year ago.

BLS also reported that the purchasing power of the consumer dollar stood at $.728 in October, based upon its average buying power in 1957-59; this means that items costing $1 at the end of the 1950's now cost $1.27. An estimated 338,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based upon the October CPI.

agreements (59.1 percent) contained provisions pertaining to elementary teacher lunch periods. The majority (73.9 percent) of the agreements provided for a teachers' lunch period under a general clause covering teachers of all grade levels in a given school system; the remaining provisions (151) dealt with lunch period criteria affecting only elementary teachers. Negotiation of such lunch periods generally covered three major issues: whether the time was duty-free; the persons to whom duties would be assigned; and the exact amount of time available to teachers for lunch. Table 1 outlines in detail the specific negotiated content of the provisions. The categories are not mutually exclusive and the analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements; it makes no attempt to cross-reference the 578 pertinent provisions with other provisions in a given agreement which indirectly may affect elementary teacher lunch periods.

Duty-Free Lunch Period

The majority (64.5 percent) of the 490 provisions allowing teachers a duty-free lunch period simply indicated to whom the provision applied, the amount of time allotted, and stipulated that the time was duty-free. Some typical sample provisions are:

D. Teachers will have a duty-free lunch period of at least the following lengths:

1. Elementary School, Grades K-6	45 minutes
2. Upper Elementary	25 minutes
3. Senior High School	25 minutes

(North Andover, Massachusetts)

* * *

6. All teachers shall have a duty free lunch period of at least thirty (30) minutes per school day. (Brighton, Michigan)

* * *

I. Each teacher shall have at least a 30-minute duty free, uninterrupted lunch period daily, starting no earlier than 11:00 a.m. and ending no later than 1:30 p.m. (Croton-on-Hudson, New York)

* * *

4. Duty-Free Lunch Period. All teachers shall be entitled to a duty-free lunch period of thirty minutes in the high schools, and a minimum of one hour in the elementary schools.

5. Flexible Noon Hour. Nothing above provided, however, shall prevent elementary schools from experimenting with shortening noon hour within existing staff limitations. Such plans shall be developed by the Principal in consultation with the RTA Building Representative and his committee and shall be subject to the approval of the Assistant Superintendent for Administration. (Rochester, New York)

Of the 490 duty-free lunch provisions, 117 (23.9 percent) stated how the duty-free lunch was to be implemented in that they provided some indication as to how the pupils' lunch period was supervised. On the other hand, 49 provisions (8.5 percent) specified emergency or circumstantial exceptions to the regular duty-free lunch period which would necessitate some supervision by teachers. Some provisions required that at least one teacher be available at all times to handle emergencies. Sample provisions include:

I. Noon-Hour Supervision: All teachers shall be given duty-free lunch periods of at least thirty (30) minutes except in emergency situations, e.g., tornado warnings, fires, serious accidents, etc. Where teachers do not have access to full cafeteria service, the time limits for duty-free lunch shall be extended at the discretion of the Superintendent. Staff members shall be expected to be on duty at least five (5) minutes prior to the return of their pupils. (Alpena, Michigan)

* * *

E. All teachers shall be entitled to a duty-free, uninterrupted lunch period of at least 25 minutes in length. In elementary buildings this shall be one hour in length during the 1968-1969 year, except that on days of inclement weather when students are confined to the building, sharing arrangements may be worked out in each building in cooperation with teachers and principals. (Grand Ledge, Michigan)

* * *

D. All teachers shall be entitled to a duty-free lunch period equivalent to the regular scheduled student non-eating noon period, except in case of emergency. (Horton, Michigan)

1. Elementary school teachers shall have a lunch period of at least one hour. In compliance with State Law, one certified teacher shall be on duty in each building to handle emergencies. In no case shall this involve supervision of lunchroom or playground activities. (Royal Oak, Michigan)

Necessary regular duties were to be performed by teacher aides in 31 provisions and by teacher aides and/or community volunteers in two provisions. Four of these provisions stated that teachers would supervise the aides. Teachers were allowed the option of volunteering for some noontime duties in 29 provisions; in such cases, 23 agreements stated that the volunteers would be paid, while six provisions did not indicate whether they would be compensated. Volunteers were allowed to rotate duties in three agreements. Although most of the provisions designated no procedures for carrying out duties, the language of a few provisions indicated that students normally went home for lunch or that building administrators were to implement a duty-free plan. Sample provisions are:

C. The Board of Education believes that all teachers should have at least a one-half hour duty-free lunch period, in addition to the planning period. To that end, principals are expected to make whatever arrangements are necessary and possible, recognizing that the time may not be precisely 30 minutes because of restrictions imposed by the program or the length of the school day.

D. The intent of this policy is to formalize existing arrangements while permitting flexibility. (Westport, Connecticut)

D. 1. Teachers will have a duty-free lunch period of at least the length of a regular student lunch period.

a. The Association commends the Committee for implementing the "Noontime Mothers" program. The Committee agrees to continue this program to assure each teacher a duty-free lunch period.

b. In the event of an emergency, the provisions of Section D, number 1 (above) may be suspended for a period of one (1) day per week. If this number of emergency suspensions should reach four (4) days per month in any building, then teachers in that building will not be required to perform lunchroom duty.

Nothing in this Section is intended to permit the regular assignment of teachers to lunchroom duty; nor is this emergency provision intended in any way to defeat the purposes of Section D, number 1. (Revere, Massachusetts)

* * *

All teachers shall have the entire period of time between the dismissal of class for lunch and resumption of class following that period free of all duties. (Parma, Michigan)

* * *

A. It is the intent of the Board to release all teachers from lunch and playground duty at the earliest practicable time, and no later than September 1969. In emergency situations, when it is necessary for a teacher to perform lunch or playground duty, the teacher shall be compensated as described below, after September 1969.

B. The Board agrees to begin recruiting and training lunch aides immediately, and, in any event, not later than August 1, 1968. The Board further agrees that teachers will be relieved as soon as trained aides become available, according to a priority schedule established jointly by the Association and the Board. The Association shall have the right to check the implementation of this program.

C. In the event that any teacher is still performing lunch or playground duty in September 1969, such duty shall be on a compensatory time basis, or at an hourly rate which shall be twice the rate paid a lunch aide or recreation supervisor for the same responsibility, whichever shall be elected by the teacher. The option of a teacher to perform lunch or playground duty shall not be available if an aide can be provided.

D. Every teacher shall have at least a thirty (30) minute duty-free lunch period, as provided by the New York State Education Law.

E. Elementary teachers shall have a one (1) hour duty-free lunch period, inclusive of necessary and reasonable supervisory duties scheduled on an equitable basis to maintain order and discipline in the building while children are passing to and returning from the lunch period, provided, however, that the provision of Paragraph D, above shall, in no instance, be violated other than in an emergency. (Syracuse, New York)

* * *

A. All members of the professional staff shall be provided with a daily duty-free lunch period of at least 30 continuous minutes or,

B. Should a teacher volunteer to serve in a supervisory capacity during either a hot or bag lunch program, such duty shall be compensated for at a rate to be later agreed upon and such teacher shall waive his right to A. above. (Madison, Wisconsin)

Qualified Duty-Free Lunch Period and Unspecified Lunch Period

Of the 50 provisions allowing teachers a qualified duty-free lunch period, 32 indicated that all teachers might be required to perform regular noontime duties under certain conditions. While many of these provisions intended to provide some duty-free time, it was recognized that insufficient numbers of aides, scheduling difficulties, or budgetary restrictions prevented the guarantee of a daily duty-free lunch period. Twelve provisions indicated that teachers always must perform certain regular duties, and six provisions stated that teachers were to perform duties with the help of any available aides. Sample provisions include:

C. It is agreed that teaching personnel shall be in charge of noon hour supervision of students. It is further agreed that all elementary teachers shall have one-half hour duty-free noon hours on days of supervision assignments. There shall be one teacher or administrator supervisor for each 100 children. In addition, one supervisor shall be provided for each 50 students in excess of 100. Yearly average noon hour attendance will be used as a basis of calculation. The following plans will be used for the appointment of noon hour supervisors:

1. Plan A
   a. Full-time teacher supervision shall be used in all buildings whenever possible. Such teachers will be acquired from each building staff on an annual voluntary basis by the building principal.
   b. In buildings where there is a volunteer teacher supervisor for noon hour, the salary shall be $500.00 per year, plus meals for each supervisor.

2. Plan B
   a. Plan B should be used only if there are no volunteer or volunteers under Plan A.
   b. Full-time teaching personnel including special teachers assigned to buildings will be given noon-hour supervision assignments on a scheduled basis. This will be a platoon system with one team of teachers taking 30 minutes of the planned noon hour, and another team taking the remaining 30 minutes.
   c. Under Plan B, each teacher will be paid $2.50 per clock hour plus meals for supervision assignment work.
   d. Principals shall make out assignment schedules at least one week in advance.

3. Plan C
   If necessary to fulfill the student-supervisor ratio required, a combination of both Plan A and Plan B will be used. For the purposes of making operative the noon hour provisions, elementary school shall open at 9:00 A.M. and close for the noon hour at 12:00 noon. All classroom teachers who are not on supervision assignments will have from 12:00 P.M. until 12:45 P.M. for the noon hour. School shall reopen at 1:00 P.M. for the afternoon session. In the event the administration alters the beginning time from 9:00 A.M. then this schedule shall be altered accordingly. (Coldwater, Michigan)

* * *

1. Elementary school teachers shall have a thirty (30) minute duty-free lunch period insofar as it can possibly be arranged within the limitations of facilities, staff and within budgetary limitations. (Valatie, New York)

* * *

C. 1. All staff members shall have an uninterrupted duty-free lunch period of at least one half hour daily, wherever possible. (Castroville, New York)

* * *

D. All elementary teachers shall have a lunch hour free from duties, except in cases mutually agreed upon by the Board of School Trustees, the Butte Teachers' Union, and the Superintendent of Schools.

Rule 24 (additions):

Paragraph 4 is supplemented by the following conditions and exceptions:

1. That elementary teachers shall supervise during the lunch period in a schoolroom assigned therefor, and for such time as is necessary, children in the following classifications:

a. Children who are transported to and from the school by duly authorized school buses and carry their lunches.
b. Children who carry their lunches during inclement weather. The condition of inclement weather shall be determined by the school principal and the Superintendent.
c. Children who reside more than one mile from school and carry their lunches.

2. That the duty of supervising children during the lunch period shall rotate among all of the teachers of each elementary school. Each teacher shall perform the duty for a period of one week at a time.

3. The period of lunch hour supervision shall not exceed thirty (30) minutes in the elementary schools.

4. That teachers shall not be required to supervise the playgrounds during the lunch hours. (Butte, Montana)

Thirty-eight provisions indicated that a lunch period for teachers was scheduled but did not specify whether teachers were granted a duty-free lunch or whether they regularly were responsible for some noontime duties. Typical provisions of this sort are:

A. The Elementary schedule of classes shall commence at 9:00 a.m. and end at 3:30 p.m. The lunch period for students will be scheduled from 12:00 noon to 1:30 p.m. During this time the teachers lunch period and a 45 minute preparation period will be scheduled. Preparation periods will be cancelled during inclement weather at which time teachers will be responsible for their own assigned students. (Fowlerville, Michigan)

Each teacher will be granted a full thirty (30) minute period for lunch and will have the opportunity to eat in the Teachers' Dining Room at Odessa and the Teachers' Room at Montour Falls during said period. In addition to the thirty-minute lunch period, each teacher will have one unassigned period per day. (Odessa, New York)

Miscellaneous negotiated items relative to teacher lunch periods included mention that teachers' dining facilities were to be separate from students', and a statement in 23 duty-free lunch provisions that teachers normally would be allowed to leave school premises during the lunch period. Provisions illustrating such items are:

2.1 Each teacher shall be allowed a 30-minute period each day for lunch. This period shall be at a time that is considered to be the normal lunch period (11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m.).

2.2 Teachers should have dining facilities separate from the students.

24.1 All teachers shall have an uninterrupted duty-free lunch period daily. For secondary teachers the lunch period shall be 30 minutes and for elementary teachers the lunch period shall be at least 30 minutes.

24.2 All teachers shall be permitted to leave the school for the duration of their lunch period. Those teachers wishing to leave the building shall notify the school office beforehand. (Thomaston, Connecticut)

* * *

B. Lunch Period—All teachers shall have a duty-free lunch period at least equal to the length of, and taken at the same time as, the pupil's lunch period. In no event shall the duty-free lunch period of any teacher be less than 30 minutes. A duty-free lunch period shall not require the teacher to supervise students or perform any duty whatsoever, and teachers are free to leave the school premises during their duty-free lunch period. (Jamestown, New York)

SELECTED NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS PERTINENT TO TEACHING HOURS, TEACHING LOAD, PREPARATION PERIODS, AND TEACHER LUNCH PERIODS

A study of 978 comprehensive agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more indicates that 758 systems (77.5 percent) negotiated provisions defining four major segments of the teacher's workday which are dictated by time and designated as teaching hours, teaching load, preparation period, and lunch period. Of the provisions analyzed, 182 (18.6 percent) contained a combination of all four elements, 40 provisions (4.1 percent) dealt only with teaching hours, 18 agreements (1.8 percent) contained a provision referring to teaching load only, 40 agreements (4.1 percent) provided for preparation periods alone, and 51 provisions (5.2 percent) dealt only with lunch periods. Table 1 provides a breakdown of the designated provisions and/or combinations of provisions contained in the agreements analyzed.

Teaching hours refer to a stipulated amount of time a teacher is required to spend in school daily while students are in attendance. While many agreements include in the number of total daily teaching hours time spent before and after classes, in chaperoning, at evening meetings, and in extracurricular activities, these segments of the teacher's day have been omitted from the discussion here since they will be covered in a future Digest article. Teaching hours variously are stated as hours per day, hours per week, instructional hours alone, on a school-by-school basis, or in terms of student hours or student report-in and dismissal times. In addition, time allocated for preparation periods and/or lunch periods may be included in or excluded from the negotiated teaching hours figure; some systems specified a daily maximum of seven and one-half hours including lunch and preparation periods, while others designated a maximum eight-hour day including only the lunch period. The minimum number of daily teaching hours indicated among the agreements analyzed was five and one-half hours. Teachers are not required to be on duty longer than specified, nor are they asked to substitute unless adequately compensated. Special area teachers are on the same work schedule as the school to which they are assigned and/or are required to work at least the length of the regular teacher's workday.

In an arbitration case involving the Chippewa Falls (Wis.) Joint School District No. 1, the district was found to have violated a negotiated clause providing that teachers will be present for a school day of "7 hours 45 minutes" except for "their 30 minute duty-free lunch period" by scheduling a school day of eight hours and 15 minutes. As the parties clearly intended to include the lunch period as part of the school day, the district was ordered to cease scheduling the longer day, shorten the school day by 30 minutes, and pay each affected bargaining unit member an amount equivalent to 30 minutes' pay for each day worked according to the violative schedule.

Another arbitrator found that the Jamestown (N.Y.) superintendent violated a teaching hours' clause by issuing a directive requiring teachers to be in their rooms 10 minutes before the start of the school day. The disputed clause provided that teachers' hours would be determined by "the fulfillment of the professional responsibility and obligations of the teacher." As the board failed to negotiate a seven-hour work day beginning 30 minutes prior to student arrival, the arbitrator held this "clearly implies" that the intent of the clause was to allow each teacher to determine the length of the work day.

In most agreements, modifications in the negotiated daily work schedule are to be made only after consultation with the recognized employee bargaining representative. An arbitrator held that the Georgetown (Mass.) School Committee was barred from adding 20 minutes to the working day due to a provision stating that the hours effective at the time the agreement was signed "shall continue to be applicable." Although the Committee argued that its policy decision to enlarge the music, art, and activities program necessitated the 20 additional minutes, the arbitrator held that the Committee's right to determine policy must be exercised within the framework of the collective agreement. That is, by signing the contract, the Committee agreed to share its authority regarding the setting of hours with the teachers' organization.

Those provisions relative to teaching load variously specified a teacher's assigned load as the number of teaching periods per day or week and/or maximum pupil-teacher contact per day or week. Teacher load figures or ratios usually exclude consideration of preparation periods, but sometimes include the homeroom supervision period. Some systems establish a maximum daily student contact rate per teacher of 150 or 160 students in a five-period workday exclusive of lunch or preparation periods. For secondary teachers, the standard maximum requirement generally is five daily teaching periods or 25 assigned teaching periods per week. The daily teaching load for elementary teachers usually is not to exceed five and one-quarter hours of instructional time daily and 30 teaching periods per week.

In most cases, teachers are required to teach a minimum of two subject or preparation areas and a maximum of three preparations. The sole Russian teacher in the Milford (Conn.) Public Schools was entitled to compensation of 20 percent more than base salary according to an arbitrator who found that the teacher taught world history in addition to Russian I, II, III, and IV and thereby was responsible for five preparations. Under the parties' contract, no teacher other than "the sole teacher of the subject" could be assigned more than three preparations. The board argued that this contractual limit was not exceeded because Russian I and II were taught simultaneously, as were Russian III and IV. But the arbitrator held that while it was permissible to require more than three Russian class preparations of the teacher because he was the only teacher of this language, it was a violation also to require a world history course preparation of him.

Specific negotiated items dealing with teaching load include:

- Study hall supervision is considered a teaching period.
- Teaching load also may include a weekly extracurricular assignment.
- Academic area teachers generally are assigned four to five teaching periods daily, while special area teachers may be assigned six teaching periods per day when relieved of homeroom duty. Under a contract stating "clearly and unequivocally" that secondary teachers with six daily instructional periods would not be assigned a homeroom, it was ruled a violation for the Massapequa (N.Y.) board to assign homerooms to science teachers who taught two laboratories on certain days in addition to four regular classes. The board contended that laboratory classes are not instructional periods, but the arbitrator held that "absent a stated exception, we must assume that the parties intended the conventional meaning of laboratory technique as but one more method of instruction."
- Classroom teachers shall not be required to teach or supervise in any specialists' areas.
- A teacher voluntarily may assume an extra load or assigned teaching period at additional compensation (one and one-half times his hourly rate) and may be relieved of supervisory assignments such as lunch duty or homeroom supervision.
- Some agreements specify that no secondary teacher shall be required to teach more than three consecutive periods without a break equal to the length of one class period.

Time devoted to planning, preparing tests, improving curriculum, previewing instructional material, conducting parental conferences, maintaining records, and correcting papers comprises a segment of the teacher's workday known as a preparation or planning period. A minimum of five unassigned preparation periods per week, each of 55 minutes' duration, often is provided for secondary teachers; a minimum of five preparation periods per week of 30 to 40 minutes' duration is provided for elementary teachers in some systems. Relief periods for elementary teachers often are dependent upon the utilization and scheduling of special area teachers or teacher aides.

Under a contract providing that when special classes were in session elementary teachers would be relieved of duty and might use the time for preparation and consultation, it was a violation for the Dearborn (Mich.) board to require female teachers to oversee the girls' locker rooms, thereby reducing the teachers' preparation time by five to 10 minutes. The arbitrator accordingly directed the board to cease making such assignments after 10 days. In another arbitration case, a teacher preparation period clause stated that each Chelsea (Mich.) junior high-school teacher would have the same number of preparation periods in the current school year as he had the previous year. As such, a teacher who had two preparation periods in the previous year when he used one to travel between schools was entitled to two preparation periods in the current year, even though all his assignments were now in one school. According to the arbitrator, the contractual "requirement is mandatory and inflexible. There are no exceptions or loopholes through which the administration's position could be sustained."

Specific negotiated items dealing with teacher preparation periods include:

- Teachers are not assigned any specific duties during their planning periods except in cases of emergency.
- In some systems, individual principals are to determine and assign the length of the preparation period.
- Preparation time for elementary teachers also may be scheduled by rotating morning or afternoon recess duties with other teachers. An agreement requiring 175 minutes of free time per week for all teachers of kindergarten through fourth grade was not violated when the West Hempstead (N.Y.) board asked kindergarten teachers to take double classes for 20 minutes each day so that other kindergarten teachers could have free time. Although specialists were available in grades 1 to 4 to relieve teachers without doubling up, the arbitrator held this did not mean the contract was violated with respect to kindergarten teachers. Limiting his determination to the "simple language of the contract," the arbitrator ruled that as long as kindergarten teachers received 175 minutes of free time weekly, their contractual rights were not violated.
- If a teacher has a specified number of teaching assignments per week, he may be asked to volunteer as a substitute (at a substitute's rate of pay) during his unassigned period.
- Specialists and special education teachers usually are provided relief time equal to that of regular classroom teachers.

Teacher lunch periods variously are designated as duty-free (except in cases of emergency), as equal in length to the students' lunch period, or as provided by law. While the duty-free lunch periods provided in the agreements analyzed varied greatly in length, elementary teachers generally were granted lunch periods of 30 to 60 minutes, and secondary teachers were allowed a minimum of 25 minutes for lunch. In 1969, legislation in nine states guaranteed teachers a duty-free lunch period of at least 30 minutes. To provide teachers with a duty-free lunch period, some systems hired additional aides or utilized parent volunteers as lunchroom supervisors; those systems unable to provide a daily duty-free lunch period generally required teachers to supervise lunchroom activity on a rotating basis. Teachers often are allowed to leave the school building during a duty-free lunch period as long as they have no assignment, notify their supervisor or principal, and return to the building five to 10 minutes before classes resume.

The Somerville (Mass.) School Committee violated a collective agreement when it refused to allow elementary school teachers to leave their buildings during their "duty-free" lunch periods. Although the teachers were not assigned specific lunchroom duties, an arbitrator held that their lunch periods were not really duty-free within the contract's meaning because the teachers were expected to "support the disciplinary system in the school" and "reinforce the aides in the performance of their supervisory duties." On the other hand, it was not a violation of a clause providing teachers with "a duty free lunch period, except in emergency situations" for elementary principals to require two teachers always to be available on a rotating basis during lunch periods to handle possible emergencies. An arbitrator upheld this practice of the Wayne (Mich.) schools because local bargaining history indicated that the parties agreed emergency availability could be scheduled, that prior to inclusion of the clause in the contract it was past practice in several schools to schedule teachers for emergency duty, and no teachers grieved the emergency scheduling during the first year the clause was in the agreement.

In one other arbitration case a provision stating that teachers would have a duty-free lunch period "of the same length of time as students" was not construed to mean that only teacher aides could be assigned lunchroom duties. While Cranston (R.I.) teachers must have the same amount of time to eat as students, the arbitrator found nothing in the agreement to suggest that a teacher's lunch period "must be coincident in time with that of the students."

Reprinted below are excerpts from negotiated provisions relative to teaching hours, teaching load, preparation periods, and teacher lunch periods. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Bradley-Bourbonnais Community High School District No. 307, Bradley, Illinois

Appendix III, Item A–Teaching Schedule and Conditions

The teachers' work year and day are set by the Board of Education in harmony with the State Law of Illinois. Teachers shall report no later than 8:00 A.M. and may leave at 3:45 P.M. The student class day begins at 8:10 A.M. and terminates at the end of the seventh period at 3:10 P.M., however, students may be asked to or may ask to stay after school for extra help from teachers until 3:45 P.M.

Rockford School District No. 205, Rockford, Illinois

Article XXIII, Section A—Staff Hours and School Calendar

1. The official length of the day for elementary school students shall be 5½ hours with up to one hour reserved for the noon lunch period and the schedule of those hours to be determined by the principal and the staff of each school to meet the peculiarities and/or transportation problems of each school. Kindergarten sessions may be up to 2¾ hours in length.
2. The secondary school day will be 7 hours and 10 minutes for the junior high schools, grades 7, 8 and 9; and 7 hours and 40 minutes for the senior high schools, grades 10, 11 and 12 conducted with a closed campus organization for students with schedules to be determined by the principal and the staff of each school to meet the peculiarities and/or transportation problems of each school.
3. Modifications for student dismissals, double sessions, etc. will be made with prior consultation with and notification to the Association.

Danvers School District, Danvers, Massachusetts

Article V, Section A—Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

1. The starting and dismissal times for students will be as follows:

Elementary School (Grades 1 through 6)	8:30 A.M. to 2:00 P.M.
Junior High School	7:55 A.M. to 2:05 P.M.
Senior High School	7:55 A.M. to 2:05 P.M.

2. The workday of classroom teachers will begin 30 minutes before the aforesaid starting times and will end 30 minutes after the aforesaid dismissal times. Said starting and dismissal times are subject to modification by the Committee, provided however, that no such modification will increase the length of the teacher's workday.
3. Personnel other than classroom teachers will work their assigned tasks for at least the length of the regular teacher's workday. It is recognized, however, that the proper performance of their duties may, on occasion, require these persons to work longer than the normal working day. The exact daily schedule will be worked out on an individual basis.

Escanaba Area Public Schools, Escanaba, Michigan

Article IV, Sections A and B—Teaching Hours

A. The teacher's normal teaching hours in the secondary schools shall be as follows:

	Senior High	Junior High
1. Teachers check in no later than	8:15 a.m.	8:10 a.m.
2. Teachers at assigned place of duty not later than	8:25 a.m.	8:20 a.m.
3. Teachers shall leave school no earlier than	3:30 p.m.	3:20 p.m.

4. Any alteration in the school day will result in a corresponding change of the closing time.
5. In order to initiate a more flexible high school schedule, some classes will begin one period earlier than the regular high school day and some will be held after the present 6th period. The majority of the teachers will continue to teach on the present schedule, but some will begin at 7:30 A.M. and teach until 2:15 P.M. while others will begin at 9:00 A.M. and teach until 4:15 P.M. Teachers will be given an opportunity to volunteer for early or late assignments, and every attempt will be made to honor their preferences. This is to be on a one-year trial basis.

B. The daily time schedule for starting and ending classes in the elementary schools must be necessarily flexible depending on the grade level of the children involved and whether or not bus children are on the school's enrollment. The teacher's required hours in the elementary schools shall be as follows:

1. Teachers report to school ½ hour before starting time, ¼ hour before afternoon session and remain ½ hour after dismissal in the afternoon.

Teaneck Public Schools, Teaneck, New Jersey

Article 25—Teaching Hour and Teaching Load

It is the agreement of both parties that concern for students, and, therefore, length of the school day or week cannot end with a dismissal bell or a fixed number of hours and minutes written into a contract. As professionals, teachers are expected to devote to their assignments the time necessary to meet their responsibilities, but they shall not be required to "clock in or clock out" by hours and minutes. Teachers shall indicate their presence for duty by placing a check mark in the appropriate column of the faculty sign-in and sign-out roster. They shall also indicate their absence from the building at the close of school in the same manner.

1. The total in-school work week for secondary teachers will be thirty-five and one-half (35½) hours (four (4) seven-hour days and one (1) seven and one-half hour day) exclusive of lunch.

Warren Local School District, Marietta, Ohio

Article III, Section 1—Teaching Hours and Teacher Load—Work Day

A. On each school day between October first and April first, and on each other school day when the weather is inclement, each school building shall be open to pupils thirty (30) minutes before the beginning of the school day. Each principal shall see that a sufficient number of teachers, equitably assigned, is in attendance for proper supervision.

B. Subject to other provisions of this section, each teacher in Warren School District shall be in his school building and available for duty at least fifteen minutes before the beginning of each school day in his building.

C. Subject to other provisions of this section, every elementary school day in each building shall begin not later than 8:30 AM. each school day, and every elementary school day shall end not later than 3:30 P.M.

D. Each teacher shall remain in the building to which he has been assigned and be available for duty following the closing of the school for a period of time which shall be sufficient to take care of those details which usually are connected with the closing of the daily session. The parties agree that additional time will be needed, on occasions, for a teacher to meet with the principal if requested to do so, to meet with pupils who may wish assistance or advice, to supervise detention sessions in accordance with present administrative practice, and to assist with situations beyond the control of school officials.

E. Subject to other provisions of this section, the secondary school day shall begin not later than 8:00 A.M. each school day and every secondary school day shall end not later than 3:45 P.M.

F. Special teachers and special project teachers shall observe the same working hours as teachers of the same level. (i.e., elementary school, junior high school, senior high school.)

Teaching Load

Little Rock School District, Little Rock, Arkansas

Article XXI, Section B—Teaching Hours and Load

The normal weekly teaching load in the junior and senior high schools will be 25 teaching periods, five unassigned preparation periods, and a 15-minute homeroom period at the beginning of the school day. This shall not exceed 5¼ hours of pupil contact per day. Assignment to a supervised study period shall be considered a teaching period for purposes of this Article. The normal weekly teaching load in the elementary schools will be 30 teaching periods not exceeding 6 hours of pupil contact per day (excluding 30 minutes for lunch and 15 minutes for recess).

East Hartford School District, East Hartford, Connecticut

Article IV, Section 5(F)–Teaching Hours and Teacher Load–Further Working Conditions

In addition to homeroom or equivalent duty, academic subject area secondary teachers shall not be assigned annually more than five (5) teaching periods per day, except English teachers who will be assigned not more than four (4) teaching periods per day. Elementary special teachers who teach grades seven and eight (art, music, etc.) may not be assigned annually more than six (6) teaching periods per day.

Stratford School District, Stratford, Connecticut

Article V, Section F–Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

1. Academic subject area secondary school teachers shall not be assigned more than five (5) teaching periods per day. Special subject area secondary school teachers (e.g., art, music, physical education) may be assigned six (6) teaching periods per day provided they are relieved of home room duties.
2. Academic area secondary school teachers shall not be required to teach more than three teaching preparations at any one time. Classes which require different syllabi, teaching materials or textbooks shall be considered different teaching preparations.

Trenton School District, Trenton, New Jersey

Article XII, Section D–Teaching Conditions–Teaching Load

1. Secondary teachers assigned on a departmental basis shall not be required to prepare more than two (2) subject matter teaching preparations.
2. Teachers in the Junior and Senior High Schools shall not have more than five (5) teaching periods.
3. The daily teaching load in the elementary school shall not exceed five and one-quarter (5¼) hours of instructional time.
4. Department heads shall not be assigned more than two (2) student instruction periods each day and shall be excluded from regular study hall duties and home room assignment wherever practicable. A student instructional period means any period during which a teacher is responsible for directing student learning.

Fallsburgh Central School District, Fallsburgh, New York

Article II, Section 3–Teaching Conditions–Teacher Load

A. The normal weekly load in the Junior-Senior High School shall be a maximum of 25 teaching periods and 5 assigned periods and 5 unassigned preparation periods per week. Teachers of self-contained classes shall not be required to teach more than three consecutive hours.

B. The normal weekly load in the Elementary School for all teachers shall not be more than 30 teaching periods or the equivalent thereof. This shall be allocated at the rate of 6 teaching periods and one unassigned preparation per day with one club activity period per week. No classroom teacher shall be required to teach or supervise in any specialist's area.

In any departure from these guides, the Principal will advise the Teacher of any such departures and the reasons for such change. If the reasonableness of the Principal's determination is questioned, the matter shall be referred to the Superintendent of Schools. If the reasonableness of the Superintendent of Schools' determination is questioned, the Association shall have the right to discuss with the Board (or, at the option of the Board, a committee thereof) an appropriate load for the case in question.

Lakeland Public Schools, Shrub Oak, New York

Article VIII, Section C—Teaching Hours and Class Load

The normal weekly teaching load in the high and middle schools shall be twenty-five (25) teaching periods, five (5) supervisory periods, and at least five (5) unassigned preparation periods. Such periods in the high school shall be of forty-two (42) minutes duration plus four (4) minutes passing time, for a total of forty-six (46) consecutive minutes. Should scheduling problems require assigning a teacher to a weekly teaching load above said normal teaching loads, any teacher who voluntarily accepts such assignment shall have no supervisory assignments. In the case of science teachers, where class and laboratories exceed twenty-five (25) periods per week, no supervisory assignment shall be made and in no event shall such assignment exceed twenty-eight (28) such periods per week. Teachers of language, art, home economics, industrial art, music, and physical education may accept as a normal teaching load thirty (30) teaching periods per week rather than twenty-five (25) teaching and five (5) supervisory periods. However, if they have a total student load of less than ninety (90) pupils, such teachers must accept thirty (30) teaching periods per week in their subject field(s). A teaching period equals approximately one and one-half middle school modules. For the purpose of comparing teaching load among sections (and for no other purpose) actual time involved in teaching rather than the number of classes shall be the measure. Each class shall be continuous and uninterrupted. Classes for children who have learning disabilities shall be scheduled in accordance with recommended standards promulgated by the New York State Education Department.

Natrona County High School District and District No. 2, Casper, Wyoming

Article VII, Section 4—Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

A. Senior high teachers shall not be assigned more than five (5) student supervision periods per day. Junior high teachers shall not be assigned more than six (6) student supervision periods per day. Home room assignments may be in addition to said five (5) and six (6) periods.

B. When a special subject teacher is in charge of a home room elementary school teacher's class, the home room teacher shall have the right to leave the classroom.

C. Teachers shall not be required to teach beyond the endorsements of their certificates, and secondary teachers shall not have more than three (3) teaching preparations within said subjects at one time, with the exception of language teachers.

Preparation Period

Arapahoe School District, Littleton, Colorado

Article XI, Section 5—Conditions of Employment—Planning and Preparation

A. All elementary teachers shall have a minimum of 150 minutes of planning time per week. Secondary teachers will have a minimum of one planning period daily. Administrators will make every effort not to assign other duties to teachers during this period.

B. A Certified Staff member shall not be required to teach more than two academic areas (e.g., English and Business). Nor shall such person have more than three course preparations within these academic areas separately or jointly. Different levels of sequential courses (e.g., French I, French II; or Woodworking I, Woodworking II) and different ability levels (e.g., Honors, Regular, Basic Skills) shall not constitute different course preparation. However, nothing shall prevent a teacher from freely assuming additional teaching responsibilities.

Rockford School District No. 205, Rockford Illinois

Article XXII, Section E–Minimal Standards and Professional Growth

Two preparation periods per teaching day shall be provided for secondary staff members. Preparation periods for elementary staff members shall be provided as frequently as specialists can be scheduled and on those occasions when the presence of the teacher is not necessary to the program.

Clintondale School District, Mt. Clemens, Michigan

Article IV, Sections D and E–Teaching Hours and Class Load

D. Elementary teachers will be provided one fifteen-minute relief period each day. In addition, elementary teachers may use for preparation all time during which their classes are receiving instruction from various teaching specialists.

E. Supportive and special education teachers shall receive planning and relief time comparable to other teachers working at their grade level (ie) elementary, secondary.

Trenton School District, Trenton, New Jersey

Article XII, Section C–Teaching Conditions–Preparation Periods

1. All secondary teachers shall, in addition to their lunch period, have at least one (1) preparation-conference period each day, during which they shall not be assigned to any other duties except in times of emergencies.
2. In elementary classes, building principals shall be encouraged to utilize specialists in a manner which would make available preparation periods. When an elementary class is receiving instruction from a teaching specialist on a regularly assigned basis, the regularly assigned teacher may use this time for preparation, subject to permission first obtained from the building principal, at any place in the school building.

Ithaca School District, Ithaca, New York

Article XI, Sections H and I–Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

H. Preparation Time in Elementary Schools. As soon as possible, elementary school teachers will, in addition to their lunch period, have at least 1 preparation period each day of at least 40 minutes during which they will not be assigned to any other duties. Such preparation period may be scheduled when the pupils in the teacher's class are being instructed by a specialist. Except by mutual consent of the teacher, specialist and principal involved, the elementary school teachers will not be required to remain in the classroom when their pupils are being instructed by such specialists.

There will be a 15-minute recess period each day in each elementary school. Every elementary school teacher will be off duty at least ½ of each such recess period and may be required to supervise two classes during the other ½ of each such recess period. Such recess period will be in addition to the teacher's lunch period and preparation period. The building principal in cooperation with his staff will be responsible for implementing this section of Article XI.

I. Teaching Periods and Preparation Time in Secondary Schools.

1. There shall be 4 conditions which govern the utilization of subject area teachers in the secondary schools:
   a. Preparation of the teaching schedule shall be the task of the principal and his staff, cooperating fully in a way that is mutually agreeable.
   b. An equitable class load and student load in keeping with the availability of staff and the specific nature of the subject area shall be established each year within the building schedule.
   c. Time for preparation (at least 1 full period or its equivalent) during each school day shall be maintained.

d. Innovations leading to the most effective use of teacher time and talents and innovations in the scheduling of classes shall be recognized as essential if optimum educational goals are to be achieved.

2. When no other method of balancing the teaching load is possible, and as recommended by the building principal or supervisor, and if the teacher agrees to be assigned to extra student teaching periods, he shall be compensated at the rate of 1/6 of a day's salary for each such additional period. Such extra teaching periods will be on a voluntary basis and will be utilized only to meet special temporary situations and will not be permanent in nature. Except as herein modified, existing policy in this area shall remain in effect.

Lunch Period

Wilmington School District, Wilmington, Delaware

Article IV, Section B(1)–Working Conditions

The Board agrees that, except for an emergency, elementary teachers shall have a forty-five (45) minute duty-free lunch period and middle school and senior high school teachers shall have a thirty (30) minute duty-free lunch period.

District of Columbia Public Schools, Washington, D.C.

Article XXV, Section A(3,4)–Policies Relating to Working Conditions of Teachers–General

3. Each teacher shall have a duty-free lunch period as follows:
   a. In elementary schools, not less than 45 minutes, except in inclement weather. Teachers and teacher aides shall be rotated for lunch duty on an equitable basis throughout the school year. The rotation system shall be arranged in consultation between the head of the school and the School Chapter Advisory Committee.
   b. In secondary schools, a full teaching period.

4. Teachers may leave the building during the school day, provided that they have no assignment scheduled, and that the head of the school or his designee is notified. A teacher so leaving will return to the building at least ten minutes before the next regular scheduled assignment which shall include the close of the school day for his students.

Bloomfield Hills School District, Bloomfield, Michigan

Article XIII, Sections B and J–Teaching Hours and Loads–Lunch Period and Leaving Building for Lunch

B. All members of the bargaining unit at the Senior High shall be entitled to a duty free uninterrupted lunch period of no less than twenty-five (25) minutes. All members of the bargaining unit at the Junior High shall be entitled to a duty free uninterrupted lunch period of no less than thirty (30) minutes. All members of the bargaining unit at the Elementary Level shall be entitled to a duty free lunch period of at least thirty-five (35) minutes in each full school day. In the case of Physical Education teachers, this period may be divided into two segments.

J. All teachers are permitted to leave the buildings during the lunch period provided that they return no less than five (5) minutes before classes resume. In the event of abuse of this privilege, the Building Administrator may bring it to the attention of the Association which shall verbally bring it to the attention of the teacher. Repeated abuse will require joint written communication to the teacher involved. If the abuse is continued, the teacher shall be subject to appropriate disciplinary action.

Ramapo-Indian Hills Regional High School District, Franklin Lakes, New Jersey

Article VII, Section C–Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

1. Teachers shall have a daily duty-free lunch period of at least forty (40) consecutive minutes.
2. Teachers may leave the building without requesting permission during their scheduled duty-free lunch periods, provided they clock out and clock in.

Herricks Union Free School District, New Hyde Park, New York

Article XXI–Duty Free Lunch

A. All teachers in elementary school shall continue to be entitled to an uninterrupted duty free lunch period of one (1) hour.

B. Every effort will be made to insure that all secondary teachers shall have one full class period as a lunch hour at or as close to the noon hour as possible.

CALIFORNIA

ORDINANCE MANDATING PUBLIC EMPLOYEE SALARIES COMPARABLE TO PRIVATE SALARIES LEAVES CITY NO DISCRETION IN MATTER

Some 10,000 Los Angeles city employees were awarded $1.8 million in back pay and interest at 7 percent by the California Supreme Court in a ruling which held that when a city legally is mandated to fix its employees' salaries according to prevailing comparable rates in private industry, it has "no discretion to provide less" than the rates ascertained by standard procedures or substitute procedures which are "fair and equitable." Finding that the city's adoption of "unreasonable and unfair" procedures for determining 1962 wage increases failed to keep city employees' salaries comparable for half of that year, the high court affirmed a trial court's order that the city "proceed at once" to provide increases once properly ascertained but vetoed by the mayor for invalid reasons.

Sec. 425 of the city's charter provides:

> In fixing the compensation to be paid to persons in the city's employ, the Council and every other authority authorized to fix salaries or wages, shall, in each instance, provide a salary or wage at least equal to the prevailing salary or wage for the same quality of service rendered to private persons, firms or corporations under similar employment, in case such prevailing salary or wage can be ascertained.

In 1945 that section of the charter was implemented by Salary Standardization Ordinance No. 89,000, as amended, which provides in part that > the City Administrative Officer is hereby directed to make a salary survey at least once each year and to present his report on such salary survey to the City Council on or before April 10 of each year by filing the same with the City Clerk. Such report shall contain summary findings on prevailing salaries or wages of positions in a representative sample of business establishments in the City of Los Angeles metropolitan area and the positions in other governmental agencies which have positions comparable to those in the city service, together with recommendations, if any, for changes in salary schedules applicable to all classes of positions in the city service [and the salaries so fixed are to be enacted by the council's passage of an ordinance to become effective as of July 1 of each year].

Following a salary survey conducted in 1962 according to established procedures and utilizing standard formulas for computing wage increases, the city administrative officer recommended to the city council that salary increases totaling more than $3.5 million be provided for some 10,000 nonuniformed city employees, and that increases of approximately $3.5 million be paid to city police and firemen for the 1962-63 fiscal year. The council approved the recommendations and adopted an appropriate ordinance on July 16, 1962; the ordinance was vetoed by the mayor for budgetary reasons, and the council did not override the veto. Several weeks later the same ordinance was readopted by the council, but it was given an effective date of January 5, 1963 (later changed to January 6), thereby creating a six-month period during which city employees failed to receive wage increases necessary under the charter's comparability mandate.

Lengthy litigation ensued by virtue of two actions (Sanders, et al. and Forbes, et al.) brought against the city on behalf of certain city employees seeking declaratory relief and writs of mandate. Substantially identical judgments and writs were issued ordering the city's wage-fixing authorities to > ascertain through any appropriate administrative procedure . . . the prevailing salary or wage for the same quality of service rendered to private persons . . . under similar employment . . . [and] you . . . shall provide additional salaries and wages to each person to whom you are authorized to fix a salary or wage . . . where additional salaries or wages are necessary so as to provide a salary or wage at least equal to the prevailing salary or wage for the same quality of service rendered to private persons . . . under similar employment . . . retroactive to July 1, 1962.

When defendants reported to the trial court (in 1963) that it had been ascertained and recommended to the city council that city employees' salaries were "factually and legally sufficient" and no increases were warranted, the court discharged the writ. Plaintiffs in Sanders appealed the discharge, which was reversed by an appellate court in finding that the standard formula for determining wage increases for city employees was fair and adequate, that the city's disregard of that formula and adoption of new formulas was "arbitrary in the extreme" and for the "obvious purpose" of convincing the city council that the original recommended increases were a "mistake," and that the city failed to justify its " 'about-face' in recommending on the same facts that no increases were due."

The original writ was reissued, but the city (in 1968) again discarded standard formulas and applied new formulas with the result that salary increases totaling $155,000 were recommended for approximately 1,000 city employees. Finally, on August 14, 1968, the trial court in Sanders ordered the city "to proceed at once to provide the increases to salaries and wages for the period of July 1, 1962, to January 5, 1963, inclusive, that would have been provided by the Ordinance of July 16, 1962, had it been made effective as of July 1, 1962." The court pointed out that literal compliance with the requirements of the city's charter "could be excused only if the in lieu procedures were fair and adequate," that budgetary objections to the implementation of the ascertained increases "could not be considered," and that once the increases were ascertained as required, the city council "must provide them."

In the present appeal by the city, the state supreme court affirmed the trial court's August 14 ruling that the city had not complied with the original writ and that the action directed by the August 14 order was required by the original writ. The state supreme court explained:

The writ provided that defendants may use "any appropriate administrative procedures" to make the required ascertainment. The ascertainment originally made used procedures that the appellate court in Sanders found to be fair and equitable, but the ordinance providing the increases so ascertained was vetoed for invalid reasons .... It is mandatory for defendants under section 425 of the charter to ascertain the prevailing wages paid in private industry and to provide them for employees in the city's employ. Ascertainment is a fact-finding function. It may precede or accompany the legislative act of providing the prevailing wages found .... This fact finding and determination was made by the city council in 1962 (and again on April 30, 1968) .... The peremptory writ expressly stated that it was the duty of defendants to ascertain and to provide the salary or wages ascertained. All that remained was for the city to provide by effective ordinance the prevailing wage so ascertained. There must be an end to litigation and it would be an idle and futile act to command defendants to once again ascertain the salaries and wages that prevail in private industry . . . as of July 1, 1962.

Finally, the California Supreme Court upheld the trial court's October 22, 1968, order that the city pay prejudgment interest (from July 1, 1962) at the rate of 7 percent per annum on the base sum of approximately $1.8 million. According to the court, an action to recover retroactive pay increases is an action for damages within the meaning of section 3287 of the Civil Code .... The damages due, here—namely, the ascertainment of increases in salaries and wages due for the period in question, were capable of being made certain and were made certain by defendants in applying the standard methods and formulas to the 1962 survey data. All of the alternative methods of calculation attempted were rejected by the courts. The declaratory relief judgment clearly set forth that due salaries must be adjusted as of a certain date, July 1, 1962, and the peremptory writ required that they be provided effective as of that date. In a contested action interest may be awarded, if the plaintiff is entitled thereto, even though the complaint contains no prayer for interest.

STATE SUPREME COURT DECLINES TO REVIEW PUBLIC EMPLOYEE NO-STRIKE RULE

A petition by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 127, for review of an appellate court determination that municipal employees have no right to strike was declined without comment by the California Supreme Court. As such, a decision by the state's Court of Appeals for the Fourth Appellate District (NRD, 10-70, 3), which was issued on May 28, 1970, is left standing. That ruling reversed a decision of the San Diego County Superior Court (NRD, 10-69, 10) which vacated a temporary restraining order in a case involving striking utilities and public works employees. Emphasizing that "the employer-employee relationship in public employment is the product of law—constitutional, legislative and decisional—rather than the product of a contract," the appellate court determined that the trial court's decision resulted from "an erroneous concept of law" and held:

The common law rule public employees do not have the right to bargain collectively or to strike is predicated expressly on the necessity for and lack of statutory authority conferring such right. Where a statute authorizes collective bargaining and strikes it includes them within the methods authorized by law for fixing the terms and conditions of employment. Those who advocate the right of public employees to strike should present their case to the Legislature.

(City of San Diego v. American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, California Supreme Court, review denied.)

CONNECTICUT

SCHOOL BOARD'S POWER TO ACT IN EMERGENCIES NEITHER GRIEVABLE NOR ARBITRABLE

A decision of the Hartford County Superior Court enjoined the Hartford Federation of Teachers (HFT) from proceeding to arbitration with a grievance over the local board's institution of an emergency plan designed to deal with student disturbances and allegedly depriving teachers of their one unassigned period per day. The court held that while state statute authorizes the board of education > to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement with respect to salaries and other conditions of employment of its certificated professional employees, this does not mean that the board is free to bargain away its power to act in an emergency with all of the personnel at its command. The power of a governmental body to enter into binding agreement does not include the power to render itself helpless in a crisis.

When the Hartford board effected "Emergency Plan S" (which outlined emergency duties for teachers at a particular high school), the HFT filed a grievance contending that the plan violated a specific provision of the parties' negotiated agreement which provided all high-school teachers with one unassigned period per day. Moreover, the HFT insisted that the grievance be resolved by arbitration, a procedure the board refused to submit to in its assertion that Plan S was established as board policy and, therefore, was not subject to arbitration under the agreement.

During litigation, the HFT argued that no board decision (whether policy or not) could violate a specific clause in the parties' contract, that the board's argument was a misapplication of the provision allowing teachers one unassigned period per day, and that the parties' disagreement in interpretation of the contract was arbitrable under the agreement's grievance procedure. The court, however, felt that "both parties paint the issues involved in this case with too broad a brush," explaining that the "narrow question . . . involves the power of the board to act in an emergency and the extent to which such power is circumscribed by the arbitration provisions of the collective bargaining agreement."

While concluding that a school board is not free to bargain away its authority to act in an emergency, the court additionally pointed out that the parties' contract was "silent on the assignment of teachers to corridor duty during emergencies occasioned by internal disturbances." As such assignments were outside the scope of the agreement, the court ruled that they were not subject to arbitration under the grievance procedure. The court accordingly issued an injunctive order restraining the HFT "from instituting or maintaining a grievance or arbitration with respect to Emergency Plan 'S'." (Board of Education of the City of Hartford v. Hartford Federation of Teachers, et al., Connecticut Superior Court for Hartford County, August 24 1970.)

CONTEMPT CONVICTION OF TEACHERS FOR VIOLATION OF EX PARTE ANTI-STRIKE INJUNCTION UPHELD

The Illinois Supreme Court upheld criminal contempt sentences levied against members of the Kankakee Federation of Teachers (KFT), American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 886, for willful noncompliance with a temporary restraining order prohibiting them from engaging in an unlawful strike against Kankakee School District No. 111. Although defendants alleged that the restraining order was issued without notice or a hearing and thereby deprived them of due process of law, the state supreme court ruled that the trial court had the "authority and duty" to issue the order and explained that > where a court of equity issues an injunction, with jurisdiction of the subject matter and the persons and upon pleadings properly invoking its action, the injunction must be obeyed, however erroneous the action of the court may be, until it is reversed for error by orderly review, either by the court itself or a higher court. Disobedience of such an injunction is contempt of the lawful authority of the court, and punishable as such.

When contract negotiation between the KFT and the Kankakee board reached a stalemate in April 1969, the union informed the board that it would "withhold teaching services beginning Friday, April 25, 1969, until satisfactory agreements on a new contract and other matters are reached." A majority of the district's teachers subsequently went on strike and picketed the schools; only one of the 15 local schools was able to operate. On April 26, an attorney for the board entered a complaint in the Kankakee County Circuit Court seeking a temporary injunction, "without notice or bond, restraining defendants from striking and picketing, and from inducing or encouraging others to do so." The restraining order was issued and served on that day with no prior notice.

The teachers continued their strike on April 28 with no effort to vacate or dissolve the restraining order or seek other judicial relief. On the same day, the board filed a motion for a preliminary injunction, a hearing on which was set for May 2. Defendants appeared at the hearing but in no way attempted to attack the legal basis for the temporary order or the preliminary injunction. The injunction was issued and subsequently ignored by defendants. Then on May 12 the circuit court convicted defendants of criminal contempt, levied a $12,000 on the union and lesser fines on individual union members, and levied 60-day jail sentences against some individual defendants.

On appeal, defendants' attempt to obtain a reversal was based principally upon Carroll v. President and Commissioners of Princess Anne in which the officials of a town were granted an ex parte restraining order to prevent a public rally scheduled by a "white supremacist" organization. The case eventually reached the Supreme Court of the United States which found the 10-day order improper > because of a basic infirmity in the procedure by which it was obtained. It was issued ex parte, without notice to petitioner and without any effort, however informal, to invite or permit their participation in the proceedings. There is a place in our jurisprudence for ex parte issuance, without notice, of temporary restraining orders of short duration; but there is no place within the area of basic freedoms guaranteed by the First Amendment for such orders where no showing is made that it is impossible to serve or to notify the opposing parties and to give them an opportunity to participate.

In the instant case, defendants contended that picketing is "the precise legal equivalent of free speech" and that a similar infirmity in the order here obtained required that it and the contempt convictions be set aside. The Illinois Supreme Court, however, found it "clear that Carroll is inapposite, and of no persuasion here":

> We are not dealing with a prior restraint, nor was the trial court . . . confronted with a constitutionally protected area of free speech. Picketing, while a mode of communicating ideas, is not dogmatically equated with constitutionally protected speech . . . and it is settled that the first and fourteenth amendments do not afford the same kind of freedom to those who communicate ideas by picketing, as they afford to those who communicate ideas by pure speech . . . . Here, the unlawful strike of the teachers was already in progress when the temporary order was sought, and the picketing the Board was seeking to restrain was being carried on for the purpose of fostering and supporting such unlawful strike. Accordingly, the first amendment considerations which controlled in Carroll were not present in this case. And there is another factual distinction worthy of note. Those against whom the order was directed in Carroll obeyed it and then judicially challenged its validity . . . ; in the case at hand defendants deliberately defied the court by ignoring and disobeying its order instead of seeking judicial relief from its consequences, and the single issue on appeal is whether defendants could properly be found in contempt for their disobedience.

In concluding that defendants' disobedience of the temporary restraining order "merited their punishment for contempt," the state supreme court dismissed defendants' contentions that the show cause contempt rule and subsequent order gave defendants insufficient notice of the charges against them. (Board of Education of Kankakee School District No. 111 v. Kankakee Federation of Teachers, Local No. 886, Illinois Supreme Court, September 22, 1970.)

NORTH DAKOTA

TEACHERS JUDGED GUILTY OF CRIMINAL CONTEMPT FOR PICKETING IN VIOLATION OF RESTRAINING ORDER

Twenty-two Minot Public School teachers were convicted of criminal contempt by the Ward County District Court for striking local schools in April 1969 and "wilfully and flagrantly violating and disobeying the lawfully issued restraining order of this court by engaging in picketing." In levying individual fines of $250 plus $15 costs, as well as 30-day jail sentences, upon each defendant, the court emphasized that the North Dakota Supreme Court has "ruled that picketing, though peaceful, when for the purpose of fostering and supporting an illegal strike against a government employer is for an unlawful purpose and that restraining orders may issue to enjoin and prohibit such strike and picketing."

More than 100 Minot teachers began a strike on April 2, 1969, which forced several schools to close. Five days later the district initiated a civil action to enjoin the strike, alleging contract violations, danger to the public health, safety, and welfare, unlawful interference with a governmental function, and a detrimental effect upon the general welfare of students and the community. A temporary restraining order issued the same day followed by the teachers' issuance of a public statement announcing that they "decline to comply with the Court's injunction." Picketing began at the schools on April 8 and 9, and counsel for defendants conceded at an April 9 hearing that the teachers were on strike. The court then issued a permanent restraining order enjoining and restraining all of the defendants individually and the Minot Federation of Teachers (MFT), American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, from striking or picketing. The court repeatedly warned defendants of the consequences for disobeying the order.

On April 14 the court commenced contempt proceedings against five teachers for striking, although the proceedings were postponed due to extreme weather conditions. Then on April 21 the MFT placed an advertisement in the local newspaper asking nonstriking teachers not to cross the picket lines or take jobs as substitute teachers. Between April 25 and 29 the court sentenced and fined 22 teachers who admitted picketing and carrying signs at various schools. The strike ended on May 1.

In the instant criminal contempt proceeding, defendants denied the offenses charged and were ordered by the court on April 29 to make written answer to the complaints by affidavit or other proof. Counsel for defendants raised four procedural objections to the contempt proceedings, two of which were overruled and denied by the court. Counsel for defendants additionally argued that peaceful picketing by teachers is a protected constitutional activity, and that the court's restraining order prohibiting "any picketing" was constitutionally vague and too all encompassing.

The court, however, cited numerous state and federal court rulings to the effect that striking and picketing by public employees are illegal, and that "an order issued by a court with jurisdiction over the subject matter and person must be obeyed by the parties until it is reversed by orderly and proper proceedings. This is true without regard even for the constitutionality of the act under which the order is issued" (United States v. United Mine Workers). Concluding that its restraining order was valid and legal and that it did not violate any of defendants' constitutional rights, the court pointed out that "if defendants believed or contended that the restraining order was in any way irregular the matter could have been clarified by motions to this Court or by an appeal to the Supreme Court of this State in the injunction proceedings." As defendants instead violated the order by engaging in continued picketing, they were judged guilty of criminal contempt and fined and sentenced for "wrongful conduct and acts . . . [which] impeded and obstructed a vital government function, the proper and efficient education of the children." (State of North Dakota v. Mary Heath, et al., North Dakota District Court, Ward County, June 6, 1969.)

TEACHERS UNLAWFULLY DENIED LEAVE FOR MINORITY ORGANIZATION CONVENTION ORDERED REIMBURSED

The Ashland County Circuit Court upheld a determination of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) that the Ashland school board unlawfully discriminated against its employees by granting paid leave for attendance at the majority organization's state convention, while denying such leave to teachers attending the minority organization's regional convention on the same dates. The court accordingly ordered the board to cease giving effect to the violative contract clause and to pay 28 teachers lump sums illegally deducted from their paychecks while attending a 1968 regional convention of the Ashland Education Association, the minority organization.

The WERC's ruling (NRD, 10-69, 7) resulted from a charge filed by the Association that the Ashland board's refusal to grant paid leave for attendance at conventions outside the scope of the board's agreement with the Ashland Federation of Teachers, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1275, was prohibited by state statute. Although there was some question as to the similarity of state and regional teachers' conventions, the WERC determined that Local 1275, as bargaining agent, "had the privilege of negotiating and reaching an agreement with the . . . board of education with respect to dates on which teachers would be permitted to attend teachers' conventions." However, the contractual limitation to attendance at the Wisconsin Federation of Teachers (WFT) state convention was found to exceed "the bounds of the permissive cooperation which Local 1275 was privileged to receive as a result of its majority status."

The present action was brought by the Association when the board refused to comply with the WERC's order of full restitution of pay for teachers denied paid leave while attending the minority organization's convention. In affirming the WERC's order, the court noted that the parties' contract must allow teachers to attend either a state or other convention (the choice of which is left to the school board) held by teachers' organizations other than the WFT. Board Findings and Rulings

FINAL NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY IS A NONDELEGABLE POWER OF SCHOOL COMMITTEE

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) held that the Lawrence School Committee did not commit an unfair labor practice by refusing to adopt the recommendation of its legal representative that a contract negotiated with the Service Employees International Union, AFL-CIO, Local 310, be retroactive. Although the representative personally had agreed to the retroactivity of the contract during negotiation with the union, the MLRC determined that the school committee was not bound by that agreement since Massachusetts law prohibits a school committee from delegating its management powers. While a school committee may seek the advice of a legal representative, any final decision affecting the general management of the schools remains with the elected members of the committee. (Matter of City of Lawrence School Committee and Local No. 310, Service Employees International Union, AFL-CIO, Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, August 31, 1970.)

SCHOOL BOARD ORDERED TO CEASE BARGAINING TO IMPASSE ON INDIVIDUAL CONTRACT RETURN DATE

The Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) held that the Coleman school board committed an unfair labor practice by insisting upon bargaining to impasse over the inclusion in an agreement with the Coleman Education Association (CEA) of a specific deadline by which individual teaching contracts had to be returned to the board. While the MERC determined in Bullock Creek (NRD, 10-69, 7) that during negotiation a school board could issue and require the return of individual contracts by established dates (subject to modification by any subsequently executed collective agreement), it concluded that such dates are voluntary subjects of bargaining whose inclusion in an agreement cannot be insisted upon to impasse. The MERC concurred with a trial examiner's findings on this matter and his recommended issuance of a cease and desist order against the Coleman board, but it modified the language of the proposed order owing to a disagreement over a fine point of law.

Throughout lengthy 1969 negotiation, mediation, fact-finding, and subsequent mediation, the Coleman board insisted upon bargaining a specific date by which individual teaching contracts would be returned. The CEA eventually filed charges alleging that the board had violated its duty to bargain under the state's Hutchinson Act by insisting upon bargaining the inclusion of a nonmandatory item in a collective agreement. The board replied that it did not demand the return of individual contracts by any one specified date (i.e., it would negotiate any of several possible dates), and contended that the CEA would not agree to any clause providing for the return of individual contracts prior to the ratification of a master agreement. In addition, the board argued that it did not negotiate to impasse on the return dates of individual contracts because there were three other issues open when the parties went to fact-finding.

During hearings before the MERC trial examiner, the CEA relied upon the Bullock Creek decision and the National Labor Relations Board "impasse" doctrine in its contentions that the return date for individual contracts is a nonmandatory bargaining subject and that such a subject cannot be bargained to impasse. Citing pertinent portions of the Bullock Creek ruling, the trial examiner found that such a subject is nonmandatory and held that in the instant matter "a contract would have been reached after fact-finding, but for the Employer's insistence on the contract clause." He explained that "it does not matter whether other items were not agreed upon at the same time the Employer was insisting on the inclusion of the contract return date clause. It is the insistence upon the inclusion—or no contract—of the nonmandatory matter that is the crux of the violation."

The examiner accordingly concluded that "by insisting to impasse upon the inclusion of a contract clause setting the return date of individual contracts prior to the statutorily provided date of July 1, the [Employer] has violated its obligation to bargain as imposed by [portions of the Hutchinson Act]." He recommended that the Coleman Community Schools be ordered to "cease and desist from insisting that a clause be included in any collective bargaining agreement reached between itself and the [CEA] that provides for the return of individual teacher contracts prior to July 1." Moreover, he ordered the board to bargain in good faith with the CEA and post a notice stating in part that "we will not insist upon the inclusion of a clause providing for a return date of individual teacher contracts earlier [than] July 1."

In subsequent proceedings, the CEA took exception to those portions of the trial examiner's recommendations referring to the return of individual contracts by the "statutorily provided date of July 1," maintaining that they were inconsistent with the conclusion that the return date was a nonmandatory subject of bargaining, and that they were incorrect on two counts as a matter of law. The Coleman board then argued that since the law requires individual contracts to be returned by July 1, the trial examiner's reference to that date was in accordance with law and with the MERC's decision in Bullock Creek.

However, the MERC determined that its references to a "July 1 deadline" in Bullock Creek (which deadline refers to when tenure teachers must give written notification of the discontinuation of their services) were misread, explaining:

> We know of no statutory requirement that individual teacher contracts must be signed and returned to the school board at any particular time, and none has been brought to our attention. However, it would seem to be implicit in [sections of] the Michigan School Code . . . that the individual teacher contract should be executed and returned to the school board before the commencement of the school term . . . . We agree with the Trial Examiner's conclusion that the [Employer] was in violation . . . in insisting upon the inclusion of a contractual provision establishing a deadline for the signing and returning of individual tenure teacher contracts to an impasse. We do not concur with his conclusion that the setting of a deadline date for tenure teachers to give written notification to the school board of their intention not to return is material in disposing of the issues presented in the instant case.

In effectuating its modification of the trial examiner's findings, the MERC ordered the Coleman board to "cease and desist from bargaining to an impasse on a clause . . . that provides for the signing and return of individual tenure teacher contracts by any specific date" (emphasis added) and altered the posting notice accordingly. NEW JERSEY

TIMELINESS RULES VOLUNTARILY ADOPTED WHEN NO PERC RULES EFFECTIVE HELD VALID AND BINDING

An election petition was ruled untimely by the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) under both PERC rules and regulations and a timeliness rule voluntarily adopted by the parties to the original representation election at a time when no PERC procedures were effective. In upholding the validity and applicability of the voluntary rule, as well as its binding nature upon the parties, the PERC pointed out that > it fulfills the same basic requirements as the Commission's Rules; it establishes a period of unchallenged representation coupled with a date certain after which the incumbent may be displaced. Both rules seek and achieve the same result; a balance between stability of labor relations, and the employee's right to replace the incumbent organization after a fixed period of time.

> Furthermore, since the Commission favors voluntarism and the sanctity of contractual relationships, we believe parties should be held to the performance of their joint obligations to which they have previously agreed.

In February 1969 the Paterson Education Association, the local board, and the Paterson Teachers Union (PTU), American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 482, agreed to hold a consent election to determine the bargaining representative for local teachers. In the absence of any PERC rules and regulations, the parties adopted the following timeliness rule (which varied from those adopted by the PERC in late August 1969):

> If no contract is made between the winner of this election and the Board of Education within 14 months after the American Arbitration Association certifies the results of the election, then upon a showing of thirty per cent (30%) by the eligible voters so petitioning, an organization may request a new election.
> A petition for a new election supported by not less than thirty per cent (30%) of the eligible voters may be presented to PERC by an organization not more than ninety days (90) and no less than sixty (60) days prior to the expiration date of the contract or June 30, 1971, whichever date comes first.

The Association was certified as exclusive bargaining representative by the PERC on June 26, 1969. Then on March 13, 1970, the Association and the local board entered into an agreement with a termination date of June 30, 1971. The PTU filed an election petition on the same day, but that petition was dismissed as untimely by the PERC.

The instant election petition was filed by the PTU on September 23, 1970; the union contended that an election should be directed since the petition was filed within the period of 150 to 120 days prior to the last date for budget submission immediately preceding the expiration or renewal date of the contract, as provided in sec. 19:11-15(d) of the PERC's rules and regulations. The Association, however, argued that the voluntary timeliness rule should be applied here (despite its inconsistency with sec. 19:11-15) since another portion of the PERC rules provides that "any valid action by parties prior to the effective date of the Rules and Regulations will not be held invalid because of a failure to comply with the procedural requirements set forth herein."

The PTU contended that application of the voluntary rule in the instant proceeding "would be prejudicial and inconsistent with the dismissal of the March 13, 1970 petition" since that dismissal was based upon PERC rules and regulations. However, the PERC found that the March 13 petition would have been untimely under both the voluntary rule and PERC rules. Moreover, the PERC found no prejudice to the union in its "alleged reliance upon the [March 13] dismissal for guidance as to which rule would apply" since that action in no way denied the PTU the opportunity of filing a future timely petition under the voluntary rule.

The PERC concluded that since the voluntary timeliness rule was agreed upon in good faith and with the understanding it would be adhered to, the PTU should be bound by the contractual relationship it entered into, absent a clear contravention of the Act or the Commission's policies.

> In this instance the agreement reached by the parties is not in such conflict with the policies and concepts of the Act or the Commission's policies so that it should not be given full effect under Section 19:19-2 of the Rules as a "valid action".... As written, the [voluntary] rule merely establishes a period of unchallengeability for the representative chosen as a result of the March 1969 election. After that period the . . . rule expires, and the timeliness rules as set out in the Rules and Regulations of this Commission will control the time for filing any subsequent petitions.... The Commission rules that the agreement . . . adopting the [voluntary] timeliness rule constituted a valid action by the parties prior to the effective date of the Rules and Regulations and is binding on the parties and the Commission. Accordingly, we hereby dismiss the petition as being untimely filed.

NLRB ASSERTS JURISDICTION OVER EDUCATIONAL RADIO STATIONS

In a November 25, 1970, ruling, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) asserted jurisdiction over a nonprofit foundation operating a number of educational radio stations whose gross annual volume of business met the NLRB standard of $100,000 for radio stations and whose operations were considered related to the educational system over which the board previously asserted jurisdiction. The board had determined in its Cornell University decision (NRD, 9-70, 10) that "assertion of jurisdiction is required over those private colleges and universities whose operations have a substantial effect on commerce to insure the orderly, effective and uniform application of the national labor policy." In the instant case, the NLRB saw "no reason for withholding the exercise of its powers over employers whose operations are adjunctive to the educational system" and meet the board's standard. It accordingly directed that an election be held in the appropriate bargaining unit.

The Pacifica Foundation, a nonendowed educational organization, primarily is engaged in owning and operating three FM radio stations in California, one station in New York, and a news bureau in Washington, D.C. The National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, recognized by the foundation in 1962 and party to several collective bargaining agreements since then, claimed to represent a majority of unit employees. When the foundation sought an election among its employees to determine whether the Association still was majority representative, the Association argued that the NLRB should deny its jurisdiction since the foundation was a nonprofit, noncommercial organization engaged only in disseminating knowledge as part of the general educational system.

The NLRB found, however, that during the 1968 calendar year the foundation's tax exempt gross income totaled nearly $1 million, and that the combined gross income of two of the radio stations was $225,000, nearly $215,000 of which derived from private contributions and listener subscriptions. The board also noted that the foundation makes its broadcast facilities available to higher learning institutions for training purposes. Referring to its Cornell University decision, the NLRB decided to assert jurisdiction over adjunctive educational operations which have a substantial impact on interstate commerce. IOWA

ARBITRATION STATUTE MAY NOT BE APPLIED TO MUNICIPAL DISPUTES

An August 19, 1970, opinion of the Iowa attorney general held that the Iowa governor lacked authority to appoint a board of arbitration in a dispute involving nurses and a municipal hospital, because arbitration procedures provided by state statute are inapplicable to municipal corporations.

MICHIGAN

UNFAIR PRACTICE CHARGE MUST BE SERVED ON MERC AND RESPONDENT WITHIN SIX MONTHS OF VIOLATION

In a first impression ruling pertinent to the statute of limitations under the Michigan Labor Mediation Act (MLMA), the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) held that an unfair labor practice charge must be served upon both the MERC and the respondent within the statutory six-month period of limitations. In the instant case, the MERC was compelled to dismiss a complaint which it had received exactly six months after the alleged unfair labor practice, but which was not served upon the respondent until after the statute of limitations had expired. While the MERC's decision was rendered in a private sector case under sec. 23(b) of the MLMA, identical language appears in sec. 423. 216(a) of the state's public employee bargaining statute, the Hutchinson Act.

Sec. 23(b) of the MLMA provides in part that "no complaint shall issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than six months prior to filing of the charge with the board and the service of a copy thereof upon the person against whom the charge is made." A hospital worker claiming that she was unjustly fired filed a timely complaint with the MERC exactly six months after the date of firing; however, the charge was not served upon the hospital by the MERC until eight days later, thereby resulting in respondent's motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of timely service.

Before a MERC trial examiner, counsel for the charging party argued that sec. 23(b) is unclear whether "filing of the charge" and the "service of a copy thereof" upon respondent both must be completed within the six-month period of limitations. He further argued that under sec. 5856 of the state's Revised Judicature Act (RJA), the statute of limitations is tolled (for no longer than 90 days) once "the complaint is filed and a copy of the summons and complaint in good faith are placed in the hands of an officer for immediate service." As such, the charging party contended that she had 90 days from the date the complaint was received by the MERC in which to serve the charge upon her former employer.

The trial examiner, however, questioned whether sec. 5856 "can be held to apply to administrative proceedings," and concluded that "it does not, in the absence of a specific indication by the Legislature to that effect." Pointing out that MERC procedures generally are governed by the Administrative Procedures Act of 1969, "which contains no specific requirements in regard to initiating agency proceedings and the service of documents in contested cases," the examiner held that > we are left strictly with the construction of Section 23(b) of the LMA and [MERC Rule 53(1) which reads: "Upon filing of a charge, the charging party shall be responsible for the timely and proper service of a copy thereof upon the charged party, against whom such charge is made."] The language of which I conclude requires both filing and service of the charge within the six-month period before the Commission can make a finding of an unfair labor practice under Section 16 of the LMA.

The examiner accordingly dismissed the charge, and the MERC adopted his decision and recommended order, stating:

> It does not matter whether the Commission or the Respondent is served first. However, it is equally clear that both services, the one on the Commission and upon the Respondent, must be made within the six-month statutory limitation .... In the future, the Commission will administratively dismiss all charges where the Respondent and the Commission have not been served with a copy of the charge within the six-month Statute of Limitations.

NEW YORK

TAYLOR LAW REQUIREMENT THAT UNION DISAVOW STRIKE RIGHT BEFORE CERTIFICATION DECLARED CONSTITUTIONAL

The New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, granted summary judgment to the New York City Office of Collective Bargaining (OCB) in upholding the constitutionality of a portion of the state's Taylor Law requiring public employee unions to disavow the right to strike as a prerequisite to certification as exclusive bargaining representative. Concluding that within the context of certification "the condition imposed is reasonable for the benefits conferred, and is reasonably calculated to achieve the ultimate desired end," the court ruled that if properly construed, the requirement does not infringe upon the exercise of First Amendment rights and exerts no " 'chilling effect' on free expression so evident as to warrant [its] rejection as unconstitutional." The court accordingly declared constitutional the implementing OCB rule and thereby reversed an April 1969 ruling by a Special Term judge.

Sec. 207(3)(b) of the Taylor Law states in pertinent part that "for purposes of resolving disputes concerning representation status . . . the board of government . . . shall . . . certify or recognize an employee organization upon . . . the affirmation by such organization that it does not assert the right to strike against any government, to assist or participate in any such strike, or to impose an obligation to conduct, assist or participate in such a strike."

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 371 (plaintiff in the case) argued that the requirement violated its right to free speech under both the federal and state constitutions; the union supported its position by citing National Association of Letter Carriers v. Blount (NRD, 12-69, 3) in which a three-judge federal district court panel unanimously declared unconstitutional portions of a federal statute and the implementing Post Office employment oath which prohibited government employees from asserting the right to strike or holding membership in any organization asserting the right to strike. An appeal of that decision to the Supreme Court of the United States later was dismissed by agreement of the parties (NRD, 12-70, 15).

While finding "undoubted points of similarity" between the decision and the instant matter, the court held that the letter carriers' case is not controlling because "here the problem is not job acquisition or retention, but certification with its attendant benefits." Explaining that certain rights accompany recognition or certification and that the public employer assumes a certain burden by granting recognition, the court found it reasonable that the requirement be imposed. Moreover, since sec. 210 of the Taylor Law "flatly prohibits public employees or employee organizations from engaging in a strike," the court ruled that in construing the disputed section, it must "consider the general scheme of the statute and reject an interpretation not warranted by its language and which offends ordinary common sense."

AFT FOUND TO HAVE VIOLATED AFL-CIO NO-RAIDING PROVISION BY IMPINGING UPON SEIU TEACHER AIDE UNIT

According to an AFL-CIO impartial umpire, the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) violated the no-raid provision of the Federation's constitution by attempting to represent all teacher aides employed by the Cleveland (Ohio) school board when some aides were members of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), AFL-CIO, Local 47. Although the SEIU was not exclusively recognized as representative for teacher aides, library aides, clerks, and bath attendants employed by the board (owing to a lack of enabling legislation in Ohio), it had been granted an ad hoc form of recognition by the board as the only representative of such employees since 1965. As a bargaining relationship of this nature is protected by Art. XX of the Federation's constitution and by the extension of that article through the Massillon decision, the umpire held it incumbent upon the AFT "to take affirmative steps to assure teachers' assistants who were prior members of SEIU that AFT would not impinge upon SEIU's relationship. AFT's failure to do this is ground for finding a . . . violation."

Art. XX provides that no AFL-CIO affiliate shall attempt to organize employees in instances where another affiliate enjoys an "established collective bargaining relationship." This relationship is defined as a situation where a union has been recognized as bargaining representative for one or more years or has been certified by the proper body. The Massillon doctrine extended the application of the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan (Art. XX) to the public sector generally in instances where exclusive recognition is unavailable. That is, the protection afforded an established bargaining relationship by Art. XX is applied by Massillon to "whatever bargaining relationship a given union has been successful in establishing with the employing governmental agency" where exclusive representation is not allowed.

In the present matter, the SEIU did not claim to represent a majority of nonteaching employees, had no written agreement as to the type of recognition the board had granted it, had never obtained exclusive recognition for teacher aides, and had a relationship with the Cleveland board on behalf of teacher aides that was "a Massillon type relationship for members only." Nevertheless, the umpire held that the SEIU had held a general Massillon type of recognition since 1965. As such, the union's relationship with the board for its members who were teacher aides constituted an established collective bargaining relationship entitled to Art. XX protection. To the extent that the AFT attempted to represent all teacher aides without specifically excluding SEIU members, it impinged upon the SEIU's Massillon type of established collective bargaining relationship and thereby violated the AFL-CIO internal disputes plan, according to the umpire.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, NOVEMBER 1970

Data released by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items index rose 0.3 percent in November to 137.8 (1957-59=100). The November figure put the CPI 5.6 percent above that of a year ago. According to BLS, an 0.6 percent advance in consumer services charges (particularly those associated with housing), as well as higher prices for apparel, houses, and cars accounted for most of the November increase. On the other hand, lower gasoline prices and a "substantial decline" in food prices moderated the November rise. An estimated 46,000 workers will receive cost-of-living increases based upon the November CPI.

JURY PAY RECEIVED WHILE PERFORMING REGULAR JOB NEED NOT BE SUBTRACTED FROM SALARY

A September 9, 1970, ruling of the Comptroller General determined that a Chicago Treasury Department employee who did not attend court but worked for two days while serving as a juror was permitted to retain her jury duty pay for those days without having the amount deducted from her salary. As the court recessed for two days during a legal conference and the employee had been told to work on any full days of absence from the courtroom, she worked the two days in dispute. The judge, however, had notified the jurors that they would be paid for the two recess days. In interpreting a portion of federal law stating that any jury pay received by federal employees is to be subtracted from their salaries, the Comptroller General held that if they receive jury pay without missing any work, that amount does not have to be subtracted. He explained:

> The fact that [the employee] will receive juror's fees in addition to her pay for the days in question does not render the retention of the juror's fees improper. The statute contemplates crediting against pay only the amount received by an employee from a State on account of jury service for any period he otherwise would be performing the duties of his ordinary position.

NLRB SETS $1 MILLION JURISDICTIONAL STANDARD FOR PRIVATE NONPROFIT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Pursuant to its July 1970 determination to assert jurisdiction over private nonprofit colleges and universities as a class (NRD, 9-70, 10), the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) decided to include all such institutions with a gross annual operating revenue of no less than $1 million within its jurisdiction. Stating that this standard "will bring within the Board's jurisdiction those labor disputes in the industry which exert or tend to exert a pronounced impact on commerce," the NLRB pointed out that "some 80 percent of all private colleges and universities and approximately 95 percent of all full- and part-time nonprofessional personnel" now will be "within reach" of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA).

While acknowledging that the $1 million standard adopted for private, nonprofit colleges and universities is "higher on its face" than the highest gross revenue standard ($500,000) adopted for other enterprises, the board explained that the > practical effect [of the newly established standard] is to extend the protections of the [NLRA] to a greater proportion of the employers and employees in the affected class. Further, the industries to which the Board applies gross revenue standards of $500,000 or less conduct their business through large numbers of relatively small units, a substantial number of which must be embraced by the relevant jurisdictional standard if the Board effectively is to regulate the labor relations of the industry. Here, in contrast, effective regulation of the labor relations of the industry can be achieved, in our opinion, under the higher standard.

The $1 million jurisdictional standard became effective December 3, 1970, with its publication in the Federal Register.

Statistics

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: THE HIRING OF SPECIALISTS AND DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 negotiated classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 119 agreements (12.2 percent) with provisions governing the hiring of specialists, and 84 agreements (8.6 percent) with provisions covering the development of special education programs. Of these agreements, 27 contained provisions concerning both subject areas.

Tables 1 through 9 present data derived from the analyzed provisions; the categories listed in these tables are not mutually exclusive. Moreover, this analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements, and makes no attempt to cross-reference the analyzed provisions with other negotiated content which indirectly may affect the hiring of specialists or the development of special education programs. Sample provisions reprinted here are not intended to be regarded as exemplary and may, in some cases, be only pertinent excerpts.

The Hiring of Specialists

Of the 119 provisions pertinent to the hiring of specialists, 16 (13.4 percent) established joint teacher-board committees to study the need for specialists and make recommendations for hiring them. The remaining 103 provisions (86.6 percent) committed the school board to hire various types of specialists in that they usually contained a statement of the intention to hire such personnel, guidelines for the hiring procedure, and an indication of the type(s) of specialist(s) desired. Table 1 indicates the general negotiated content of the 119 provisions analyzed. Sample provisions establishing joint study committees are reprinted following the table.

TABLE 1.—GENERAL NEGOTIATED CONTENT OF 119 PROVISIONS PERTAINING TO THE HIRING OF SPECIALISTS, 1968-69

General content	Agreements containing designated content
	Number	Percent
1	2	3
TOTAL NUMBER OF PROVISIONS	119	100.0%
PROVISIONS ESTABLISHING JOINT COMMITTEES	16	13.4
PROVISIONS CONTAINING A COMMITMENT TO HIRE SPECIALISTS	103	86.6
Hiring guidelines and policies	77	74.7[a]
Identification of specialists	77	74.7
To teach handicapped or temporarily disabled pupils	52	50.5
To teach culturally different pupils	5	4.9
To provide pupil services	49	47.6
To teach nonacademic subjects	49	47.6
To teach academic subjects	10	9.7

[a]This percentage and all succeeding percentages are based upon the 103 agreements containing a commitment to hire specialists.

The Parties agree that a joint Administrator-Association subcommittee consisting of three members appointed by the School Committee and three members appointed by the Association will be established to study the number of specialists needed to make more effective the operation of our educational program in the following areas:

ELEMENTARY—Adjustment Counselor; Guidance Counselor; Art; Music; Reading (Developmental and Remedial); Librarians; Speech Therapists; Special Classes for Perceptual Skills

JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL—Adjustment Counselor; Guidance Counselor; Reading (Developmental and Remedial)

SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL—Adjustment Counselor; Guidance Counselor; Reading (Developmental and Remedial)

The Parties further agree that the joint study will commence by October 1, 1967 and a report will be issued by December 15, 1967. (Chelmsford, Massachusetts)

* * *

The Committee and the Association recognize that an adequate number of competent specialists is essential to the operation of an effective educational program. Accordingly, the parties agree to establish a joint committee whose purpose will be to meet from time to time to study the needs for the addition or elimination of specialists. The Committee and the Association will each appoint two persons to serve on this joint committee and those persons will elect a chairman from among themselves. This joint committee will report the findings and recommendations of its studies to the Superintendent. (North Kingston, Rhode Island)

Guidelines and policies for hiring specialists were found in 77 (74.7 percent) of the provisions analyzed. Of these, 36.4 percent philosophically recognized the necessary role of specialists in an effective educational program and stated an intention to hire an adequate number of specialists. Many provisions, however, designated the number of specialists to be hired: 19 provisions named an exact number, five provisions indicated the intended ratio of specialists to pupils, and five other provisions specified a combination of an exact system-wide number, a ratio, and the number of specialists per building. An example of a provision calling for a specified number of specialists per building is:

The Board agrees to make reasonable effort to locate and assign three special education teachers with special education certificates and eligible for state reimbursement, to the Ann J. Kellogg School to assist in the teaching of physical education, art and music. These teachers are also to be trained in their special field. Teachers who have limited training will be considered if the teacher will work toward certification in the special area. (Battle Creek, Michigan)

Some provisions indicated that the number of specialists already employed was to be increased; others provided that specialists would be hired within the limits of the budget. Both types of provisions are found in the following example:

The District will make every effort at the beginning of the second semester of the 1968-69 school year to hire additional specialists and auxiliary teachers within the resources and at the professional discretion of the administration.

In the spring of 1969, the District will submit to the voters of the Midland School District a millage proposal for the purpose of employing fifteen (15) additional specialists and auxiliary teachers in 1969-70 and fifteen (15) more specialists and auxiliary teachers in 1970-71.

In the event that the millage for the proposal in [the above section] is not obtained, the District and the Association will consult as to what action is to be taken in the areas of specialists and auxiliary teachers. (Midland, Michigan)

Although most of the provisions containing hiring guidelines and policies set no time limitation on hiring, 13 agreements indicated that the hiring process should be completed by the end of a specific school year, usually the year the agreement was effective. A sample negotiated posting procedure provided that "all openings for specialists and/or special project teachers shall be adequately publicized in every school as far in advance of the appointment as possible and ordinarily at least thirty (30) days in advance" (Newark, New Jersey). The few provisions mentioning necessary qualifications for specialists' positions generally stated that personnel should be properly trained or meet some existing standards. One provision held that "openings shall be filled after interviews and, in filling such openings, length of service in the Newark School System shall be a major but not exclusive factor" (Newark, New Jersey). Of those provisions containing negotiated hiring procedures, one stated that regular procedures would be followed, and the remaining provisions required that the teachers' organization be consulted to one degree or another, as in the following example:

The determination to employ personnel for specialized programs and/or increases to the staff, shall remain the sole prerogative of the School Committee as authorized by law.

The Superintendent shall give due consideration to each request presented and substantiated by the Burlington Educators Association study. The Superintendent will adjudicate each request on a priority basis giving due consideration to the educational needs of the district and the community's ability and willingness to support additional specialized personnel. He will then submit his recommendations to the School Committee. (Burlington, Massachusetts)

Table 2 indicates the prevalence of various hiring guidelines and policies among the 77 provisions analyzed.

Of the 103 provisions containing a commitment to hire specialists, 77 (74.7 percent) named the type(s) of specialist(s) according to five general categories or types of programs: teachers of the handicapped, pupil services personnel, teachers for special education programs, teachers of specialized academic subjects, and teachers of culturally different pupils. Specialists involved in teaching or training handicapped pupils were to be hired more often than any other type of specialist. The term "handicapped" includes pupils with permanent or temporary physical, mental, or emotional problems of a magnitude warranting specialized educational programs and/or training by specially qualified personnel. As indicated in Table 3, the personnel most often sought among the 52 provisions were teachers of the mentally retarded, specialists trained to deal with speech and auditory handicaps, and teachers of emotionally disturbed pupils. Agreements providing for the hiring of teachers able to aid pupils who face substantial cultural barriers in mastering the regular curriculum also are identified in Table 3. Five provisions called for the employment of teachers trained to work with pupils whose native language is not English, or who are identified as "educationally disadvantaged."

Pupil services specialists providing regular, continuing assistance of a certain nature to all pupils were to be added to school staffs by 49 negotiated provisions. Of these, 61.2 percent provided for the hiring of psychologists or psychiatrists, and 26.5 percent stipulated that social workers be hired; all three types of specialists were to be employed for the purposes of identifying, evaluating, and assisting pupils with emotional and mental difficulties. Table 4 indicates the incidence of agreements providing for the employment of these and other pupil services personnel.

Table 5 indicates that specialists working with special education programs were to be hired in 49 agreements, and specialized teachers of academic subjects were to be hired in 10 agreements. Special education teachers most often mentioned were music, art, and physical education instructors; the "other" category includes health, safety, speech, and driver education teachers. Also included in Table 5 are reading specialists who were to be hired in 32 provisions for the purpose of conducting remedial, developmental, and other specialized reading programs which are adjunctive to the academic curriculum.

Of the 103 provisions containing a commitment to hire specialists, 41 (39.8 percent) contained peripheral subject matter dealing with salary differentials, class size and class load, the use of aides and clerical help, relief time, whether the specialist enters the regular classroom, and the question of a specialist's relief from some duties. Only 25 of the 77 provisions identifying the type(s) of specialist(s) to be hired indicated the assigned school level for some of the specialists: 14 provisions referred to elementary schools, 10 provisions referred to both elementary and secondary schools, and one provision mentioned hiring specialists only for secondary schools. Sample provisions illustrating the categories of specialists to be hired and other miscellaneous negotiated content are reprinted below.

A. The Committee and the Association recognize the fact that an adequate number of competent specialists are essential to the operation of an effective educational program. Accordingly, there will be at least the following number of qualified specialists in each of the listed categories:

1. Elementary Schools: School Adjustment Counselors (8); Art (3); French (4); Guidance Counselors (1); Music (6); Reading, Developmental and Remedial (2); Physical Education (7); Science (3).

2. Junior High Schools and Grammar Schools: French (4); Guidance Counselors (6); Reading, Developmental and Remedial (4).

3. Senior High School: Guidance Counselors (4); Reading, Developmental and Remedial (2).

B. The number of specialists presently employed in categories not listed above will not be reduced during the term of this Agreement.

4. Systemwide: Psychologist (1, 3 days per week); Psychiatrist (1, ½ day per week); Speech Improvement (3); Lip Reading (1); Handicapped Children at home (1); Vision and Hearing Technicians (2).

5. a. Suggested Teacher Aide for Special Classes: Each building having more than one mentally retarded class (1); each class for emotionally disturbed children (1); each class for trainable retarded (1); each class for handicapped children (1).

b. Suggested Teacher Aide for each School Building (1).

C. It is understood, furthermore, that the number of qualified specialists will increase with the needs of the school system. (Fall River, Massachusetts)

For School Librarians. The system-wide ratio of professional school librarians to students shall be maintained at no less than the 1967-68 ratio of 1: approximately 1100 and the goal shall be 1: approximately 600 elementary students, 2 per Junior High School building and 1: approximately 1000 High School students.

For Speech Therapists. The assigned work load shall be not less than 75 nor more than 100 cases. Including non-public-school students.

For School Nurses. The system-wide ratio of school nurses to students shall be maintained at no less than the 1967-68 ratio of 1: approximately 3000 including non-public school students, and the goal shall be one nurse to each 1800 elementary school pupils and one full-time nurse at each Junior High School and Senior High School.

For Diagnosticians. The current employment of five (5) diagnosticians to serve the total school population, including non-public school students, shall be maintained. The Board will seek to employ qualified students or other persons, on an hourly basis, to assist the diagnosticians, up to a maximum total expenditure of $1,500 per year.

For Social Workers. The system wide ratio of social workers to pupils shall be maintained at no less than the 1967-68 ratio. The goal shall be one social worker for each Junior High School and one male and one female social worker for each High School and an overall ratio of one social worker to twelve hundred pupils including non-public school pupils.

For Type A Special Education Teachers, Personalized Program. The total enrollment in a personalized program (Type A) shall not exceed a pupil-teacher ratio of fifteen to one (15-1). It shall be the goal of the Board to obtain the services of a full-time Coordinator to act as consultant and to coordinate all personalized programs.

For Teachers of the Emotionally Disturbed, class size shall be in the range of six (6) to eight (8) pupils.

For Secondary Guidance Department Personnel. The ratio of Secondary Guidance Department Personnel to system-wide secondary pupils shall be maintained at no less than the current ratio and the goal shall be a ratio of one (1) to 250. Secondary Guidance Personnel shall have no other regular assignment during the school day.

The position of teacher consultant for the perceptually handicapped shall be maintained. (Ann Arbor, Michigan)

F. 1. The services of the psychologist will be available for any pupils in the public schools of the District.

2. The psychologist is available for formal and informal consultation with teachers and parents regarding individual pupils. He offers help with questions of academic achievement, behavior problems, emotional difficulties and social adjustment. He helps evaluate mental retardation and exceptional mental ability.

3. Psychological service includes all or some of the following:

a. Individual study of the child with analysis of intellectual functioning, personality factors, peer and family relationships, and school attitudes.

b. Consultation with teachers and school staff.

c. Individual work with pupils.

d. Work with parents.

e. Referral to outside agencies where indicated.

4. Before formal referral of a pupil for psychological service, the classroom teacher should discuss this with the Principal, and make provision for obtaining agreement of the parent for testing, whenever possible. Referral forms can be obtained from the psychologist or from the Principal's office.

5. The schedule for the psychologist will be given to him at the beginning of each school year and may be changed by the Superintendent from time to time in order to meet the needs of the schools and pupils.

6. The psychologist's work day will conform to that of the teachers day in the school in which he is working.

G. 1. The Remedial Reading Teacher will guide the reading instruction program of the primary grades. She will work with teachers and pupils in kindergarten, Grade 1 and Grade 2 in the Cooke, Duggan and Chase Schools to attempt to insure that a good start is achieved in reading before the pupil leaves the primary level.

2. The Remedial Reading Teacher will devote full time to teaching remedial reading and continuing the developmental program at the intermediate level. She will work with Grades 3, 4 and 5 in the Rutherford, Duggan and Chase Schools.

3. The Remedial Reading Teacher, under Title I, will teach classes in Reading and Study Skills to selected pupils of Grades 6 and 7 in the Middle School.

H. 1. The services of the Speech and Hearing Correction teacher are available for any pupils in the public schools of the District who have deficiencies which require such services.

2. Teachers should feel free to refer pupils to the Speech and Hearing Correction Teacher for study and assistance. Referral slips will be provided.

3. The schedule for the Speech and Hearing Correction Teacher will be given to him at the beginning of each school year and may be changed by the Superintendent from time to time in order to meet the needs of the schools and pupils.

4. The work day of the Speech and Hearing Correction Teacher will conform to that of the teachers day in the school in which he is working.

5. Requests for teacher or parent conferences may be made directly to the Speech and Hearing Correction Teacher or the Administrative Offices of the School District.

I. School Nurse Teachers are employed to care for the needs of the District. Each year they will receive assignments made by the Superintendent of Schools which may be changed from time to time to meet the needs of the school system and pupil needs.

J. 1. The School Dental Hygienist's work includes not only inspection and cleaning of teeth, but also classroom instruction in dental care.

2. The School Dental Hygienist's main office will be in the Middle School where she can be contacted by calling 794-4410. Her work will be in all of the schools for such periods of time as may be necessary to complete in consecutive fashion the examinations and cleanings required.

3. Her work day will conform to that of the teachers day in the school in which she is working. (Monticello, New York)

Specialists should be available in order to provide an effective educational program. The following pupil-specialist ratios are considered to be desirable goals. The utilization of facilities, personnel, and future planning shall be such as to attain these goals:

Counselor	1 for every 350 pupils enrolled
Psychologist	1 for every 2500 pupils enrolled
Visiting Teacher	1 for every 1500 pupils enrolled
Librarian	1 for every 200-999 pupils enrolled
	2 for every 1000-1999 pupils enrolled
	3 for every 2000 and over pupils enrolled

Centralized cataloguing and processing shall be initiated as soon as possible.

Qualified clerical assistance should be made available to all specialists. (Cincinnati, Ohio)

The Development of Special Education Programs

Of the 84 agreements with negotiated content applying to the development of special education programs, 10 (11.9 percent) created joint teacher-board committees to study or plan special programs for children with behavior and learning problems, mentally retarded children, and educationally disadvantaged children. Two other agreements stated only that teachers would be involved in the development of any contemplated special education programs. Sample provisions establishing joint committees are:

During the 1968-69 school year, the Professional Study Committee shall meet to determine the needs at all levels for the Mentally Retarded and the Socially Maladjusted. Their findings are to be considered as the recommendations to the Board of Education. (Mt. Pleasant, Michigan)

* * *

An ad hoc committee shall be organized immediately after the start of the 1968-69 school year to study the development of a special program for the slow learner in the Junior High School in the district.

This committee shall have as its chairman, the Junior High School Guidance Counselor, who shall work with the Building Principal, the school psychologist and the teachers, in the development of a special program for the slow learners. This committee shall propose recommendations for such a program to the Board of Education through the District Principal. (Spackenkill, New York)

The remaining 72 provisions (85.7 percent) contained specific negotiated content falling into four broad categories: the types of special programs to be established, pupils eligible for the programs, means of identifying and evaluating pupils needing special programs, and specialists made available through the programs. Table 6 indicates the incidence of major negotiated content areas among the 84 provisions analyzed.

[a]This percentage and all succeeding percentages are based upon the 72 provisions containing specific negotiated content pertaining to the development of special education programs.

Of the 72 provisions with specific negotiated content, 58 (80.6 percent) indicated the nature of the program(s) being established, expanded, or endorsed. As shown in Table 7, programs usually involving the establishment of special facilities or alterations in regular classroom conditions most often were planned for children with various handicaps. Of the 23 provisions referring to special facilities, one established special schools and all the rest indicated that special classrooms would be furnished. Fifteen of the 21 provisions allowing for classroom adjustments specified a reduction in class size; the other six provisions stipulated more preparation time for the teacher, a modified daily program for the student, the creation of a crisis committee to aid teachers with children who are disciplinary problems, equitable distribution of children with problems among various teachers, in-class instruction by a specialist, and an unspecified "adjustment." Two of the programs for handicapped or problem children were to have aides.

The seven provisions which added various special education programs to the curriculum mentioned shop, typing, speech, band, art, music, vocational, health, physical education, and home arts classes. Of the remedial courses established, only two were identified as remedial reading classes. One of the provisions establishing summer school programs stated that special education was to be offered. Provisions in the "other" category included federally financed projects, follow-up services, psychological services, and an individualized program.

Of the 72 agreements with content pertaining to the development of special education programs, 66 (91.7 percent) identified the types of pupils eligible for such programs, as summarized in Table 8. Emotionally disturbed students most often were named as needing special programs, followed by mentally retarded students and pupils with physical handicaps, including visual and hearing deficiencies. Students with various minor learning difficulties were described as nonachieving pupils, aphasiac children, those not prepared for the first grade, and those having "learning problems." The "all students" category refers to the fact that all students were eligible for special education courses such as music, art, and physical education which were to be added to the curriculum.

Procedures for identifying and evaluating pupils needing special programs were negotiated in 26 (36.1 percent) of the 72 provisions, as indicated in Table 9. Once the classroom teacher identified the pupil, he was to inform the principal and/or various special departments in six provisions, and supply information to persons who would evaluate the pupils in two provisions. Tests to be given pupils were described as psychological tests in four provisions and were undefined in two other provisions. In one agreement an evaluation of the pupil was to be conducted by the school psychologist; three other agreements referred to the school diagnostic services or special services department as the evaluation agent. The "other" category includes general statements that the pupil would be evaluated, that state education department regulations would be followed, and that the teacher would be informed of the disposition of the matter.

Specialists provided by special education programs were essentially the same as those mentioned in agreements providing for the hiring of specialists. Of the 30 provisions designating the types of specialists available through special programs, 27 provided for hiring them, and three provisions referred to specialists already employed.

Three provisions dealing with the development of special education programs are reprinted following the table. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

A. The Board and the Association recognize that students having special problems of a physical, mental, or emotional nature may need a program designed to meet the needs the problem presents.

B. A teacher who is suspicious of such exceptional children will immediately inform the building principal. The building principal will provide the teacher with the proper referral form as well as a listing of information required by the professional specialist.

C. The parties further agree that the individual student has the right to a professional diagnosis by the medical or professional specialist defined by law prior to any judgment as to his condition.

D. The results of all diagnosis will be referred to the District Coordinator of Special Education who will forward such information to the building principal. The building principal will in turn inform the student's teacher of the availability of the diagnosis.

E. The student with a positive diagnosis will be presented to the District screening committee which will cooperatively develop an educational plan for the student.

F. The District screening committee shall be composed of:

1. The Building Principal
2. The Referring Teacher
3. The Intermediate School District Consultant
4. The Professional Specialist (or his report)
5. The Receiving Principal where applicable
6. The Receiving Teacher
7. The Coordinator of Special Education shall serve as executive officer of the screening committee.

(Anchor Bay, Michigan)

* * *

B. Handicapped Children

1. State and/or Federal funds shall be used to make special education classes an integral part of the Detroit summer school program.

2. A joint Administration-Federation Committee shall formulate (for implementation not later than the second semester of the 1967-68 school year) plans for the utilization of two special education rooms of the same category in a selected number of schools to be designated by the Superintendent on a trial basis. This committee shall evaluate the educational benefit of such organization during the second semester of the school year 1967-68 and shall submit a report of such evaluation to the Superintendent no later than June 1, 1968.

C. Summer School Programs

1. To the extent that Federal funds are available for such purpose, free remedial summer school classes shall be provided to any elementary school child who fails a regular grade. The Board shall also continue to develop and implement programs which will provide free summer school classes to some needy children each summer.

2. The school social work program and the psychological testing program shall be expanded into the summer school period. (Detroit, Michigan)

* * *

A. The Board of Education shall maintain a continuous classification and reclassification program and shall provide adequate facilities for children of serious dissimilar learning abilities in the school year of 1968-69. The Board of Education recognizes a current need of 8 classes.

B. When feasible the Board of Education shall hire only certified teachers to teach any special class.

C. The Board of Education shall instruct the administrators of each building to schedule special classes for instructions in all special areas such as: music, art, library, homemaking, and industrial arts.

D. The Board of Education shall continue to provide adequate psychological, neurological, and psychiatric personnel in order to develop and maintain an effective screening process for placement of children with special problems in special classes.

E. The Board of Education recognizing the need for attention to facilities for transition grades shall conduct studies with the Association with a view to making appropriate space available in new construction.

F. Whenever feasible, the Board of Education shall provide an aide in each special class.

G. In order that the classroom teacher may arrange the program to give the fullest aid to those children with outstanding problems specialists participating in screening children shall give a written and oral report to the child's teacher concerning the areas of the pupil's greatest need. This would include perceptual, physical, neurological, or emotional difficulties. Such a screening by specialists would precede the placement of any child in a special, or learning, disability class.

H. In considering the reorganization of any classes, the Board of Education shall give equal consideration to the urgency of stability of classroom time and space for special classes. Should any reorganization result in curtailed sessions, special classes shall be exempt from such curtailment. (East Patchogue, New York)

IN-SERVICE SABBATICAL

A. Statement of Purpose – The in-service sabbatical leave program of the School Town of Highland is intended for the study of some specific identified school problem, concern, or situation that directly benefits the School Town. The in-service sabbatical days are in addition to days granted for inter-school visitations and for professional conference days.

B. Application Procedures –

1. Eligibility–Any fully certified employee (tenure not required) of the School Town of Highland may submit an application (See Appendix VII).

2. Duration–The in-service sabbatical shall have a maximum duration of six (6) weeks unless otherwise stipulated by the Board of School Trustees. No minimum time is stipulated.

a. Preparation of application in accordance with suggested outline (Appendix A). Anyone submitting an application should feel free to consult with other teachers, building principals, coordinators, or central office personnel.

b. Proposal should be presented informally to the building principal (where applicable) prior to formal presentation to Sabbatical Approval Committee. The building principal should offer constructive criticism and suggestions where deemed necessary. In addition, the building principal may, if he so chooses, submit to the Sabbatical Approval Committee a separate written recommendation either for or against acceptance of the proposal.

c. A written request should be made to the Assistant Superintendent for Curriculum and Instruction to make a formal presentation of the proposal to the Sabbatical Approval Committee. A meeting of the committee will be arranged by the Chairman within one week after the request has been made unless members of the committee find it impossible to agree on an acceptable meeting time.

d. Within two weeks from the date of formal hearing the In-Service Sabbatical Approval Committee will render a recommendation on the proposal.

(1) If the recommendation is positive and approval is given, the proposal will be submitted to the Superintendent of Schools for final approval. The Superintendent will render a decision within no more than one week.

(2) If the recommendation is negative and approval is not given, the proposal will not be given further consideration unless the committee decision is appealed.

(3) The decision of the In-Service Sabbatical Approval Committee can be appealed directly to the Superintendent of Schools. Appeals must be made within the two week period following the committee decision.

e. If the proposal is given final approval by the Superintendent, the recipient of the sabbatical leave will be released from regular duties thirty (30) days following the date of final approval. If mutually agreeable, the thirty (30) day waiting period may be adjusted to a shorter length.

4. Reporting and Accountability During In-Service Sabbatical Leave Period

a. Each sabbatical leave recipient will be held accountable to the Assistant Superintendent for Curriculum and Instruction during the period of time he is on leave.

b. Progress reports (during the course of the sabbatical leave) will be arranged with the Assistant Superintendent for Curriculum and Instruction.

c. Final report of the project will be written and copies submitted to the following persons:

1. One copy to building principal.
2. Four copies to Superintendents (one each).
3. Three copies to the Board of School Trustees.

The appropriate administrator will be responsible for making ten copies of the report with the two extras going to the teacher. (Highland, Indiana) minimum of 1 inservice course every 3 years, although an approved college, university or other course may meet the requirement; education credit repayment plan whereby approved education improvement credits earned at an accredited institution will be paid at the rate of no more than 6 credits per semester during the school year with no limitation on the number of credits taken during the summer; school calendar adopted by board after consultation between the superintendent, the administrators association, teachers, the Association, and representatives of parents and pupils.

STUDENT EVALUATION OF TEACHERS

The Student-Teacher-Administrator-Board Committee shall develop a program for student evaluation of teachers and shall render a report to the Board and to the Teachers' Association by October 15, 1970. The purpose of such evaluation shall be to provide teachers with a measure of their success in selected components of good educational practices as defined by the Committee.

The Committee shall be charged with the responsibility of developing a system that guarantees the anonymity of both student and teacher since the intent of this evaluation is to provide additional information for teacher self-evaluation and improvement and not a criterion for affecting salary increments or adjustments.

Implementation of this provision during the life of this contract shall be only by mutual agreement. (Teaneck, New Jersey)

THE GROWTH IN GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES AND NATURE OF FINAL GRIEVANCE APPEALS, 1966-67 TO 1968-69

A three-year comparison of the percentage of classroom teacher negotiation agreements effective in districts with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more which contained grievance procedures indicates an increase of 39.7 percent from 1966-67 to 1968-69, while the percentage of comprehensive agreements entered in the NEA depository during that same period rose 40.7 percent. In 1966-67, 88.7 percent of the agreements surveyed (398) contained a grievance procedure. This figure rose to 91.2 percent during the 1967-68 school year when 550 of the 603 agreements surveyed were found to have negotiated grievance procedures. In 1968-69, 90.8 percent of the 978 agreements analyzed contained grievance procedures.

An analysis of final appeal provisions contained in negotiated grievance procedures shows that the percentage of agreements providing for final appeal within the school system increased slightly from 15.0 percent in 1966-67 to 18.8 percent in 1968-69. On the other hand, the percentage of agreements allowing a final appeal outside the school system decreased slightly from 85.0 percent in 1966-67 to 81.2 percent in 1968-69. Table 1 presents state by state the growth in the number of negotiated grievance procedures over the three-year period, as well as the percentage of those procedures in each year which provided final appeals within or outside the school system.

Final grievance appeals outside the system may be advisory or binding and involve a number of types of third-party assistance. As indicated in Table 1, the percentage of agreements providing for advisory grievance decision fell significantly from 48.2 percent in 1966-67 to 35.0 percent in 1968-69; however, provision for final and binding grievance decision by a third party rose steadily during that period from 36.8 percent to 46.2 percent of the agreements analyzed.

Table 2 provides a three-year comparison of the types of third-party assistance utilized as final appeals bodies in the resolution of grievances. Throughout the three-year period, state labor board personnel most often were to be utilized as advisory arbitrators, although significant increases in the percentages of grievance procedures calling for the joint selection of an advisory arbitrator and the utilization of American Arbitration Association (AAA) personnel in an advisory capacity were evident in 1968-69. Third-party personnel empowered to render final and binding grievance decisions most often were to be selected from AAA rosters during the three-year period, but a marked increase in the percentages of agreements providing for the joint selection of an impartial arbitrator and "other" methods for determining outside assistance were indicated in 1968-69. The "other" category in the table includes agreements providing alternative methods for selecting an arbitrator, a choice of sources of outside parties, or impartial assistance from a source other than the specific categories listed.

Grievance Procedures, An Overview

Grievance procedures are negotiated for the general purpose of preventing and/or resolving promptly, equitably, and at the lowest possible administrative level problems or differences affecting the conditions of professional teaching service. Grievances may be brought by an individual teacher or group of teachers, by the representative organization, or by the local school board; according to negotiated definitions and/or conditions, a grievance may involve alleged violations, misinterpretations, or misapplications of negotiated provisions, violations of board rules, orders, or written policies, statutory violations, or alleged unfair treatment, personal loss, injury or inconvenience resulting from such violations. Most grievance procedures state that each step of the procedure should be as informal as is appropriate, that every effort should be made to resolve the grievance informally before invoking the formal procedure, and that the grievance should be processed as rapidly as possible. Moreover, the proceedings are to be free from interference, coercion, restraint, discrimination, or reprisal, and many agreements specifically provide that all records of grievance proceedings be filed separately from the grievant's personnel file.

The grievant usually is allowed to be represented at all stages of the formal grievance procedure by a person of his own choosing, often a representative of the teachers' bargaining organization. While a teacher may grieve a matter himself, most agreements stipulate that the representative organization shall have the opportunity to be present and state its views at certain stages of the formal procedure. In addition, decisions reached at each step of the formal procedure generally are to be rendered in writing and promptly transmitted to the grievant and the representative organization. In some agreements the teachers' organization is allowed to process a grievance through all levels of the procedure, even though the aggrieved does not wish to pursue the matter beyond a particular level; other provisions allow only the representative organization to pursue a grievance to the highest level of appeal.

In many cases, the teachers' organization representative engaged in processing a grievance is released from his regular duties without loss of pay. However, some agreements provide that parties involved in grievance proceedings must avoid interrupting classroom activity and should not allow pupil involvement in the proceedings. In an arbitration case involving the construction of a clause allowing "fellow teachers" to visit a classroom without the permission of the principal's office, it was found that fou. New Haven (Mich.) Education Association officials from another school briefly could speak to a teacher during class hours about a grievance they believed she had. Although the officials had failed to find a relief teacher to substitute during the visit, the arbitrator held that the relief teacher stipulation was not controlling here as the local board had failed to inform the Association of changes in the policy allowing personnel free access to school buildings during class hours. While a school administration has the right to establish reasonable rules regulating visits by Association representatives, the arbitrator held that decisions as to whether a matter is so urgent that it must be discussed during school hours are ones which the Association has a "basic right" to make.

The confidential nature of grievance procedures specifically is mentioned in many agreements. In an arbitration case involving the Huntington (N.Y.) education board, it was found that a principal improperly revealed the facts about a grievance (without the grievant's permission) to the school's building committee which, while it often acted as representative in grievance proceedings, was not the representative here. Although the principal was new to grievance handling, the arbitrator held that this did not justify his disclosing the grievance to anyone other than the parties directly involved. However, any action against the principal was left to the board as the arbitrator had no power under the agreement to discipline a grievance representative. Another arbitrator found a violation when the superintendent of the Belleville (N.Y.) public schools discussed a grievance with the local board and his administrative staff prior to issuing a formal reply and contrary to a negotiated policy which empowered the superintendent alone to reach final decisions on grievances.

Most agreements provide that following an alleged violation, the grievant discuss the matter on an informal basis with his immediate supervisor, generally the building principal; some emphasize that a teacher should feel free to discuss a personal complaint without recourse to the actual grievance procedure. If discussions prove unsatisfactory, the formal grievance procedure is invoked by entering a written grievance or completing a standardized grievance form and submitting it to a specified supervisor. At this point designated time limits placed upon each level of the procedure and usually stated as maximums are to be strictly observed, unless extended by written mutual agreement of the parties. Although negotiated grievance procedures vary widely in terms of the numbers of levels of appeal, persons or bodies to which appeals are made, time limits at various levels of appeal, and the final disposition of grievances, a formal grievance generally must be initiated within a certain number of days of the alleged violation (30 calendar days to 60 school days) and/or a "reasonable" number of days following the grievant's informal discussion with his immediate supervisor (five to 20 school days). Grievances brought by the representative organization or a group or class of teachers often may be initiated at levels above the first level of the procedure.

The formal written grievance specifically must set forth the charge(s) or nature of the grievance, the provisions or rules allegedly violated and the relief sought. An arbitrator upheld the Highland Park (Mich.) education board's motion to dismiss a grievance for lack of specificity under a clause stating that appeals to the next highest step of the grievance procedure shall "set forth specifically" the grounds for the grievance. While the local Federation had claimed a contract violation in regard to class size and demanded that several classes be reduced to their prescribed size during earlier stages of the procedure, it did not notify the district until the arbitration hearing of its claim that the contract was violated because the classes were not of equal size. In dismissing the grievance although he felt the class size problem should be heard on its merits, the arbitrator explained that "when the parties in the contract use the term 'set forth specifically' and very carefully set forth various steps in the grievance procedure, they were . . . treating the arbitration function as an appellate process, reviewing facts and circumstances that had been previously revealed in the grievance procedure."

Time Limits

Once a formal grievance is initiated, time limits placed upon decision and appeal procedures variously are stated as school days or calendar days measured from the date the grievance or appeal was filed at a certain level, from the date of disposition at the previous level, from the date of receipt of the decision at a previous level, or from the date of the conclusion of a meeting of the parties, a regular board meeting, or various types of hearings. A failure by the appropriate individual or body to reach and/or transmit its decision with the specified time limits automatically permits the aggrieved to proceed to the next step of the procedure. Conversely, a failure by the aggrieved to appeal a decision at any step within the designated time limits is deemed acceptance of that decision, thereby discontinuing the grievance and barring any further appeal.

A Nassau County (N.Y.) teacher's failure to file a grievance claiming that she was in the wrong salary classification until a year after returning to teaching did not bar an arbitrator from considering the merits of her case as the purpose of the arbitration clause involved was to "secure equitable solutions to teachers' complaints rather than to rely on technical obstructions." Another arbitrator rejected as untimely a demand for arbitration filed two and one-half months after the Hammond (Ind.) Board of School Trustees had reported its final decision on a grievance to the local Association. Although the parties' agreement provided no specific time limit for filing an arbitration demand, the arbitrator held that since other portions of the grievance procedure contained time limits "it is logical to imply that the parties intended the filing [of a demand for arbitration] would be within a reasonable time after the completion of the third step in the grievance procedure." In one other case a grievance was rejected on grounds that it was not submitted to arbitration within the 30-day time limit specified by the agreement. While the Portage (Mich.) Education Association "thought" the superintendent would extend the deadline, this did not justify its failure to comply with the provision.

Several other arbitration cases have ruled upon the applicability of time limit clauses in the face of "continuing" grievances. When the Clintondale (Mich.) Education Association grieved the local board's unilateral elimination of the position of department chairman, the grievance was ruled arbitrable even though the Association failed to grieve within 20 days after notification that the position would be abolished, as required by contract. Since the department chairmen were asked to continue performing their duties without the negotiated compensation, the grievance was continuing, thereby rendering the time limit clause inapplicable. An appeal of a grievance protesting the health insurance deduction from a teacher's salary after its rejection by the district principal was found timely since the Deer Park (N.Y.) board's failure to mention time limits prior to the arbitration hearing indicated that "there was an effective waiver." In addition, the grievant's claim that excessive deductions were made each month resulted in a continuing grievance, and the failure to grieve a deduction in November does not bar challenging the March deduction.

In one other arbitration case, a failure by the Ann Arbor (Mich.) Education Association to file for arbitration within contractual time limits did not bar arbitration where there was a "reasonable misunderstanding" as to whether a grievance had been rejected by the principal or passed on to the local personnel department for consideration. Moreover, the grievance was of a continuing nature since it dealt with claims that the grievant was being underpaid for his work, a new basis for which arose every week. Finally, the education board waived its objections since it had failed to follow grievance procedure.

When grievances are entered late in a school year (usually May 1 or later) many agreements urge that every effort be made to process and resolve the grievance by the end of the school year or as close thereafter as possible. To expedite the handling of such grievances, provision often is made for altering, waiving, or otherwise adapting contractual time limits by mutual agreement of the parties and as appropriate. Use of the term "school day" as applied to grievances processed after the school year generally means "work day." Under a clause stating that grievance decisions of the Melvindale Northern Allen Park (Mich.) school board must be appealed "within ten school days," an arbitrator held that he was not barred from considering the merits of a grievance arising near the end of the school year and appealed to arbitration during the summer recess. He explained that since the contract's use of "school days" was ambiguous, "fairness mandated" that the grievance be arbitrated. Another grievance dealing with the Harpursville (N.Y.) board's unilateral establishment of an extra-duty pay schedule for coaches was rejected as untimely since it was not submitted to arbitration within the contractual 15-day time limit. Although the board's alleged violative action occurred in July, the local Association waived its right to arbitration by failing to grieve the matter until November.

Some grievance procedures specifically provide that no grievances may be entered under a previously effective agreement after a certain date. An arbitrator pointed out, however, that "the intervention of a contract negotiation during the processing of a case to arbitration should not be permitted to alter alleged violations of the right of employees or the employer which took place under an earlier contract, particularly since the substance of such intervening negotiations are bound to be affected by pending grievances." The ruling came in a case where it was found that a clerical employee's grievance that certain hiring practices of the Warwick (R.I.) School Committee violated the 1969-70 contract was subject to a decision under that contract (which was effective when the grievance arose), rather than the somewhat different provisions of the 1970-71 contract effective when the case went to arbitration.

Three grievance procedures ending with final and binding arbitration by various outside parties are reprinted in their entirety below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Union Free School District No. 7, Great Neck, New York

Article XIX—Grievance Procedures

A. Declaration of Purpose

In order to provide the best possible educational climate and program for the Great Neck Public Schools, and to establish harmonious and effective relationships among those working toward this goal, these grievance procedures have been established consistent with law and with this agreement to resolve satisfactorily group or individual differences which would tend to unsettle or undermine the effective functioning of the school system. These procedures are based on sound, comprehensive, and generally available personnel practices. It is their purpose to secure under this contract, at the lowest possible administrative level, equitable solutions to grievances of teachers through procedures under which they may present grievances free from coercion, interference, restraint, discrimination or reprisal, and by which the Board of Education and the faculty are afforded adequate opportunity to dispose of their differences without the necessity of time consuming and costly proceedings before administrative agencies and/or in the courts.

B. Definitions

1. "Grievance" shall mean any claimed violation, misinterpretation or inequitable application of existing laws. Board policies, rules, procedures, regulations, administrative orders or rules governing conditions of professional service to the extent provided by law; or of the provisions of this agreement.

2. "Teacher" shall mean any member of the unit represented by the Association and covered by the Agreement.

3. "Supervisor" shall mean any principal, assistant principal, immediate superior, or other administrative or supervisory officer responsible for the area in which an alleged grievance arises, except for the chief executive officer.

4. "Association" shall mean Great Neck Teachers Association.

5. "Aggrieved Party" shall mean any person or group of persons in the negotiating unit filing a grievance.

6. "Party in Interest" shall mean the Grievance Committee of the Association and any party named in a grievance who is not the aggrieved party.

7. "Grievance Committee" is the committee created and constituted by the Great Neck Teachers Association, and composed of those members of the Association certified in writing to the Board of Education by the Association as Committee members.

8. "Hearing Officer" shall mean any individual or board charged with the duty of rendering decisions at any stage on grievances hereunder.

C. Procedures

1. All written grievances shall include the name and position of the aggrieved party, the identity of the provision of law, this agreement, policies, etc., involved in the said grievance, the time when and the place where the alleged events or conditions constituting the grievance existed, the identity of the party responsible for causing the said events or conditions, if known to the aggrieved party, and a general statement of the nature of the grievance and the redress sought by the aggrieved party.

2. Except for informal decisions at Stage 1A, all decisions shall be rendered in writing at each step of the grievance procedure, setting forth findings of fact, conclusions and supporting reasons therefor. Each decision shall be promptly transmitted to the grievant and the Association.

3. A grievance may be submitted by the Association directly at Stage 2 described below.

4. The preparation and processing of grievances shall be conducted so as to avoid interruption of classroom activity, except in emergency situations, and to avoid involvement of students in any phase of the grievance procedure.

5. The Board of Education and the Association agree to facilitate any investigation which may be required and to make available any and all material, relevant documents, communications and records concerning the alleged grievance that would be subject to judicial subpoena at the instance of the party requesting same.

6. Except as otherwise provided in paragraphs 5.1(a) and 5.1(b) below, any party in interest shall have the right at all stages of a grievance to confront and cross examine all adverse witnesses, to testify and to call witnesses on his own behalf, and to be furnished with a copy of any minutes of the proceedings made at each and every stage of this grievance procedure.

7. No interference, coercion, restraint, discrimination or reprisal of any kind will be taken by the Board or by any member of the administration against the aggrieved party, any party in interest, any representative, any member of the Grievance Committee or any witness by reason of such grievance or lawful participation therein in accordance with this procedure.

8. Forms for filing grievances, serving notices, taking appeals, and making reports and recommendations, and other necessary documents will be jointly developed by the Board and the Association. The Chief Executive Officer shall then have them reproduced and distributed to the Association for its members so as to facilitate operation of the grievance procedure.

9. All documents, communications, and records dealing with the processing of a grievance as specified in paragraph 12 below shall be filed separately from the personnel files of the participants.

10. Nothing contained herein will be construed as limiting the right of any teacher having a grievance to discuss the matter informally with any appropriate member of the administration and having the grievance adjusted without intervention of the Association, provided the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of this Agreement and existing laws, procedures, regulations, administrative orders or rules governing conditions of professional service, and provided the Association has been given an opportunity to be present at such adjustment and to state its views, except as otherwise provided in Paragraph 5.1(a) and 5.1(b) below.

11. If any provision of this grievance procedure or any application thereof to any teacher or group of teachers in the negotiating unit shall be finally determined by any court to be contrary to law, then such provision or application shall not be deemed valid and subsisting except to the extent permitted by law, but all other provisions or applications will continue in full force and effect.

12. The Superintendent of Schools shall be responsible for accumulating and maintaining an Official Grievance Record which shall consist of the written grievance, all exhibits, transcripts, communications, minutes and/or notes of testimony, as the case may be, written arguments and briefs considered at all levels other than Stage 1A and all written decisions at all stages. Official minutes will be kept at Board expense of all proceedings in Stages 2 and 3, except that where the services of a public stenographer are required (if mutually agreed by the parties at each stage) expenses shall be shared equally by the Board and the Association. A copy of such minutes will be made available to the aggrieved party and the Grievance Committee after the conclusion of hearings at Stages 2, 3 and 4, prior to the rendering of the decision, and the recipient will advise the appropriate hearing officer of any errors in said minutes. Any claim of error in the minutes shall become a part of the Official Grievance Record and the hearing officer shall indicate the determination made respecting such claimed error. The Official Grievance Record shall be available at reasonable times for inspection and/or copying by the Aggrieved Party, the Grievance Committee and the Board, and shall not be deemed a public record.

13. To promote the more efficient and effective operation of this grievance procedure, the Board of Education will supply the following summary information for the preceding school year to the President of the Great Neck Teachers Association by the first day of the ensuing school year:

a. the general nature and categories of the grievances and the number filed in each category;
b. the decisions rendered, the reasons for same, and the level at which settlement was made.

14. The existence of the procedure hereby established shall not be deemed to require any teacher to pursue the remedies here provided and shall not, in any manner, impair or limit the right of any member of the teaching faculty to pursue any other remedies available by law.

15. Costs of personnel and record-keeping will be borne by the Board of Education except as otherwise provided in this agreement.

D. Time Limits

1. Since it is important to good relationships that grievances be processed as rapidly as possible, every effort will be made by all parties to expedite the process. The time limits specified for either party may be extended only by mutual agreement.

2. No written grievance will be entertained as described below, and such grievance will be deemed waived unless a written grievance is forwarded at the first available stage within sixty (60) school days after the teacher knew or should have known of the act or condition on which the grievance is based.

3. If a decision at one stage is not appealed to the next stage of the procedure within the time limit specified, the grievance will be deemed to be discontinued and further appeal under this agreement shall be barred.

4. Failure at any stage of the grievance procedure to communicate a decision to the aggrieved party, his representatives and the Association within the specified time limit shall permit the lodging of an appeal at the next stage of the procedure within the time which would have been allotted had the decision been communicated by the final day.

5. In the event a grievance is filed on or after June 1, the time limits specified in this Agreement may be adjusted as the result of consultations involving the aggrieved party, the Association's Grievance Committee (if requested by the aggrieved party) and any other party named in the grievance. The objective shall be to process the grievance prior to the end of the school year or as soon thereafter as possible.

5.1 Stage 1: Supervisor

a. A teacher having a grievance will discuss it with his supervisor, either directly or through a representative, with the objective of resolving the matter informally. If the teacher submits the grievance through a representative, the teacher may be present during the discussion of the grievance.
b. If the grievance is not resolved informally, it shall be reduced to writing and presented to the supervisor. Within four school days, except in emergencies requiring the absence of the supervisor from his office, after the written grievance is presented to him, the supervisor shall render a decision thereon, in writing, and present it to the teacher, his representative and the Association.

5.2 Stage 2: Superintendent of Schools

a. If the teacher initiating the grievance is not satisfied with the written decision at the conclusion of Stage 1 and wishes to proceed further under this grievance procedure, the teacher or the Association's Grievance Committee on his behalf, shall file a written appeal of the decision at Stage 1 with the Superintendent of Schools within twenty (20) school days after the teacher has received such written decision. Copies of the written decision at Stage 1 shall be submitted with the appeal.

b. Within two (2) school days after receipt of the appeal, the Superintendent of Schools, or his duly authorized representative, shall schedule a hearing with the grievant and the Grievance Committee or its representative and all other parties in interest, for a date within five (5) school days of said receipt, except in emergency situations or professional commitment.

c. The Superintendent of Schools shall render a decision in writing to the grievant and the Grievance Committee or its representative within five (5) school days after the conclusion of the hearing.

5.3 Stage 3: Board of Education

a. If the teacher or the Association are not satisfied with the decision at Stage 2, the teacher or the Grievance Committee will file an appeal in writing with the Board of Education within fifteen (15) school days after receiving the decision at Stage 2. The official grievance record maintained by the Superintendent of Schools shall be available for the use of the Board of Education.

b. Within ten school days after receipt of an appeal, the Board of Education shall hold a hearing on the grievance. The hearing shall be conducted in executive session.

c. Within five school days, except in emergency situations, after the conclusion of the hearing, the Board of Education shall render a decision, in writing, on the grievance.

5.4 Stage 4: Arbitration

a. After such decision at Stage 3, if the grievant and the Association or the Association (are) (is) not satisfied with the decision at Stage 3c, the grievance may be submitted to an arbitrator for hearing and recommendation as provided below, by written notice to the other party within fifteen (15) working days of the decision at Stage 3.

b. Within five (5) school days after such written notice, the Board of Education and the Association or teacher will agree upon a mutually acceptable arbitrator. If the parties are unable to agree, a request for appointment may be made to the American Arbitration Association by either party.

c. The rules of the American Arbitration Association will apply insofar as they relate to procedure and selection of arbitrator.

d. The arbitrator's report and recommendations will promptly be furnished to all parties.

e. The arbitrator shall have no power or authority to offer any recommendation which is prohibited by law or which is violative of the terms of this Agreement.

f. No provision in Stage 4 (Arbitration) is to be interpreted to stop either party to the grievance, under limitation of the law, from appealing to the Commissioner of Education, the Civil Service Commissioner, or the courts, except that any and all disputes and controversies arising under or in connection with or relating to the application or interpretation of the terms and provisions hereof, shall be submitted to arbitration, at the request of either party. The decision of the arbitrator in such cases shall be final and binding upon the parties, provided the decision of the arbitrator is not contrary to or inconsistent with and does not modify or vary in any way the terms of the Agreement or of applicable law or of rules and regulations having the force and effect of law.

g. Cost of the arbitration, excluding expenses of the parties, will be borne equally by the Board and the Association.

6.1 The filing or pendency of any grievance shall in no way operate to impede, delay, or interfere with the right of the Board of Education to take the action complained of, subject, however, to the final decision on the grievance.

6.2 A grievance dispute involving Board policy or discretion may be submitted only on the question whether the Board policy was disregarded, or was applied in so discriminatory, arbitrary, or capricious a manner as to constitute an abuse of discretion.

Tacoma School District No. 10, Tacoma, Washington

Article III—Grievance Procedure

A. Definition

A "grievance" shall mean a complaint by a teacher that there has been to him a personal loss, injury or inconvenience because of a violation, misinterpretation or inequitable application of Board policy, this Agreement or an administrative decision affecting teachers.

A grievance to be considered under this procedure must be initiated by the teacher within thirty (30) calendar days from the time when the teacher knew or should know of its occurrence.

B. Procedure

1. a. Failure at any step of this procedure to communicate the decision on a grievance within the specified time limits shall permit the aggrieved teacher to proceed to the next step. Failure at any step of this procedure to appeal a grievance to the next step within the specified time limits shall be deemed to be acceptance of the decision rendered at that step.
   b. It is understood that teachers shall, during and notwithstanding the pendency of any grievance, continue to observe all assignments and applicable rules and regulations of the Board until such grievance and any effect thereof shall have been fully determined.

2. The Association may process a grievance through all levels of the grievance procedure even though the aggrieved person does not wish to do so.

3. Any teacher who has a grievance shall discuss it first with his principal (or immediate superior or department head, if applicable) in an attempt to resolve the matter informally at that level.

4. If, as a result of the discussion, the matter is not resolved to the satisfaction of the teacher within five (5) school days, he shall set forth his grievance in writing to the principal specifying:
   a. the nature of the grievance
   b. the nature and extent of the injury, loss or inconvenience
   c. the results of previous discussions
   d. his dissatisfaction with decisions previously rendered.

The principal shall communicate his decision to the teacher in writing within three (3) school days of receipt of the written grievance.

5. The teacher, no later than five (5) school days after receipt of the principal's decision, may appeal the principal's decision to the Superintendent of Schools. The appeal to the superintendent must be made in writing reciting the matter submitted to the principal as specified above and his or her dissatisfaction with decisions previously rendered. The superintendent shall attempt to resolve the matter as quickly as possible, but within a period not to exceed ten (10) school days. The superintendent shall communicate his decision in writing to the teacher and the principal.

6. a. If the grievance is not resolved to the teacher's satisfaction, he, no later than five (5) school days after receipt of the superintendent's decision, may request a review by the Board of Education. The request shall be submitted in writing through the Superintendent of Schools who shall attach all related papers and forward the request to the Board of Education. The Board, or, a committee thereof, shall review the grievance and shall, at the option of the Board, hold a hearing with the teacher. The Board shall render a decision in writing within thirty (30) calendar days of receipt of the grievance by the Board.
   b. In the event of a grievance by a non-tenure teacher which arises by his not being reemployed, the Board shall hold a grievance meeting with the non-tenure teacher if such teacher requests it.

7. If the decision of the Board does not resolve the grievance to the satisfaction of the Association and the Association wishes review by a third party, they shall so notify the Board through the superintendent within ten (10) school days of receipt of the Board's decision, except in the case of grievance involving any of the following points:
   a. Any matter for which a method of review is prescribed by law or any rule or regulation of the State Commissioner of Education or any matter which according to law is either beyond the scope of the Board authority or limited to action by the Board alone.
   b. A complaint of a non-tenure teacher which arises by reason of his not being re-employed.
   c. A complaint by any certificated personnel occasioned by appointment to or lack of appointment to, retention in or lack of retention in any position for which tenure is either not possible or not required.

8. a. The following procedure will be used to secure the services of an arbitrator:
      1. A joint request will be made to the American Arbitration Association to submit a roster of persons qualified to function as an arbitrator in the dispute in question.

2. If the parties are unable to determine a mutually satisfactory arbitrator from the submitted list, they will request the American Arbitration Association to submit a second roster of names.
3. If the parties are unable to determine, within ten (10) school days of the initial request for arbitration, a mutually satisfactory arbitrator from the second submitted list, the American Arbitration Association may be requested by either party to designate an arbitrator.

b. The arbitrator shall limit himself to the issues submitted to him and shall consider nothing else. He can add nothing to, nor subtract anything from the Agreement between the parties or any policy of the Board of Education. The decision of the arbitrator shall be final and binding upon both parties. Only the Board and the aggrieved and his representatives shall be given copies of the arbitrator's award. This shall be accomplished within thirty (30) days of the completion of the arbitration proceedings.

c. Rights of teachers to representation:
1. Any aggrieved person may be represented at all stages of the grievance procedure by himself or, at his option, by a representative selected or approved by the Association.
2. When a teacher is not represented by the Association in the processing of a grievance, the Association shall at the time of submission of the grievance to the superintendent or any later level, be notified that the grievance is in process, have the right to be present and present its position in writing at all hearing sessions held concerning the grievance and shall receive a copy of all decisions rendered. A copy of the principal's written decision made in response to a written grievance shall be given to the Association immediately.
3. The Board and the Association shall assure the individual freedom from restraint, interference, coercion, discrimination or reprisal in presenting his appeal with respect to his personal grievances.

d. The parties shall be responsible for all costs incurred by each and only the fee and expenses, if any, of the arbitrator shall be shared by each party paying one-half.

Madison School District, Madison, Wisconsin

Article II, Section B—Grievance Procedure

1. The Board of Education and Madison Teachers each recognize the legal right of any individual employee or any minority group of employees at any time to present a grievance to their employer in person or through representatives of their own choosing and the corresponding legal duty of the employer to confer with them in relation thereto, providing that Madison Teachers has been afforded the opportunity to be presented in conferences concerning grievances other than with the employer's immediate supervisor and that any adjustment resulting from such conferences is not inconsistent with the conditions of employment established in Agreements then in effect between the parties to this Agreement. Without limiting the preceding legal right and duty, the parties to this Agreement agree as follows:

a. Definition—A "Grievance" is defined to be a dispute concerning the interpretation or application of any of the terms of any written Agreement establishing salaries, hours, or other conditions of employment for the employees of the Board of Education for whom Madison Teachers is the negotiating representative. Aggrieved parties may be Madison Teachers or the Board of Education or any such employees.

b. Procedural Steps for Madison Teachers and Employees—Grievances to be presented by Madison Teachers shall commence at Step 2. The term "school day" used herein shall mean weekdays during the summer months.
1. An aggrieved party shall attempt to resolve the grievance by oral discussion with the principal or principals or supervisor or supervisors of such aggrieved party.
2. To the extent grievances are not settled, they shall be reduced to writing by the aggrieved party who shall deliver a copy of such writing to the principal or supervisor involved, the President, the chairman of the Professional Rights and Responsibilities Committee, the Executive Secretary of Madison Teachers and the Superintendent of Madison Schools. Meetings for discussing the grievances shall be held at mutually acceptable times and places; however, such meetings shall be held within five (5) school days after receipt of the written grievances by the Superintendent. Representatives of Madison Teachers and the Superintendent and/or his designated representatives shall attend such meetings. The Superintendent shall give his answer in writing within ten (10) school days after the final meeting to the President and Executive Secretary of Madison Teachers and to the aggrieved party.

3. If the grievances are not resolved in Step 2, then Madison Teachers, and only Madison Teachers, may present grievances in writing to the Board of Education within ten (10) school days after the receipt of the Superintendent's answer. The Board of Education shall at its next regular meeting or the following regular meeting determine whether it shall consider the grievances, it shall give written notice of the fact to the Executive Secretary and the President of Madison Teachers within five (5) school days after this meeting. If the Board of Education decides to consider the grievances it shall do so at its next following regular meeting, or at a special meeting called for that purpose. The Board of Education shall submit its answer in writing to the President and to the Executive Secretary of Madison Teachers within five (5) school days after such meeting.
4. If the Baord of Education declines to consider the grievances, Madison Teachers may call for arbitration hereunder within five (5) school days after receipt of the notice.
5. If the Board of Education considers the grievance then to the extent grievances remain unresolved after review by the Board of Education, a call for compulsory, final and binding arbitration may be made by Madison Teachers within five (5) school days after the receipt of Madison Teachers of the Board of Education's answer. The arbitration panel shall consist of three arbitrators—one appointed by the Board of Education, one by Madison Teachers, and the third by agreement of the other two. The party calling for arbitration shall submit the name of their arbitrator with the call. Within five (5) school days after one of the parties to this Agreement gives to the other written notice and the name and address of its appointee, such other party shall appoint its arbitrator and give written notice to the first party of the name and address of its appointee. Should the two (2) arbitrators be unable to agree on the third arbitrator within five (5) school days after the appointment of the last of the two (2), either party may request the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission to submit a panel of five (5) arbitrators from which the parties shall alternately strike names until one (1) name shall remain. The aggrieved party shall strike first. Each party shall be responsible for any costs which might arise from the employment of its own appointee, and the two parties agree to share equally the costs arising from the employment of the third agreed upon arbitrator and all other costs of the arbitration proceedings. The neutral arbitrator shall be selected within five (5) school days after receiving suggestions from the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission. The neutral or agreed upon arbitrator shall act as the chairman of the arbitration panel. Proceedings of the arbitration panel shall be final and binding on all parties except as forbidden by law.

c. Procedure for the Board of Education—If the Board of Education is the aggrieved party the Board of Education shall submit its grievances in writing to the President and Executive Secretary of Madison Teachers. Madison Teachers shall give its answer in writing to the Board of Education within fifteen (15) school days after receipt. If the grievances remain unresolved, the Board of Education may call for arbitration in the manner provided herein, except that the Board of Education in calling for arbitration shall not be limited by any time limit expressed, nor by acts related to such time limits.
d. Employment Complaint—An "Employment Complaint" is a complaint founded upon some incident of the employment relation not covered by any Agreement between the parties to this Agreement but which involves a question of salaries, hours or other conditions of employment. Such complaints shall be processed through Step 2 only of the above grievance procedure upon presentation by an aggrieved party.

CALIFORNIA

DEDUCTIONS FOR ABSENCES BASED UPON SCHOOL YEAR RATHER THAN INSTRUCTIONAL DAYS

In construing a portion of the California Education Code relative to deductions from the salaries of teachers who serve "less than a full school year," the California Court of Appeal, First District, ruled that the Richmond Unified School District erred in failing to apply that formula to deductions made from the salaries of striking teachers. Finding no legislative intent to restrict the application of that portion of the Education Code only to authorized absences, the appeals court reversed a trial court's judgment and remanded the matter for compliance with the code.

During September 1966, appellants and other teachers went on strike for approximately a week. The district subsequently deducted from their paychecks an amount equal to 1/179 of their annual salaries for each day they were on strike. This ratio was based upon the fact that the Richmond schools were in actual session for 179 days of the 1966-67 school year. However, appellants argued that the deduction formula used by the district and upheld by the trial court violated Sec. 13520 of the Education Code which states:

> A person in a position requiring certification qualifications who serves less than a full school year shall receive as salary only an amount that bears the same ratio to the established annual salary for the position as the time he serves bears to the annual school term. For the purpose of this section, the school term as it applies to each certificated employee shall include each day the schools of the district are in session, each school holiday as defined in Sections 5201 to 5210, inclusive, and Sections 5713, 5901, and 6362 of this code, each day of teachers' institute and any other day when the employee is required by the governing board to be present at the schools of the district or to perform services for the district, and the employee shall be deemed to have served the district on each of said days unless he fails to perform the duties required of him for the day and is not entitled to leave of absence from such duties with pay. This section shall not be so construed as to prevent the payment of compensation to a person while on leave of absence when the payment of the compensation is authorized by law.

According to the court's interpretation of sec. 13520, the school term "would include week ends for school holidays, as well as the actual days on which teaching took place." As such, the 1966-67 school year consisted of a 282-day period, rather than merely the 179 days on which teachers actually performed their duties. As to whether sec. 13520 applies to unauthorized absences, the court held that the statute "makes no distinction between authorized and unauthorized absences. Its general language . . . indicates that both are included. Appellants served 'less than a full school year.' " Finding no indication of legislative intent to make the statute applicable only to authorized absences, the court concluded that "any inequities that might result from adding to the plain words of the statute are a proper subject for legislative improvement rather than judicial interference." (Jack McNickels, et al. v. Richmond Unified School District, California Court of Appeal, First District, Division Three, October 15, 1970.)

PARTIES' PAST CONDUCT DEFINES SCOPE OF NEGOTIATION WHERE CONTRACT LANGUAGE IS AMBIGUOUS

The Wayne County Circuit Court upheld the legality of an agreement negotiated by the Richmond Association of Classroom Teachers and the Richmond Community Schools in the absence of a state bargaining statute, but declined enjoining the district from requiring signed individual teacher contracts prior to the completion of 1970 negotiation. Finding that ambiguous contract language not unreasonably delayed negotiation, the court held that past practice must delineate the scope of bargaining and denied a motion for a preliminary injunction against the required return of individual contracts because "the evidence provides no means by which the court could extend the contract deadline to any time prior to the opening of school and be assured that fact finding [the contractually specified means of impasse resolution] would be completed."

In initially affirming the legality of the 1967 Richmond contract, the court pointed out that "recent developments elsewhere in the law would indicate that such agreements have been recognized and upheld as long as they represent a reasonable means of aiding the public organization . . . in carrying out any of its responsibilities under the law, when the method for so doing is left specifically or by implication to the discretion of that organization." The court held that the agreement here did not encroach upon or constitute a delegation of the district's responsibilities, that "the culmination of the negotiating process . . . is in no way meant to be binding upon either party," and that there was "obvious recognition that the school corporation has a public responsibility regarding the staffing of schools with an adequate supply of teachers."

Negotiation in the summer of 1970 was delayed owing to the parties' disagreement over the meaning of the term "welfare provisions" as used in a portion of the then existing contract which provided:

> RCS and RACT hereby agree to negotiate in good faith with each other on matters of salaries, welfare provisions, and related economic conditions of employment. Nothing contained herein shall be construed as requiring RCS to negotiate matters of assignment, promotion, demotion, employment or dismissal, of individual teachers or administrators.

The district contended that the term applied only to economic conditions of employment, while the Association argued that the term included various noneconomic working conditions and policy matters which the parties had negotiated in past years. Determining that the language was so ambiguous as possibly to render the contract unenforceable, the court found itself "inclined to resolve the ambiguity by looking at the construction the parties have placed on the agreement by their past conduct." Since the parties had negotiated both economic and noneconomic matters in previous years, their conduct dictated a broader construction of the disputed term than the district acknowledged. However, the court pointed out that "it would appear after three years that the parties would have covered the 'welfare provisions' that were intended and that the 1969 agreement would delineate certainly the outside limits of subject matters which ought to be considered."

As to the district's demand that local teachers individually return their 1970 contracts by August 1 (while negotiation of the 1970 contract was under way), the court noted that the then effective contract established a specific negotiation schedule with the resolution of impasse by fact-finding to be completed on or before the middle of July. If the negotiation schedule were met and completed as contractually specified, the court held that the district reasonably and properly could expect to send out contracts and have them returned by certain dates. Moreover, the schedule recognizes by implication that the district "has the obligation to satisfy its responsibilities under the law in such areas as preparing a proper budget and providing an adequate school staff in sufficient time to avoid uncertainty and turmoil . . . . When the [district's] responsibilities under the law are read into this agreement and considered in its construction, this time schedule must be strictly construed and adhered to."

Although both parties contributed to the violation of the contractual time schedule for negotiation, the court ruled that "it is encumbent upon the party who desires to pursue the negotiating procedure to completion, and who ultimately complains that the agreement has not been met, to see that the schedule is maintained." The court accordingly rejected the Association's argument that since the district's refusal to bargain delayed negotiation, the Association was unable to maintain the schedule. It explained that "the delay caused by the [district's] construction of the agreement and the position which the [district] took as a result of that construction, though found to be incorrect by the Court, was not an unreasonable position in light of the ambiguity of the contract" for which the Association also was responsible. The court thereby refused to enjoin the return of individual teacher contracts, stating that > the desire for judicial elimination or extension of a contract return date at this point, with the opening of school fast approaching and under all the circumstances attending this action, carries the risk of exerted pressure by use of a time factor which violates the intent of the agreement and concerted withholding of contracts, perhaps with the mistaken notion that the court, by its action, approved such concerted action.

KENTUCKY

TEACHERS' RIGHT TO STRIKE PROSCRIBED BY LEGISLATIVE INTENT; INJUNCTION SUSTAINED

An injunction issued by the Jefferson Circuit Court against striking Jefferson County (Louisville) teachers last year was sustained by the Kentucky Court of Appeals which held that under common law and in accordance with legislative intent, public employees do not have the right to strike. While the Jefferson County Teachers Association and others who participated in the February 1970 walkout argued that the injunction violated their constitutional and statutory rights and that no irreparable injury was shown, the appeals court found that the "record contains ample proof of serious and irreparable impairment of the school system of Jefferson County" warranting an injunction.

According to the court, appellants did not dispute the general common law rule that public employees do not have the right to strike or engage in concerted work stoppages. However, "in a rather oblique manner," appellants contended that the Kentucky legislature had recognized that right in KRS 336.130, which provides in part:

> Employes may, free from restraint or coercion by the employers or their agents, associate collectively for self-organization and designate collectively representatives of their own choosing to negotiate the terms and conditions of their employment to effectively promote their own rights and general welfare. Employes, collectively and individually, may strike, engage in peaceful picketing, and assemble collectively for peaceful purposes.

Finding no statutory definition of the word "employees," the court examined legislative intent in the enactment of employer-employee relations legislation eventually resulting in the passage in question. It concluded that "the original Act . . . clearly and expressly excluded public employees from the granted right to strike. The apparently inadvertent omission of this exclusion in Chapter 336 when the statutes were revised cannot be held to have changed the legislative policy and the law. Therefore appellants cannot properly claim the legislature has granted them such right, and their principal contention must fall."

Appellants also argued that the denial of their right to strike violated due process principles, their right to equal protection of the laws under the Fourteenth Amendment, the Thirteenth Amendment, and their constitutional rights of free speech and public assembly. The court disposed of the equal protection issue by pointing out that "there is a reasonable basis for distinguishing between private and public employees, particularly in this area [of the right to strike]. Therefore, to treat them differently is not a denial of equal protection in the constitutional sense." As to the argument that the denial of appellants' right to strike violated the Thirteenth Amendment by imposing involuntary servitude upon them, the court cited several rulings indicating that "an injunction of the kind before us does not 'compel performance of personal service against the will of the employee' because he can terminate his contract if he so desires."

The court also disposed of the free speech and assembly issues by holding that > such rights are not absolute but are limited by the countervailing rights of others. The injunction enjoins appellants from "participating in a concerted work stoppage or strike by the teachers in the public schools of Jefferson County." It prohibits the commission of illegal acts, and the rights of free speech and public assembly do not license violation of law. In City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Building and Construction Trades Council . . . it is said: ". . . illegality of purpose provides a complete basis for injunctive relief against conduct which would otherwise be deemed a permissible exercise of fundamental rights. Where such illegality consists of violation of settled public policy, as well as in other cases of illegal conduct, the injured party has a right to be protected from the imminent harmful consequences of such action.

Although appellants argued that their negotiated agreements with the Jefferson County education board gave them the same bargaining rights as unions in private industry, the court found "no authority for the proposition that the right to collectively bargain gives the right to strike, particularly when the right to strike is otherwise inhibited." Finally, the court pointed out that a contract between one of the appellants and the local board "specifically provides for arbitration, and by implication this would foreclose the right to strike as a means of settling a grievance." (Jefferson County Teachers Association, et al. v. Board of Education of Jefferson County, Kentucky, Kentucky Court of Appeals, October 30, 1970.)

OREGON

SCHOOL BOARD MAY BIND ITSELF TO CONTRACT NONRENEWAL RULES MORE STRINGENT THAN LAW

An opinion of the Oregon Court of Appeals, Department 2, held that where state law governing contract renewal establishes only minimum standards, a school district "may properly bind itself to follow higher standards and can be found liable for failure to comply with those rules." In reversing and remanding the case of a teacher whose contract nonrenewal was in accordance with state law but did not conform to the rules provided in a contract between the Hermiston Association of Teachers and Umatilla County School District No. 8R, the appeals court ruled that a school board's > power to employ personnel is express; the power to remove is necessarily implied therefrom, and no express restrictions on this power have been pointed out to us nor are we able to find any in the Oregon statutes or decisions . . . . We conclude that the adoption by the school district of the rules and regulations . . . and their inclusion in plaintiff's contract is not a transgression of the express statutory rights mentioned, nor inconsistent with other statutes pertaining to the subject.

In 1964 the Association and the district reached an agreement containing various rules and regulations pertaining to grievances and teacher dismissals which then were incorporated in a three-year contract offered plaintiff. District teachers are extended three-year contracts after the satisfactory completion of three consecutive one-year contracts, and the parties' negotiated rules provided that an unsatisfactory teacher could be discharged at the conclusion of a probationary one-year contract. The rules further provided that > any decision not to renew the contract shall be based solely upon the cause or causes for non-renewal specified in the notice to employee and proved and established at the hearing. If such notification and opportunity is not timely given by the board, the employee entitled thereto should be conclusively presumed to have been re-employed by the district for the next term upon contractual terms identical with those which would have prevailed if his employment had actually been renewed by the board of education for such ensuing term.

State statute requires only that a teacher whose contract is not to be renewed be given written notice by March 15 of the year in which the contract is to terminate, and that the teacher has a right to know the reason for nonrenewal, as well as have that reason entered in district records. Plaintiff in the present matter was informed that his contract would not be renewed for the 1969-70 school year in compliance with statutory requirements but not with the negotiated rules.

Confining the issue to whether state statute establishes only minimum standards or takes precedence over any rules a school district might promulgate or agree to, the court found that a district statutorily may "establish rules for the government of the schools and pupils," as well as commit itself to rules which are not inconsistent with state laws or state education board rules. The express statutory authority granted a school district to employ personnel also implies the power to remove, but the court held that "since the statute is silent on removal, it places no express restrictions on the district board concerning removal of personnel."

Concluding that the nonrenewal procedures established by law are not a grant of power to a school board but a statement of the board's duty to its teachers, the court ruled that the Umatilla district properly adopted contract nonrenewal rules stricter than those provided by law. While reversing the trial court's decision and remanding the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion, the appeals court observed that it had not passed upon the question of due process raised on behalf of plaintiff, nor the question of compliance with the statutory provisions involved. COURT SUGGESTS IMPARTIAL ACADEMIC REVIEW IN NONRENEWAL OF NONTENURE TEACHER'S CONTRACT

The U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, reversed and remanded the case of a nontenured junior college professor who brought suit alleging violation of his rights of expression, association, and petition, as well as violation of procedural due process when the college notified him of its decision not to renew his contract for 1969-70. Finding that the district court's grant of summary judgment to the college was "inappropriate and erroneous" in light of a fifth circuit decision postdating the district court's ruling, the appeals court remanded the case on procedural grounds and for further development of the basic facts which "were in total dispute." It further commented upon plaintiff's due process contention, pointing out that > if a teacher determines to assert that such non-renewal is really a form of punishment for his exercise of constitutional rights or otherwise constitutes some actionable wrong, the teacher should notify the institution with reasonable promptness of his claim in sufficient detail to fairly enable the institution to show any error that may exist and request a hearing. Upon the receipt of this notice and request the institution should constitute a tribunal to conduct such a hearing that both possesses some academic expertise and has an apparent impartiality toward the charges. This hearing must include the right to produce witnesses and evidence and the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses produced by the opposition.

Plaintiff first was employed by Odessa Junior College in September 1965, and remained a faculty member until the end of the 1968-69 school year by virtue of a series of one-year contracts. A portion of the college's official faculty guide relating to teacher tenure provides that "Odessa College has no tenure system. The Administration of the College wishes the faculty member to feel that he has permanent tenure as long as his teaching services are satisfactory and as long as he displays a cooperative attitude toward his co-workers and his superiors, and as long as he is happy in his work." In the spring of 1969, the college issued an 11-page press release recounting the difficulties of its relationship with plaintiff, and on May 19, plaintiff was informed that the board of regents had voted not to renew his contract for 1969-70. Sixteen days later he filed an action with the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas and contemporaneously requested that college authorities give him a hearing (which had not been granted at the time of the appeals court ruling).

Plaintiff's apparent competency had been recognized by his appointment as co-chairman of the social science department with an increase in pay; after circulating lengthy letters to department members, however, he was dropped as co-chairman in the fall of 1968, although there was no corresponding reduction in pay. Then in February 1969, plaintiff was elected president of the Texas Junior College Teachers Association, an organization which had administration approval. He accepted the office without consulting any Odessa College officials and thereupon requested student clerical help, a reduction in teaching load, and time off to visit other junior colleges; former faculty members who had held the same post had not made such requests.

Plaintiff additionally became involved with The Committee to Elevate Odessa College which sought to gain four-year status for the college in opposition to the regents' official policies. Despite administration refusals on at least four occasions, plaintiff absented himself from his duties to testify before state legislature committees on a bill dealing with academic freedom and tenure. All of these incidents were documented in the press release which preceded plaintiff's official notice of nonrenewal.

In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that the regents' nonrenewal decision was in retaliation for his expressions of opinion, that he was a competent teacher, that he had not been offered an impartial hearing regarding the nonrenewal decision, that the action taken against him had a chilling effect upon other faculty members, and that his professional reputation and standing had been damaged. He sought compensatory and punitive damages and attorneys fees, a declaratory judgment "adjudicating that the Regents' action violated his constitutional rights and that he was entitled to a hearing," and a mandatory injunction requiring his reinstatement for the 1969-70 school year at the same level of responsibility and function as previously held. All defendants moved for summary judgment which the U.S. district court granted in concluding:

> I. Plaintiff has no cause of action against the Defendants since his contract of employment terminated May 31, 1969, and Odessa Junior College has not adopted the tenure system ["which fact was known to the plaintiff at the time he entered into his original contract with the college"].
> II. Plaintiff has no contract with the Defendant college.
>
> III. Plaintiff has no right which would require Defendants to execute a contract with Plaintiff, or to employ Plaintiff.
> IV. Defendants have not violated any constitutional rights of the plaintiff.

Shortly after the district court's summary judgment was appealed, the federal appeals court decided Pred v. Bd. of Public Instruction which classified "the rights of persons circumstanced such as plaintiff as constitutional rather than contractual." Applying Pred to the instant matter, the appeals court held that it "invalidates the basic legal premise of the Court's summary judgment" and cited a portion of that decision:

> Equally unpersuasive is the related argument that since there is no constitutional right to public employment, school officials only allowed these teachers' contracts to expire, and thus they cannot be liable for a violation of any rights protected by §1983. But in the posture of this case this misconceives the whole thrust of their claim. The right sought to be vindicated is not a contractual one, nor could it be since no right to reemployment existed. What is at stake is the vindication of constitutional rights—the right not to be punished by the State or to suffer retaliation at its hand because a public employee persists in the exercise of First Amendment rights.

The federal court of appeals explained further that the controlling effect of Pred was not lessened by the present circumstances wherein plaintiff > requested permission to be absent from his teaching duties to exercise constitutional rights . . . such permission was refused and . . . he deliberately disobeyed administrative directions. The inquiry still comes back to be whether the college refused to renew the teaching contract on an impermissible basis—as a reprisal for the exercise of constitutionally protected rights. We reject the sophistry which would recognize that the college could not withhold renewal of [plaintiff's] contract because of his association with the Committee to Elevate Odessa College or because of his exercise of a reasonable right to petition the legislature by attending committee hearings but, at the same time, recognize a right in the college administration to direct him not to exercise these rights then refuse to renew his contract for disobedience of their orders.

In finding the prior disposition on summary judgment "totally inappropriate in the case at bar," the federal appeals court pointed out that "the truth of [plaintiff's] constitutional position was far from clear. The basic facts, as well as the material inferences to be drawn therefrom, were in total dispute." It accordingly remanded the case on procedural grounds and indicated that a determination must be made "as to whether the teacher involved has tenure or an expectancy of reemployment under the policies and practices of the institution." It further commented that if the trial court should conclude that plaintiff > did have an expectancy of reemployment, then the applicable notice and hearing standards are now established in [Ferguson v. Thomas]. On the other hand, if the court resolves that [plaintiff] did not have an expectancy of reemployment which would require the college to show cause for the decision not to renew his contract [some doubts about which were raised in the court's mind due to the uncertainty of the college's tenure statement], a different procedure would be indicated. In such a situation, upon receipt of notice that a new contract will not be offered, the teacher must bear the burden both of initiating the proceedings and of proving that a wrong has been done by the collegiate action in not rehiring him. It is incumbent upon such a teacher, not the college, to shoulder these responsibilities because the college may base its decision not to reemploy a teacher without tenure or a contractual expectancy of reemployment upon any reason or upon no reason at all.

REINSTATEMENT OF TEACHERS ORDERED WHERE TERMINATION IS BASED UPON UNION MEMBERSHIP

Nine teachers employed by the Hanover school system whose contracts were terminated in April 1970 were ordered reinstated by the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana in concluding that "but for plaintiffs' association with the union, their contracts would have been renewed. By discharging the nine teachers for exercising that freedom of association guaranteed by the Constitution, the defendants have violated the civil rights of these plaintiffs." The court additionally reached the "strong inference" that the local high-school principal was hired "not for the primary purpose of being the administrative head of the school, but rather for the purpose of destroying the teachers union."

The Hanover Township Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1945, was organized during the 1968-69 school year and conducted two short strikes at the end of that year and the beginning of the following school year. Then in April 1970 seven probationary high school teachers, one tenured high-school teacher, and a probationary elementary teacher were notified that their contracts would not be renewed for the 1970-71 school year. All of the teachers were union members and among them were the union leaders, a number of negotiating committee members, and some of the union's most active members generally.

Following their termination, the teachers brought suit against the school board and others under two Civil Rights Acts [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C.A. § 1343(3) and (4)] alleging infringement of their First Amendment rights of association. The court dismissed additional allegations that the school board breached its duty to negotiate with the union, and that the nonrenewal of plaintiffs' contracts failed to comply with procedural due process requirements. While initially noting that "a school board has a great degree of discretion in making determinations as to the hiring and firing of its teachers," the court cited Roth v. Board of Regents of State Colleges (NRD, 9-70, 6) to the effect that "the employment of a teacher in a public school cannot be terminated because he has exercised that freedom secured to him by the Constitution of the United States . . . . This substantive constitutional protection is unaffected by the presence or absence of tenure under state law." The court stated further that the issue here is not whether the plaintiffs have a constitutional right to be teachers or to receive payment for extracurricular activities. The question is whether the termination of the plaintiffs' contracts for teaching and extracurricular activities deprived the plaintiffs of the freedom of association guaranteed them by the Constitution. It is the opinion of the Court that the actions of the defendants were motivated by a desire to retaliate against members of the union, and that, in terminating the contracts of the plaintiffs, the defendants deprived them of their constitutional rights in violation of 42 U.S.C.A. §1983 and 18 U.S.C.A. §1343.

According to the court, most of the teachers had several years' teaching experience, had been praised and/or honored upon numerous occasions, and their competency had been demonstrated; in fact, prior to September 1969, there were no complaints in any of plaintiffs' files. While defendants presented various reasons for firing plaintiffs, the court found that the unimportance of most of the items is demonstrated by the fact that [the superintendent] had never, and [the high-school principal] only rarely, discussed any of these matters with the teachers themselves. The evidence showed that when problems had been discussed with the teachers, in most instances the matters were corrected . . . . [T]he Court is convinced that those reasons are merely illusory and intended to cover up the real motives for the termination of the teachers. The activities of both [the high-school principal and the superintendent] indicate that their intention to have the union teachers discharged was formed prior to the incidents upon which the school board supposedly relied.

During the trial, the superintendent admitted that he collected notes in his personal files on the union teachers who later were terminated, even though he had never collected such notes on any other teachers since his appointment. The high-school principal (newly hired effective August 1, 1969) took home the files of 13 high-school teachers within two months after the beginning of the 1969-70 school year, although there was no evidence at that time that the teachers warranted such special attention. All 13 were union members and eight of those were teachers whose contracts were terminated the following April. The court additionally found that during the past few years, only three teachers were terminated, all of whom were asked to resign by the superintendent; no such request was made of plaintiffs here.

Due to these actions and various discrepancies in the testimony and other actions of the high-school principal and the Hanover superintendent, the court determined that > immediately after taking his position, [the high-school principal] began a clandestine operation to accumulate information on a select group of union members, even though there was nothing in the files to indicate that these teachers might be incompetent. The failure of [the principal and the superintendent] to discuss any problems with the teachers is further evidence of their goal of fabricating a basis for discharge. The efforts of the administration to stifle the union movement and then cover up their actions was never more clear than in the testimony of [the principal which was] . . . at times evasive, at times fatuous, and often both.

Reaching the "inevitable conclusion that the plaintiffs' teaching contracts were terminated in retribution for their union activities," the court nevertheless warned that it did not wish "to leave the impression that a person involved in union activities is somehow immune from having his teaching or extracurricular activities terminated. Certainly, a school board has the authority to release any teacher who engages in activities which prove to be seriously detrimental to his classroom work, even where those activities are on behalf of a union or other association."

In so finding, the court ruled that plaintiffs' contracts unlawfully were terminated and ordered the Hanover board to offer plaintiffs contracts for the 1970-71 school year "on terms and conditions no less favorable than in their contracts for the 1969-70 school year, including responsibilities for extracurricular activities." The court also enjoined defendants from discriminating against union members in violation of their First Amendment right of association. (Hanover Township Federation of Teachers, et al. v. Hanover Community School Corporation, et al., U.S. District Court, Northern District of Indiana, August 14, 1970.)

TENURE SECTION OF NEW YORK EDUCATION LAW RULED CONSTITUTIONAL BY FEDERAL COURT PANEL

A three-judge panel of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York dismissed a probationary teacher's constitutional challenge to a portion of the New York Education Law and allegations that he was denied tenure after becoming contract negotiator for the Jericho Teachers Association. Although a single judge previously decided that plaintiff's allegations raised "substantial federal questions" (NRD, 6-70, 7), the three-judge panel found the language of the New York law valid and enforceable, and concluded that plaintiff's denial of tenure "was caused by a desire on the part of . . . the school superintendent, to eliminate from the school system a nettlesome individual who created annoying administrative problems."

Plaintiff, a probationary humanities teacher first employed by UFSD No. 15 in the fall of 1964, was denied tenure in the spring of 1967 despite the fact that "'all reports and evaluation of the plaintiff by his superiors, including the defendant [superintendent], consistently rated the plaintiff as superior in virtually every aspect of his performance.'" The denial of tenure allegedly occurred after the superintendent became aware of plaintiff's position as Association negotiator. In seeking to compel the local school board to recommend him for tenure, plaintiff asked that sec. 3012(a) of the New York Education Law be declared unconstitutional, arguing that it deprived him of his constitutional rights of free speech, free assembly, and due process, and that it provides no standards to be applied by a superintendent in refusing to recommend a teacher for tenure. The challenged paragraph reads:

> At the expiration of the probationary term of a person appointed for such term, subject to the conditions of this section the superintendent of schools shall make a written report to the board of education recommending for appointment on tenure those persons who have been found competent, efficient and satisfactory. Such persons, and all others employed in the teaching, examining or supervising service of the schools of such union free school district, who have served the probationary period as provided in this section, shall hold their respective positions during good behavior and efficient and competent service, and shall not be removed except for any of the following causes: (a) insubordination, immoral character or conduct unbecoming a teacher; (b) inefficiency, incompetency, physical or mental disability, or neglect of duty. Each person who is not to be recommended for appointment on tenure, shall be so notified by the superintendent of schools in writing not later than sixty days immediately preceding the expiration of his probationary period.

In a lengthy, heavily cited opinion the single judge raised questions of academic freedom, the "chilling effect" doctrine, public employees' constitutionally protected rights, and the determination of standards by which teachers are granted or denied tenure. The three-judge panel here, however, dismissed plaintiff's challenge to sec. 3012(a) in finding that "the 'competent, efficient and satisfactory' language of the section refers to definite criteria enforceable in New York courts through an Article 78 proceeding [and] the requirements of the federal and state constitutions are read into the provision." In addition, the panel held that > plaintiff was not denied tenure because of the exercise of any of his constitutional or statutory rights. Although he was a devoted, highly skilled, and imaginative teacher, he had difficulties in developing new programs and in carrying out school policies because of substantial and continuing disagreements with administrators and supervisors . . . . Nothing the plaintiff said or did in connection with labor negotiations on behalf of the Jericho Teachers Association contributed to [the superintendent's] decision. The superintendent was entitled, under section 3012(a), to decline to recommend tenure during a teacher's probationary period in order to reduce the possibility of dissension with administrators and supervisory personnel. Since plaintiff was not denied tenure as a punishment for statements or actions in connection with his union activities . . . the second cause of action must be dismissed.

Board Findings and Rulings

ILLINOIS

TRANSFER CLAUSE VIOLATED WHERE MALE WAS HIRED INSTEAD OF MORE QUALIFIED FEMALE

An arbitrator determined that a female teacher who had applied for an elementary physical education position but was turned down in favor of a male teacher actually was more qualified for the position than the male and should be transferred to the position at mid-term. While "convinced" that Community Unit School District 205 "had no intention to violate the existing agreement on sex discrimination" with the Galesburg Education Association, the arbitrator held that the district's refusal to place grievant in the position constituted a violation of the agreement's transfer clause. He also pointed to and discussed "a trend to make of the elementary school physical education classes too much of a male image."

When a physical education teaching job opened at Gale Middle School, the local board hired the male applicant on grounds that "it was educationally sound to have more of a male image at the elementary school." The board further maintained that at such a late date (August 1970) it would be difficult to find a replacement for grievant's junior high-school teaching position. The resultant grievance charged sex discrimination in violation of the parties' agreement and also claimed violation of a contract clause providing that "during the summer vacancies . . . shall be filled on the basis of experience, competency, and qualifications of the applicant and length of service in the district, and other relevant matters."

The arbitrator initially discussed sex discrimination and recent rulings of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, stating that > many prominent educators have spoken and written to the effect that elementary schools presented too much of the female image and that more male elementary teachers were needed at such level. It has been stressed that the boys in school needed more of the male image and that indeed girls too could benefit.

>
> We have, however, in recent times seen arbitrators, administrative bodies and courts construing prohibitions against sex discrimination very strictly. Particularly significant is the ruling of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in August, 1969 . . . that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 overrides state laws that purport to protect women against certain hours of work, time of day of work, lifting of certain weights and other matters. In essence the commission decided that the state laws designed to protect females were no longer relevant in a society that is attempting to put all its citizens on an equal footing in all aspects of life . . . . As an arbitrator I can simply express the opinion that I will not ignore the philosophy of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission when it comes to discussing what constitutes sex discrimination.

In response to the district's "male image" argument, the arbitrator ruled:

> I am not willing to uphold the board on its claim of wanting to improve the male image at Gale Middle School. When I look at the facts introduced I see too much of a male image in physical education at the elementary levels in the Galesburg system. I feel that elementary children may not benefit from such top heavy male image in physical education. An elementary school could very well desire to improve the male image, but I am not going to approve any plan which could connote that the improvement could be done mostly through the route of physical education.

The arbitrator also pointed out that grievant had more teaching experience than the male who was hired, and that she had "more to offer for a position of teaching in the middle school than does the man . . . . She had specific training in such areas as dance for children, gymnastics, camping, badminton and bowling games for elementary children, and archery. The training of the male who was hired was more in the area of track, football and basketball." Finding that "there was honesty and sincerity on the part of the board and its employees and the grievant presently has a position which she is perfectly capable of handling," the arbitrator held that "an award should be fashioned which will not produce any results which might not be in the interests of students by bringing disruption in mid term." He accordingly ordered that > if a physical education position is open to which [the male teacher] can be transferred at the semester the transfer is to be made at that time, and [grievant] is to be given the position she applied for at the Gale School provided a replacement can be hired for her . . . . If the transfer is not made at the semester, [grievant] is to be transferred to teach physical education in the Gale Middle School for the beginning of the academic year 1971-72.

MICHIGAN

ELECTION DIRECTED WHERE NEW UNIT CREATED BY MERGER OF TWO SCHOOL SYSTEMS NOT ACCRETIVE

When the Southgate Community School District annexed the neighboring Heintzen Public School District, the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) found that the situation involved "the formation of one unit from the merger of two former bargaining units," instead of an expanding unit situation. Moreover, the MERC held that "the bargaining unit of the annexing district has been so substantially changed that it can no longer be considered the same bargaining unit so as to be governed by the contract bar provisions" of the state's bargaining statute. The MERC accordingly directed that an election be held to determine whether the Southgate Education Association (representative of the former Southgate teachers) or the Southgate Federation of Teachers (which represented former Heintzen teachers as the Heintzen Federation of Teachers) would represent teaching employees of the merged district.

Constituents of the Heintzen district, which operated seven schools and employed about 150 teachers, voted on May 4, 1970, to merge with the Southgate district, operator of eight schools and employer of approximately 210 classroom teachers. Effective that date, the Heintzen district became incorporated into the Southgate district, although former Heintzen teachers continued to be paid according to the terms of a contract between the Heintzen Federation of Teachers and the former Heintzen district which was entered into on April 10, 1970. Former Southgate teachers, on the other hand, were represented by the Association under a contract ending June 30, 1970; negotiation of a successor contract culminated in a May 2, 1970, settlement which was ratified and entered into by the Association and the Southgate district on May 4, the day of the Heintzen annexation vote.

The present action was initiated by the Southgate Federation of Teachers on May 25, 1970, when it petitioned for an election among all certificated teaching personnel of the Southgate district, including employees of the annexed Heintzen district. The Federation claimed that due to the merger, a question of representation was raised and that the normal rules of contract bar were inapplicable. The Association, however, contended that the petition was barred because it was filed during the 90-day insulation period prior to the June 30 expiration date of its contract with the Southgate district. Moreover, the Association argued that the merger did not create such a change in the bargaining unit as to justify finding the normal contract bar rules inapplicable.

Finding that the annexation involved the formation of one bargaining unit from the merger of two former units, rather than a situation of accretion as the two employee organizations contended, the MERC cited the reasoning of the National Labor Relations Board in National Carloading Corp. as applicable to the accretion arguments:

> Also important is the fact that we are here confronted with legitimate management action merging categories of employees historically represented by different labor organizations into a single operation in which these employees will work side by side, in similar job classifications and performing like functions. It is also plain that neither group of affected employees is sufficiently predominant to remove any real question as to the overall choice of a representative. In these circumstances, statutory policies will not be effectuated if, through application of ordinary principles of accretion, a bargaining agent is imposed on either segment of the newly integrated operation. Rather, it is our opinion that influences disruptive to industrial peace and a harmonious bargaining relationship will be eliminated only if the conflicting representation claims are resolved through the processes of a Board-conducted election.

The MERC concluded that an election necessarily should be ordered because, while the former Southgate district employed approximately 60 more teachers than the former Heintzen district, "neither group of employees in our opinion is [too] predominant as to remove any real question as to the overall choice of a bargaining representative." As to the Association's contract bar argument, the MERC pointed out that > the fact that the new contract between the [Association] and the [Southgate district] anticipated in certain provisions the proposed merger of the two school districts cannot serve to extend representative status to the [Association] after the merger . . . . Thus, to hold the new contract executed by the [Southgate district] and the [Association] during the insulated period bars an election herein would mean that the Federation would not be accorded an opportunity to test the representation of the employees of the merged districts until the expiration of the new contract, which result we find to be repugnant to the policy and purposes of [the bargaining statute]. To find a contract bar in such circumstances would, in effect, prevent the employees of the annexed district, who had no voice in the contract alleged as bar, from exercising a meaningful choice as to who should be their collective bargaining representative for a period up to three years, and would thwart rather than further the objective of labor peace which the election provisions of [the bargaining statute] attempt to promote.

The Association won the October 1970 representation election when it received 181 votes to the Federation's 170 votes. Three votes were cast for neither organization. TEACHING FELLOWS UNIT REPRESENTATION DISPUTE REMANDED FOR LACK OF SUFFICIENT RECORD

Representation proceedings "must be supported by 'competent, material and substantial' evidence" for which the party seeking a favorable ruling ultimately is responsible, according to the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC). In considering a petition by the University of Michigan Teaching Fellows Union for an election in a unit of teaching fellows, the MERC held that a record comprised only of a petition and a stipulation as to the existence of a particular job classification constitutes insufficient evidence for determining the appropriateness of the unit sought and directing an election. However, under the circumstances of the case and the "first impression" nature of the procedural issue raised, the MERC remanded the matter to the trial examiner for further hearing, instead of dismissing the union's petition.

In seeking an election among teaching fellows at the university's Ann Arbor and Dearborn campuses, the union presented "a very limited case" by asking that the original petition be received as an exhibit and obtaining the university's "agreement to a stipulation to the existence of a teaching class at the University entitled 'teaching fellows.'" The university, however, took the position that persons in this job classification are students rather than employees within the meaning of the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA), disputed the appropriateness of the unit, and argued that the union had placed no evidence in the record establishing the appropriateness of its unit. In addition, the university argued that the union's case was so inadequate as to provide no basis for requiring a university response; it accordingly moved that the petition be dismissed.

The union asserted that it had met any evidentiary burden placed upon it and that the record supported the direction of an election because it contained no evidence in opposition to the petition. According to the MERC, the union > argued that it need merely show a "recognizable" unit and that it has done so by eliciting the stipulation that a classification of teaching fellows exists. It is then the obligation of the objecting party to respond and prove that the unit is not appropriate. The [union] appears to concede that it does have a burden of going forward but it maintains that it has satisfied that burden by the evidence it has put in . . . . The [union] would have the Employer support its objections by evidence. The [union] argues that it does not have to show that other classifications are not in the unit, but, rather, the Employer "has the burden of coming forward to show that the petition does not lie." Absent this, there is no occasion for the taking of evidence until the Employer raises an issue.

In response, the university argued that the union had the minimal obligation of establishing the fact that there was a community of interest sufficient to warrant the unit finding sought in its petition. "Only after that has been established does the Employer come under the burden, if it objects to the unit, of going forward with evidence rebutting the [union's] evidence. Merely offering the petition and identifying the classification does not meet the burden required of the [union]," according to the university.

Examining the "basic elements of procedure in a representation case," the MERC pointed out that the premise fundamental to proceedings under the PERA is that "representation proceedings are investigatory and not contested or adversary proceedings." However, "it is clear" in representation cases that "the ultimate product of the hearing must be a record upon which the Commission may properly act." The MERC explained that > the minimum amount of evidence which the petitioner must place in the record is sufficient evidence that, if nothing further were added, the record would support the finding sought by the petitioner. In this sense there is a burden or obligation upon the Petitioner to go forward with the evidence to the point that, absent contradictory evidence, a finding could be made in favor of the Petitioner . . . . If the Petitioner neglects to place in the record facts supporting the appropriateness of the unit and the Employer chooses not to supply further evidence, then the sum total of record evidence may not support the petition and it must fall.

The MERC concluded that it is the petitioner's responsibility initially to define and establish the existence of an appropriate unit, explaining that > the fact that the petition seeks a unit limited to certain classifications, by its own terms puts the Commission on notice that other classifications exist. If other classifications exist, then the appropriate unit must be defined and appropriateness shown. Even if no objection is raised by the opposite party, in the absence of a specific stipulation, any position asserted is subject to our appraisal . . . . [The union] avers that the petition, together with the stipulation that the classification named therein exists, is sufficient evidence. We do not so find. The petition is only an initiatory document and is not dispositive of the issue of representation.

Determining that "the dispute appears to have arisen out of good faith actions by the parties," the MERC remanded the action for further hearing because "the record contains insufficient evidence to support a finding that the unit is appropriate." (In the Matter of University of Michigan and University of Michigan Teaching Fellows Union, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, August 10, 1970.)

NEW JERSEY

NEWARK TEACHERS RELEASED FROM NONPROFESSIONAL DUTIES FOR REMAINDER OF SCHOOL YEAR

Of four grievances submitted to arbitration and dealing with teachers' nonprofessional duties, personal leave for permanent substitute teachers, make-up time for striking teachers, and the interpretation of a contractual welfare provision, an arbitrator sustained the Newark education board in one and the Newark Teachers Union in the other three. The arbitrator's awards were final and binding according to the parties' 1970-71 negotiated grievance procedure (which expired January 31, 1971) and were rendered during negotiation of a successor contract.

In regard to the first grievance, the arbitrator found himself bound to enforce contractual provisions distinguishing between professional and nonprofessional employees, establishing functions and responsibilities common to each, and specifying that "professional employees shall be released from assignments involving non-professional duties." Determining that hall duty, playground duty, and similar activities complained of by the union "are surely not those of a professional class, and are, therefore, excluded from responsibilities of the professional teacher," the arbitrator directed that the teachers "be immediately released from all nonprofessional duties" for the remainder of the 1970-71 school year.

A claim by long-term substitute teachers that they should receive the three days of personal leave provided by the 1970-71 contract was, however, denied by the arbitrator. He found it "quite evident" that the agreement classified and treated long-term substitutes and teachers differently, thereby compelling the "inevitable conclusion" that substitutes were exempt from the contract's personal leave provisions.

During a lengthy strike conducted by the union in February 1970, a state mediator working with the parties indicated in his notes that the school board agreed to assign volunteering teachers a maximum of 10 days' make-up time so they could earn back pay lost during the strike. The board later refused to assign make-up time on grounds that such a provision was not written into the contract. The arbitrator here pointed out that memoranda and letters of understanding reached by contracting parties are included by reference in the agreement proper. Thus, the "memorandum notes of [the mediator] must be treated with the dignity and value commensurate to the importance of his participation in the negotiations," and must be considered part of the agreement "by reference." The arbitrator accordingly held that Newark teachers were entitled to 10 days' pay "or the difference between the time permitted them and the ten days provided for in the letter of understanding."

The fourth grievance submitted to arbitration arose from a dispute over Art. XIII of the parties' agreement, which provides that > the board and the union agree to research the structure and operation of a Joint Welfare Fund for the benefit of the employees in the unit to be jointly administered by the board and the union. The parties agree to negotiate concerning implementation and amount of the fund in contract negotiations scheduled to begin on or about October 1, 1970.

According to the Newark board, it never had agreed to the fund in principle, despite the mediator's memorandum to the contrary. The arbitrator, however, found that he could not support an argument "which in effect states that only the recollection of the Board of Education is accurate and that the notes of [the mediator] and the union are incorrect. The findings of [the mediator] must be regarded as accurate and truly reflect the agreements and understandings of the parties." Concluding that the provision's language "accurately reflects the agreement of the parties," the arbitrator held:

> I find that the board of education has violated [the welfare] provision in its refusal to comply with its terms.
>
> I direct the board of education to cease and desist in its refusal to research the structure and operation of the joint welfare fund and to negotiate in good faith the implementation and amount of the fund in accordance with Article XIII of the collective bargaining agreement.

RHODE ISLAND

MISUNDERSTANDING OF SCHOOL BOARD NEGOTIATOR'S ACTIVITY NOT AN UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

A decision of the Rhode Island State Labor Relations Board (SLRB) held that the North Providence School Committee did not commit an unfair labor practice by failing to implement a proposed contract clause dealing with the detention duties of high-school teachers. As a "misunderstanding" arose over the legal effect of a

"Work Agreement" signed by the school committee's chairman, the SLRB ruled that the school committee had not "intentionally committed an act which would make them guilty of an unfair labor practice." In so ruling, the SLRB merely ordered the school committee to implement all of the terms of the agreement signed by it and representatives of the North Providence Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 920.

During contract negotiation, the detention duty clause was initialed by both parties' bargaining representatives. Then when a document designated the "Work Agreement of the Parties" and containing the clause was drawn up on September 17, 1969, it was signed by the president of Local 920 and the chairman of the school committee; although all school committee members (except one) and many members of the union's negotiating committee were present at this session, no one else signed the document.

In October 1969, a dispute arose as to whether the detention duty clause was included in the contract, and the union entered an unfair labor practice charge with the SLRB. During a hearing, the school committee chairman testified that he had not intended to bind the committee when he signed the work agreement, and that he thought the entire committee had to sign the final agreement before it was official. Committee members also testified that they believed "that any proposals initialed or approved by the committee's negotiator must be resubmitted to them for final approval before it was official."

Concluding that a misunderstanding had arisen, the SLRB explained that > the Committee thought that any final agreement would have to have their ultimate approval and that [its negotiator] had to bring all proposals back to them. The teachers thought [the school committee's negotiator] could bind the Committee by initialing proposals and also that the Chairman of the Committee could bind it by signing the Work Agreement. The Board feels that all the evidence presented shows that the Committee entered into a legally, enforceable agreement at least on September 17 when its Chairman signed the Work Agreement. Because of the misunderstanding over the legal effect of this action, however, . . . the Board finds that the Respondents are not guilty of an unfair labor practice but does order them to implement all of the terms of the agreement signed on September 17, 1969.

ILLINOIS

STATE ANTI-INJUNCTION STATUTE RULED APPLICABLE TO COUNTY NURSING HOME EMPLOYEES

While vacating a permanent injunction issued by a circuit court against striking and picketing nonsupervisory employees of a county nursing home, the Illinois Supreme Court nevertheless held that the employees' violation of the injunction's "prohibitions and restraints warranted punishment for contempt." Citing Peters v. South Chicago Community Hospital in which the Illinois anti-injunction act was ruled applicable to employees of a nonprofit hospital, the court determined that the act similarly was applicable here; consequently, the preliminary injunction erroneously was issued. However, the court emphasized that an injunction "must be obeyed . . . until it is reversed for error by orderly review . . . . Disobedience of such an injunction is contempt of the lawful authority of the court and punishable as such." The state supreme court accordingly affirmed various fines and jail sentences levied by the circuit court against certain employees of the Peoria County Bel-Wood Nursing Home for contempt.

MASSACHUSETTS

MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEE BARGAINING STATUTE AMENDED TO ALLOW NEGOTIATION OF AGENCY SHOP CLAUSES

An amendment to sec. 178L of the Massachusetts Municipal Employee Relations Act provides that nothing shall prohibit a municipal employer from requiring payment of an agency service fee as a condition of employment if such a clause is contained in a negotiated agreement. Enacted by H.B. 4658, L. 1970, the amendment became effective September 22, 1970, and reads:

and (6) nothing in this chapter shall prevent a municipal employer, which has duly accepted section seventeen G of chapter one hundred and eighty, from requiring, as a condition of employment, during the life of a collective bargaining agreement so providing, the payment on or after the thirtieth day following the beginning of such employment or the effective date of such agreement, whichever is later, of an agency service fee to the employee organization whichever, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, is duly recognized by the employer or designated by the state labor relations commission as the exclusive bargaining agent for the unit in which such employee is employed; provided, however, that such agency service fee shall not be imposed unless the collective bargaining agreement requiring its payment as a condition of employment has been formally executed, pursuant to a vote of a majority of all employees in such bargaining unit present and voting. Such agency service fee shall be proportionately commensurate with the cost of collective bargaining and contract administration.

Three other amendments to the act modified portions of the statute relative to a school board's designation of its bargaining representative, the costs adhering in arbitration proceedings, and the force of collective agreements in the face of police and fire regulations. Specifically, S.B. 1225, L. 1969, deleted a portion of sec. 178I of the act which had provided that a "school committee shall not designate an attorney as its [bargaining] representative unless it is so authorized by vote of the city council, in the case of a city, or of the town meeting, in the case of a town."

Sec. 178K of the act was amended by Ch. 445, L. 1970, to provide that the cost for the use of arbitration tribunals other than the state board of conciliation and arbitration "shall be divided equally between the municipal employer and the employee organization." This amendment became effective September 14, 1970.

The fourth amendment, effective August 18, 1970, altered sec. 178I of the act to provide that if any provision of a negotiated municipal employment agreement conflicts with any law, ordinance, or bylaw, such law, ordinance or bylaw shall prevail "over any regulation made by a chief of police pursuant to section ninety-seven A of chapter forty-one or by the chief or other head of a fire department under the provisions of chapter forty-eight."

NEBRASKA

STATE LABOR TRIBUNAL POWERLESS TO INTERVENE IN CONSENT ELECTIONS ABSENT AN INDUSTRIAL DISPUTE

The Nebraska Court of Industrial Relations dismissed a motion seeking its authorization of election notice and ballot forms and its appointment of an election supervisor in finding that, in the absence of a dispute between the parties to an election, it has "no duty, power, or authority to do anything until it is informed of [the] results of an election." In examining portions of the state's public employee bargaining law (which is separate from the teachers' bargaining law) and interpreting a state supreme court decision, the court voiced its "conviction that the legislative system of leaving balloting procedure to the imagination and convenience of the parties by agreement rather than straitjacketing every single case into a uniform rule should be given a chance to work."

Prior to enactment of the statute, the Nebraska Supreme Court held in IBEW v. City of Hastings that > in the absence of express statutory authority . . . the Court of Industrial Relations has no power to compel . . . government . . . to bargain or negotiate with a labor union . . . and [no] power to require the parties, by "communication" in good faith, to eliminate or define their controversies . . . . However desirable . . . a court encouraged voluntary settlement might seem in effectuating the policies of the statutes, the statutory grant of power does not extend to the order here.

In the instant matter the court noted that its jurisdiction statutorily may be invoked when any industrial dispute exists between certain public employee parties, and that it is granted authority to engage in five specifically defined actions and/or services. Moreover, a portion of sec. 48-816 of the statute, as amended, provides:

> Before an industrial dispute with respect to representation is recognized as such, the parties may mutually agree to a secret ballot procedure to determine questions of representation for purposes of collective bargaining, for and on behalf of employees. The Court of Industrial Relations shall be immediately informed of the results, and the Court shall inform the parties that the employees have designated a bargaining agent, and so shall certify the proper bargaining agent.

Finding that "here there is no allegation of controversy . . . and no industrial dispute of which the court has jurisdiction," the court determined that the actions urged by the parties > do not come within any of the five numbered grants of authority . . . extended [by statute] to the court . . . . It seems to us that under the [statute] the court has no duty, power, or authority to do anything until it is informed of results of an election. The [employer's] argument as we construe it is that the setting by the court of formal rules of election and ballot procedures will be helpful to governmental units and employees thereof in this and future cases thus avoiding the arising of an industrial dispute or controversy. It seems to us that the legislature quite reasonably might have provided such authority to make state-wide rules which the parties could easily follow, but that the legislature did not do so, preferring to leave each and every detail of the balloting "procedure" free for resolution by mutual agreement of the parties, so that such procedures could vary from place to place and time to time as the parties would mutually agree was most expedient and convenient for them. Only when a detail could not be agreed upon would a controversy or industrial dispute arise.

Commenting "by way of dictum or any extrajudicial duty we may have . . . to effectuate the public policy," the labor court found "no plain error" in the election notice and ballot forms involved, and no reason why a court member in his private capacity could not be engaged by the parties as an election supervisor.

NEW JERSEY

NEW DIRECTOR APPOINTED TO PERC

Maurice J. Nelligan, Jr. was appointed executive director of the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC), replacing Louis Aronin, who resigned December 16 to move to a position with the Civil Service Commission. Nelligan previously served as a National Labor Relations Board attorney in Baltimore, Md., and Newark, N.J., and acted as deputy executive director of the PERC during the past year. John J. Harper, former New Jersey State Nurses' Association counsel, replaced Nelligan as deputy executive director.

OHIO

LOWER COURT'S INVALIDATION OF MUNICIPAL AGENCY SHOP CLAUSE AFFIRMED

The Montgomery County Appeals Court upheld a decision of the county common pleas court (NRD, 6-70, 4) which ruled that an agency shop clause contained in an agreement between the city of Dayton and the Dayton Public Service Union, Local 101, "is in direct conflict with the general law of this State and . . . does not accomplish a governmental, public or municipal purpose as distinguished from private, and, in consequence thereof, is ultra vires and invalid." The appeals court likewise found itself bound by judicial precedent in the case of Hagerman v. City of Dayton wherein the Ohio Supreme Court concluded that a city ordinance providing for the check-off of city employees' union dues was a local police regulation conflicting with state statutes, and that check-off constituted an improper delegation of power and served no municipal purpose.

The agency shop clause in question provided that bargaining unit members not paying regular monthly dues to the union should pay a monthly service charge in an amount equal to union dues. Failure to do so would result in the employee's suspension for a minimum of one day for each month he failed to make the payment. When plaintiff and some 95 other nonunion city employees neither authorized the deductions nor intended to do so, the union asked the city to institute disciplinary measures.

The lower court action was brought by plaintiff as an individual, a taxpayer, and a representative of a class of persons similarly situated. That court permanently enjoined the city and the union from effectuating the agency shop clause, deducting any agency shop fees without an employee's express written authorization, and taking any disciplinary action against employees who did not voluntarily authorize such deductions. It cited a portion of the Hagerman ruling stating that "we must be realistic and take judicial notice of what is generally known, that the check-off is a means of maintaining membership . . . . The check-off is contrary to the spirit and purpose of the Civil Service Laws of the State."

On appeal, the city and the union argued that the city's action in adopting a rule for disciplining an employee who failed to pay a monthly service charge to a union as required by an agreement was a proper exercise of its constitutional powers of local self-government. The appeals court found the argument "cogent" and additionally noted that a city's civil service employees "have a right to bargain collectively with the city respecting their wages, hours and conditions of their employment and have a right to designate a union to represent them in such bargaining."

However, in limiting the question to whether the agency shop portion of the city's agreement with the union was a police regulation in conflict with provisions of the Ohio Revised Code or was a valid exercise of the city's powers of local self-government, the appeals court ruled that in light of Hagerman the lower court's ruling must be sustained. In a separate concurring opinion, one judge noted "considerable merit in the appellants' argument that time has had a depreciating influence upon the holding in the Hagerman case, but under the doctrine of stare decisis, any change in existing law must emanate from the Supreme Court of Ohio." Another judge observed in a concurring opinion that Hagerman often is cited > as illustrative of a definitely conservative point of view. Vast changes have occurred and are still occurring in the social, economic and governmental structure which tend to weaken the philosophical basis of that decision . . . . Whether, in the light of present trends, without a wage assignment, the city may observe the agency shop agreement by requiring all employees to support the bargaining agent, is a question which now deserves careful review. It is no longer valid to say that these deductions support only a private, personal and selfish purpose. Satisfactory relations between government and its employees is a matter of the utmost public concern, directly conducive to the general welfare.

PENNSYLVANIA

CERTIFICATIONS UNDER RECENTLY EFFECTIVE BARGAINING STATUTE REPORTED

By late January 1971, the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board (PLRB) had certified 325 local education associations as representatives of professional bargaining units upon the joint request of the parties involved and according to provisions of the state's Public Employee Relations Act (NRD, 10-70, 13, 30) which became effective October 21, 1970.

According to a Pennsylvania State Education Association (PSEA) tally, PSEA locals have won 15 elections, lost one, won a plurality in one election, tied one, and won all eight "no organization" elections. Of the 10 elections against the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), AFL-CIO, PSEA locals won seven; two run-off elections with AFT locals are to be held soon, according to the PSEA report.

An investigation of 26 unit certifications indicated that 15 involved a unit of classroom teachers, nurses, librarians, and counselors; of these, nine units included various other job classifications. Five more certifications involved units of classroom teachers, nurses, counselors, and other classifications, while the remaining six units comprised various combinations of the job classifications named. As such, teachers were included in all 26 units analyzed, although only full-time teaching personnel under regular contract were to be represented in two units, and part-time personnel were included in one unit. Schools nurses were to be represented in 25 of the 26 units, school librarians were included in 18 of the units, and school counselors were allowed unit representation in 23 instances.

Various other job classifications which gained unit representation included home and school visitors (seven units), dental hygienists (six units), school psychologists (three units), and audio-visual directors (three units). In one instance, department heads and head teachers were included in the teacher bargaining unit, while another unit included attendance personnel.

BLS REPORTS RISE IN WHITE COLLAR UNEMPLOYMENT RATES

A report on December 1970 unemployment rates released by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), revealed that the unemployment rate for white-collar workers rose to 3.7 percent that month from 3.5 percent in November. The number of unemployed white-collar workers was 1,213,000 in December, nearly double the number reported a year ago. Unemployment rates for professional and technical workers rose to 3.0 percent in December from 2.4 percent the previous month, while the rate for clerical employees fell from 5.2 percent to 5.1 percent in December.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, the unemployment rate for all job classifications in December reached a nine-year high of 6.0 percent with the number of unemployed persons at 4.6 million.

The annual unemployment rate for white-collar workers in 1970 rose to 2.8 percent from 2.1 percent in 1969; the rate for professional and technical workers was reported as 2.0 percent in comparison with a 1.3 percent figure in 1969. For clerical workers, the annual unemployment rate rose from 3.0 percent in 1969 to 4.0 percent in 1970.

BLS noted that white-collar unemployment rates, particularly those for professional and clerical workers, registered a pronounced rise during the last quarter of 1970 after remaining unchanged between the second and third quarters.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, DECEMBER 1970; NEW BASE FOR STATISTICAL INDEXES ANNOUNCED

Data released by the Labor Department Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure for December 1970 rose 0.5 percent above the previous month to 138.5 (1957-59=100). The December figure put the CPI 5.5 percent above a year ago, as compared to a 6.1 percent increase registered in the 12 months ending in December 1969.

BLS attributed a large part of the December rise to 0.3 percent advances in the prices of food purchased for home consumption and the prices of nonfood commodities. New car prices rose 1.4 percent that month, and gasoline prices rose again after a November decline. In addition, an 0.6 percent rise in consumer services charges (particularly household services prices) was reported in December, and the costs of medical care services continued to rise significantly. According to BLS, an estimated 107,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based upon the December CPI; and 68,000 workers will receive pay increases based upon the change in the index since December 1969.

Effective with the release of monthly data for January 1971, a new base reference period—1967=100—will be used for calculating all BLS statistical indexes. For the past nine years, the reference period base used for all federal government indexes has been 1957-59=100. BLS emphasized that only statistical series expressed as indexes will be affected by the change in base, and that the rebasing of an index does not alter percentage changes between index figures over time except for rounding differences.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES RECEIVE 6 PERCENT PAY INCREASE

Salary increases averaging nearly 6 percent and costing the government an estimated $1 billion this year were granted some 1.3 million federal employees with the January 8, 1971, enactment of the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970. Members of the uniformed services will, under existing law, receive raises matching those in the General Schedule as adjusted by the act, and such increases are expected to add another $1 billion to the cost of the act this year.

While attempting to bring more order and regularity into the determination of federal pay by establishing a system of regular, semi-automatic adjustments, the act retains a 1962 Congressional policy declaration that federal salaries be comparable to private wage rates for the same or similar jobs. Comparability is measured by the annual survey of white-collar salaries conducted by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS).

When the machinery of the act becomes fully operative in 1972, the President, with the assistance of an agent of his choosing and two new committees, will make comparability adjustments indicated by the BLS survey in October of each year. No Congressional action will be required unless the President determines that conditions affecting the general welfare require preparation of an alternative to the comparability adjustment system; in this event, Congress must approve or disapprove the President's alternative plan.

HEAVY BARGAINING TO CONTINUE IN 1971

The Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), reported that collective bargaining during 1971 will continue to be heavy as some 10 million workers are covered by major agreements which either expire or contain wage reopeners, or provide for deferred wage increases this year. BLS stated that the average package increase—wage hikes plus deferred benefit improvements—will be 8.3 percent this year in agreements covering 5,000 or more workers; the comparable figure for 1970 was 5.6 percent.

Contracts providing for deferred wage increases this year affect 5.2 million workers, and BLS reported that such increases will average 38.1 cents per hour or 7.8 percent of straight-time earnings. In 1970, the comparable figure was 5.6 percent. An estimated 2.5 million workers will benefit from normal cost-of-living escalator reviews, compared to 1.4 million workers in 1970.

Statistics

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: TEACHER PERFORMANCE OF NONINSTRUCTIONAL SERVICE DUTIES

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 negotiated classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 416 (42.5 percent) with provisions concerning teacher performance of noninstructional service duties. Of the 416 provisions, 21 established joint committees to study the need for noninstructional service duties and/or the personnel who should perform these duties. The remaining 395 provisions contained specific content relative to the performance of duties which generally can be categorized as the supervision of students and student extracurricular activities, the collection and tabulation of money, administrative and clerical tasks, and miscellaneous assignments.

A majority (52.4 percent) of the 395 pertinent provisions designated both the duties teachers would be required to perform, and those they would not be required to perform. Of the remaining provisions, 42.8 percent indicated only those duties teachers were not required to perform, while 4.8 percent listed only the duties teachers were required to perform.

Table 1 indicates the general content of the 416 provisions analyzed. Succeeding tables present a detailed analysis of the four major content areas and compare the number of agreements requiring or not requiring teacher performance of a specific duty. The categories listed in the tables are not mutually exclusive, and the analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements; no attempt is made to cross-reference the analyzed provisions with other negotiated content which indirectly may affect the performance of noninstructional service duties. In addition, peripheral and/or unrelated subject matter has been deleted from some sample provisions reprinted here.

TABLE 1.—GENERAL NEGOTIATED CONTENT OF 416 PROVISIONS PERTAINING TO TEACHER PERFORMANCE OF NONINSTRUCTIONAL SERVICE DUTIES, 1968-69

General content	Agreements containing designated content
	Number	Percent
1	2	3
TOTAL NUMBER OF PROVISIONS	416	...
PROVISIONS ESTABLISHING JOINT COMMITTEES	21	...
PROVISIONS CONTAINING SPECIFIC NEGOTIATED CONTENT	395	100.0%
Teachers required to perform noninstructional service duties	19	4.8
Teachers not required to perform noninstructional service duties	169	42.8
Teachers required to perform some noninstructional service duties and not others	207	52.4

Many of the provisions analyzed were prefaced with a statement of teacher-board philosophy recognizing that a teacher's primary responsibility is teaching and that the various noninstructional duties diminish the amount of time and energy a teacher can devote to instruction. As such, 126 (31.9 percent) of the 395 pertinent provisions provided for teacher aides and/or secretarial, clerical, and data processing assistance; of these, 23 provisions indicated that paraprofessionals or mechanical aids would assist teachers with noninstructional duties, and 103 provided aid to relieve teachers of all responsibility for such duties. Forty-three agreements provided that when teachers were required to perform non-instructional service duties, these duties were assigned on a rotating or other equitable basis. Twelve of the provisions which did not require teacher performance of noninstructional tasks stated that in cases of emergencies, inclement weather, or other unusual circumstances, teachers would be expected to perform the tasks. Sample provisions are:

A. The Board and the Association acknowledge that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energies should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. Therefore, the Board agrees to make every effort to reduce the following non-teaching duties through the use of teacher aides and part-time clerical assistants:

1. Non-teaching assignments including supervision of building and grounds, cafeterias, and study halls.
2. Duplicating instructional and other materials and calculating attendance records.
3. Issuing return slips.
4. Collecting money from students for non-educational purposes. (Phoenix, Arizona)

* * *

When a teacher assumes a position in the Old Lyme School System it should be understood that his duties and responsibilities are not limited to just those involved in classroom teaching. A teacher has special responsibilities within the school or school system. These include supervision of students in the cafeteria; on the playground and in the school building; membership on committees such as curriculum development; chaperoning of social activities and trips; and any others deemed necessary by the administration. The administrative staff is charged with assigning those responsibilities equitably.

The Board and the Association further agree that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energy should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. The Board and the Association recognize that teacher aides and part-time clerical and non-teaching employees are useful and necessary in order to implement this principle. (Old Lyme, Connecticut)

* * *

A. The Committee and the Association acknowledge that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energies should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. Therefore, they agree that every effort will be made to insure that, in the shortest possible time, teachers will not be required to perform the following duties:

1. Non-professional assignments, including but not limited to milk distribution and supervision of play-grounds, cafeterias, corridors, sidewalks and busses.
2. Health services, such as administering eye or ear examinations and weighing and measuring pupils.
3. Collecting money from students for non-educational purposes. Although teachers may be required to collect and transmit money to be used for educational purposes, they will not be required to tabulate or account for such money, nor shall they be held responsible for the loss of any such money.
4. Delivering books and other materials to classrooms, duplication of instructional and other materials, keeping registers and cumulative record cards, preparing report cards and other similar clerical functions.

* * *

C. A Study Committee composed of three (3) members appointed by the Association and three (3) members appointed by the School Committee will be established within at least thirty (30) days of the date on which this Contract becomes effective to determine the most effective ways of utilizing teacher aides, and the recommendations will be submitted to the Superintendent of Schools for transmission to the Committee. Said Study Committee will submit a progress report not later than sixty (60) days after the committee is established. (Greenfield, Massachusetts)

* * *

A. The Board and the Association recognize that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energy should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. The Board and the Association recognize that teacher aides and school aides are useful and necessary in order to implement this principle. Therefore, the parties agree to establish the following programs as of February 1, 1967 and to fully implement tham as soon as practicable thereafter:

1. A teacher aide program funded under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 providing for at least 214 teacher aides to work in designated schools six (6) hours per day to assist teachers and relieve them of such duties as supervision of cafeterias, play-grounds, halls, sidewalks and buses; attendance, typing, record keeping and similar clerical duties; preparation, duplication and mimeographing of instructional materials; distribution and inventorying of books and library assistance; collecting and tabulating money; and preparing and showing audio-visual materials.
2. A school aide program providing for at least 115 school aides to work three (3) hours per day in schools not covered by the program described in paragraph 1, to relieve teachers of such duties as supervision of cafeterias, playgrounds, halls, sidewalks and buses; attendance, typing, record keeping and similar clerical duties; preparation, duplication and mimeographing of instructional materials; distribution and inventorying of books and library assistance; collecting and tabulating money; and preparing and showing audio-visual materials.

B. Negotiations over expansion of the programs described in Section A, shall not take place until the negotiations under Article II commencing in December 1968 for the 1969-1970 school year. (Newark, New Jersey)

Supervision of Students and Extracurricular Activities

The category of noninstructional duties most often mentioned was supervision of pupils during the regular school day, either on school property or in transit to and from school. Table 2 lists the duties according to the area of supervision and indicates that while teachers were required to perform such tasks in 98 provisions, they were relieved of responsibility in 122 provisions. Moreover, these were the duties for which aides most often were hired. Teachers tended to be required to perform supervisory duties necessitating the exercise of professional discretion or involving activities which took the place of regularly scheduled classes. Outdoor duties and indoor cafeteria duties most often were not required of teachers.

Table 2 also indicates that teachers were required to perform duties related to student extracurricular activities in 64 provisions, but were relieved of such responsibilities or allowed voluntary participation in 21 provisions. The duties most often mentioned were supervision, chaperoning, and sponsorship of student activities; the only task which teachers most often were not required to perform was collecting tickets. Sample provisions relative to teacher performance of noninstructional supervisory duties are reprinted following the table.

B. Teachers are expected to assume the responsibility for the sponsorship of at least one extra-curricular activity. Such assignment should be within the teacher's field of interest to the extent possible. First year teachers may be exempt from extra curricular assignments by the recommendation of the Campus Committee. Student demand and interest in the activity, teacher interest, experience or skill in the activity, and the contribution the activity makes to the school program are factors to be reconciled by the Campus Committee and Professional Council in reviewing the record of extra-curricular program and teacher assignment for 1969-70. (Phoenix, Arizona)

D. Teacher participation in extra curricular activities will be strictly voluntary and teachers will be compensated for all such participation in accordance with the provisions of Appendix "A" of this Agreement. (Greenfield, Massachusetts)

* * *

1. Teachers will be expected to perform pupil supervisory tasks as assigned on an equitable basis by the Principal or Director.
2. Teachers will be expected to act as advisors to a class and to sponsor some worthwhile club activity.
3. It is also expected that all teachers will support student activities by frequent appearance at musical programs, plays, sports events, open house, etc. (Wrentham, Massachusetts)

* * *

Section 3: Teachers shall not be assigned, with or without extra compensation, to tasks which are essentially non-professional, specifically:

a. Selling and taking tickets at athletic events;
b. "Crowd handling" at athletic events;
c. Chaperoning and/or driving buses to athletic events;

f. Chaperoning student activities of a predominantly social nature.

Section 4: Nothing in this agreement shall prevent teachers from voluntarily performing such tasks as set forth in Section 3 above outside regular school hours at compensation satisfactory to them. A volunteer list for performance of duties is to be circulated by the building principal at the beginning of the school year. (Battle Creek, Michigan)

* * *

4. The Board and the Association recognize a teacher's duties as professional duties which cannot be confined to a fixed number of hours per day or per week. The teachers' responsibilities to their students and their profession entail the performance of duties and the expenditure of a reasonable amount of time beyond regular classroom duty hours and the teachers will continue to . . . assist in student extracurricular activities, supervise student functions, and perform similar assignments which are a part of this basic professional responsibility. (Pontiac, Michigan)

Collection and Tabulation of Money

The second most frequently mentioned category of duties involved the collection and tabulation of various monies. Such duties were required in 50 provisions and not required in 79 provisions, as indicated in Table 3. With the exception of charities, all of the collections mentioned were for school related programs. Although the provisions most often relieved teachers of monetary responsibilities, there was no clear tendency to abolish certain duties and retain others. However, when provision language distinguished between collecting and tabulating money for "educational" and "noneducational" purposes, the tendency was to require teacher participation for educational purposes and not require it for noneducational purposes.

Administrative and Clerical Duties

Teachers generally were not required to perform administrative and clerical duties which did not require professional judgment and which could be performed outside the classroom. Of the 78 provisions relieving teachers of various clerical tasks, 20 provided for the hiring of secretarial and clerical aides, four stated that standardized tests would be machine scored, and three provided for the computerization of records. Forty-four provisions required teacher performance of clerical tasks, but some provided assistance in the form of secretarial and clerical aides (four provisions), the computerization of records (one provision), and the machine scoring of standardized tests (one provision). As indicated in Table 4, teachers more often were not required to perform each type of clerical duty than they were required to perform them, except in the areas of attendance taking and marking report cards. In those instances, however, teachers usually were required to make the initial tabulation or evaluation, but often were relieved of keeping cumulative records.

Of the provisions pertaining to administrative assignments, one stated that under unusual conditions teachers could be asked to assume a principal's duties for one day only. Four of the six provisions which did not require teacher performance of administrative duties defined the duties only in general terms, while the remaining two provisions identified the duties as office assistance. Examples of provisions dealing with teacher performance of various administrative, clerical, and instructional materials duties are reprinted following Table 4.

d. The school committee recognizes the fact that the keeping of attendance registers and the making of monthly, semi-annual, and annual attendance reports is an administrative responsibility rather than a responsibility of a classroom teacher, and agrees as soon as possible within the school year 1968-1969 to remove this from the classrom teacher; however, teachers are responsible to report absences, tardiness, and dismissals to the properly designated authority. (Beverly, Massachusetts)

A. The Committee and the Association agree that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energy should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. The Committee and the Association recognize that teacher-aides and part-time clerical employees and others are useful and necessary in order to implement this principle. Therefore, to the extent that funds are available for the employment of teacher-aides and part-time clerical employees, the parties agree to the following priority objectives:

2. Teachers shall be relieved of distribution and inventorying of books and supplies except in their own classrooms, preparing and sending form letters to parents and other similar clerical functions, which do not require the exercise of professional judgment.

7. Teachers shall be relieved of duplicating instructional and other materials, keeping registers and cumulative record cards, preparing report cards and other similar functions. (North Reading, Massachusetts)

* * *

2(a). The Committee agrees to employ fifteen (15) teacher aides for three (3) hours each day beginning with the 1967-68 school year in order to relieve teachers, to the extent possible, from performing non-teaching administrative and clerical tasks.

(b). A joint School Committee-Association Study Committee will be established as soon as practicable to determine the most effective method of utilizing said aides. (Pittsfield, Massachusetts)

* * *

N. The Board and the Association agree that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach, and that his energies should be utilized to this end. The Board and the Association recognize that there are certain non-teaching and clerical responsibilities in relation to the orderly conduct of his classroom which are a part of the school program and which the teacher must perform; however, the teacher shall not perform the following: money collecting; book inventories; correction and recording of standardized tests; transferring of grades; end of period attendance totals on CA-10's and mailing of report cards, except that teachers shall collect for pictures, weekly news magazines, and book clubs and shall correct end of basal reading book tests. Non-machine scorable tests shall be scored by persons qualified by virtue of teacher training and experience, other than regularly assigned employees of the district and paid at a reasonable rate. (North Dearborn Heights, Michigan)

* * *

Pupil attendance record keeping will be done by aides or by machines with the exception of taking roll call and reporting attendance. (Philmont, New York)

* * *

A. The Board and the Association agree to study the problem of pupil attendance record keeping, with the objective or relieving each teacher of as much of the clerical responsibility as is consistent with adequate attendance and census administration. This study will also investigate the possibilities of automating the record keeping, especially the register. (Syracuse, New York)

* * *

No teacher shall be asked to assume the duties of acting principal in the absence of an appointed principal for more than one day unless a qualified replacement has been assigned to relieve the teacher. (Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

Miscellaneous Duties

Table 5 identifies miscellaneous noninstructional service duties which teachers generally were not required to perform. However, 38 provisions required teacher attendance at meetings such as parent-teacher conferences, general faculty meetings, open houses, PTA meetings, and departmental, civic, and professional meetings and conferences. Of the five provisions stating that teacher attendance was not required, three referred to attendance at PTA meetings, one specified attendance at civic meetings, and two did not define the type of meeting involved. All 116 provisions mentioning the transportation of students specifically stated that this was not required of teachers; 49 provisions stated such in general terms, 63 provisions relieved teachers of driving buses, and one provision specified that teachers were not required to transport students in their personal automobiles. Sample provisions are reprinted following Table 5.

B. Teachers will not be required to drive pupils to activities which take place away from the school building. Teachers may do so voluntarily, however, with the advance approval of their principal or immediate supervisor. In such event, the teacher will be relieved of all personal liability for any accident which may occur in connection with said trip. When transportation is necessary, it shall be by public carrier or Town-owned vehicle. (Greenfield, Massachusetts)

3. Health services, such as administering eye or ear examinations and weighing and measuring pupils will be performed by appropriate professional personnel.

4. Teachers will not be required to drive pupils to activities which will take place away from school buildings. Teachers may do so voluntarily, however, in authorized vehicles and with the advanced approval of their principal or immediate supervisor. In no event will the School Committee be responsible for the unauthorized driving of pupils. (North Reading, Massachusetts)

* * *

J. Under no conditions shall a teacher be permitted to drive a school bus as part of his regular assignment, unless in extreme emergency such as a tornado or nuclear attack. (Petersburg, Massachusetts)

* * *

Section 1. The Committee and the Association acknowledge that a teacher's primary responsibility is to teach and that his energies should, to the extent possible, be utilized to this end. Therefore, the Committee agrees to employ sufficient teacher aides within the limitation of budget by the opening of school in September, 1967, so that teachers will not be required to perform the following duties:

1. Non-instructional assignments, including but not limited to milk distribution, supervision of cafeterias, buses, lavatories, except for minimum teacher aide supervision necessary for the health and safety of the students.

2. Health services, such as administering eye or ear examinations and weighing and measuring pupils except where directly related to area of teaching.

3. Collecting money from students.

4. When done on a school wide basis, delivery of books to classrooms, preparing text book inventories, duplicating instructional and other materials. However, in direct classroom work, the teachers will still retain responsibility for books assigned to that particular class. Any materials to be duplicated that develop as the teacher's personal requirements dealing with that teacher's class room will continue to be the responsibility of the teacher, and can be made part of their preparation period.

5. Scoring of tests where machine scoring is feasible.

Section 2. Teachers will not drive pupils to activities which take place away from the school building. (Bristol, Rhode Island)

RISE IN AVERAGE ANNUAL SALARIES OF PATROLMEN AND FIREFIGHTERS REPORTED

A study conducted by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the average annual salaries of police patrolmen and firefighters rose approximately 9 percent during the year ending in January 1970. Minimum salary scales for patrolmen averaged $8,477 in January 1970, a 9.1 percent increase above the previous year; maximum salary scales averaged $10,040, an 8.9 percent rise. For firefighters, the minimum and maximum average annual salary scales of $8,076 and $9,508 constituted advances of 8.7 percent and 8.8 percent respectively above the figures recorded in January 1969. The BLS study covered cities with populations of 100,000 or more and found that while minimum and maximum annual salaries for both groups were highest in cities with populations of more than 999,999, the greatest percentage increases in salaries from January 1969 occurred in cities with populations ranging from 250,000 to 499,999.

Regional statistics revealed that in January 1970, the highest annual minimum and maximum salaries for police patrolmen and firefighters were paid by Western states, while the lowest salary scales were found in the South. Minimum annual salary scales for firefighters and patrolmen in the West were $8,854 and $8,987, while comparable figures in the South were $6,737 and $7,029. Maximum scales for firefighters and patrolmen averaged $10,381 and $10,626 in the West, as compared to averages of $8,200 and $8,602 in the South.

The greatest percentage gains in minimum scales over the year for both groups occurred in the North Central region where average annual salaries increased 10.9 percent to $8,577 for patrolmen and 10.0 percent to $8,218 for firefighters. The largest percentage advance over the year in maximum pay for patrolmen (10.2 percent to $10,457) also occurred in the North Central region, while the largest gain for firefighters (9.6 percent) was recorded in the West.

Table 1 presents the average annual minimum and maximum salary scales for police patrolmen and firefighters by city size and region for the period 1965 to 1970.

TEACHER IN-SERVICE TRAINING PROGRAM

This program presents an opportunity to involve classroom teachers in the development of the curriculum and in the methods for its implementation. It also provides a channel through which they can encourage those programs and procedures they find practical and workable, and gives them an avenue to present ideas and methods they find are successful in their own classes.

Another consideration involves continuity and quality. Duluth's participation in E.S. '70 provides a link with other school districts that can aid us in developing the kind of quality education we all desire. The E.S. '70 project also has stated goals which offer positive direction for a professional staff development program described in this paper. It is important that those charged with the operation of the program do not use the shot gun technique and send the training program off in many different directions.

This in-service training program will be divided into three general areas:

1. Workshops for special interest areas.
2. Publications by members of the staff.
3. Independent study by members of the staff.

The program will be structured in the following manner:

I. Standing Committee.

A. A Standing Committee of teachers and administrators will be formed for the purpose of establishing the program, reviewing the budgets, and evaluating the progress of the program.

B. The Standing Committee will consist of seven permanent members and three ex-officio members. Prior to October 1 of each year four teachers shall be appointed by the teachers' council. One of these will be designated as Teacher Coordinator by the Superintendent. The Teacher Coordinator will chair all meetings of the Standing Committee and will also be responsible for directing that portion of the in-service training program concerned with teacher trainers.

The Administration will be represented on the Committee by the (1) Assistant Superintendent for Instruction, (2) the Assistant Superintendent for Special Services, (3) a Director of Elementary, Secondary, Vocational or Special Education, depending on what area of instruction is being considered.

The ex-officio members would be:

1. The person requesting the (a) program, (b) independent study, (c) publication.
2. Director of Personnel for Duluth Public Schools.
3. Director of Development.

C. The duties of the Standing Committee will be as follows:

1. Make an over-all assessment of where Duluth stands now in terms of staff training in order to make a determination of where the biggest needs lie, and to formulate a general objective for the direction of the program.
2. Establish operational rules and exact time schedules.
3. Develop forms for applications to the program. Forms will include the following:
   a. Objectives of the program.
   b. Program description.
   c. Time required for program.
   d. Estimated cost or proposed budget of program.
   e. Certification of completion for teachers involved.
   f. Method of follow-up upon completion.
   g. Area for committee's approval of program.
   h. Area for Superintendent's final approval.
4. Select staff for operation of on-going in-service program.
5. Aid in providing resources and consultants for programs.
6. Monitor programs and provide evaluation of their worth.
7. Perform periodic review of total program in order to establish and re-direct goals.
8. Notify staff of time and nature of workshops and opportunities for credit.

NOTE: Five of the seven voting members must approve any proposed program before submitting it to the Superintendent.

II. Determination of Credits (All credits granted will also be credited to Professional Growth.)

A. On-going and Special Area In-Service Workshops.

1. Ten hours of school sponsored in-service classroom training = 1 credit for salary purposes.
2. Maximum individual workshop credit = 6 credits per year.
3. All participants must achieve at least 90% of attendance to qualify for credit.
4. All workshops must have 15 participants in order to function and should not exceed 30.
5. No partial credits will be granted.
6. All participation will be voluntary and notices will be distributed to all staff members.

B. Publications—Subject to review by Standing Committee.

1. At the time of application for credit for publication, applicant will give a description of objectives, estimate the time involved and number of credits requested.
2. Credits will be granted upon completion of the publication and approval of the Committee if the final product meets the intent of the original application.
3. Maximum credit for individual publication = 3 credits per year.

C. Independent Study—Same procedure as used for publications.

III. Other Considerations.

A. Maximum credits to be granted for school year 1970-1971 = 2,250.

1. In-service workshops = 1,350
2. Publications = 450
3. Independent Study = 450

B. Number of credits granted to individual teachers.

1. Maximum number per teacher per year = 6.
2. Total maximum number per teacher for salary schedule purposes = 15.
3. Restrictions—M.A. degree must be received or held to move beyond the M.A. equivalent lane.

C. All credits must be earned prior to September 1 to receive salary credit for coming year.

D. All certified employees of the school district may apply for or request in-service training.

IV. Budget for fiscal year 1970-1971:

1 Teacher Coordinator
12 Instructors—Fall in-service
Winter, spring, summer institutes
Consultants and resource persons
Supplies and equipment
Total $14,500.00

V. Control of Funds.

A. The determination of the funds to be allocated to the teacher training program will be made by the School Board. The Committee will be authorized to make all expenditures within each budget classification.

B. The Committee shall maintain minutes of its meetings with all approved programs and expenditures fully noted in the minutes.

C. All requests for materials and equipment will follow the Board's established purchasing and payment procedures even though the priorities for purchase may be established by this Committee within its budget funds. (Duluth, Minnesota)

Insurance: Three health insurance plan options with board contributing 66 percent plus $40 toward annual cost of individual coverage, and 50 percent plus $45 toward cost of dependent coverage; board-paid $7,000 life insurance policy for all teachers, although the individual teacher may purchase additional insurance up to the amount of his salary rounded off to the nearest $1,000; dental insurance plan with maximum dental benefit of $1,000 and maximum orthodontic benefit of $500 in any policy year (see following provision reprint); board provides liability insurance whereby all teachers shall be protected from financial loss owing to accidental bodily injury occuring within the scope of employment.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; no-strike clause; liaison committee composed of the superintendent, the assistant superintendents, 2 principals, the Association president, and 7 teachers designated by the Association president and the superintendent will meet regularly to discuss items of mutual interest.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with final and binding arbitration, except that the arbitrator's decision shall be advisory only in grievances involving 7 negotiated articles which it is the board's intent to carry out unchanged for the duration of this agreement. The pertinent articles include sabbatical leave policy, inservice education policy and procedure, class size policy, annual teacher evaluations, staff meetings, the selection of instructional materials, and policy regarding the development of curriculum and facilities; provision establishing a "teacher interest committee" at each school which shall meet with the building principal at least once a month to resolve problems affecting that school; teacher has right to review his personnel file and may be accompanied by an Association representative; duty-free lunch periods of at least 55 minutes for all elementary teachers and equal in length to one full class period for all secondary teachers; all administrative positions first will be advertised to district teachers, and district candidates will be screened before other personnel; inservice education program whereby teachers may earn one-fifth of a credit to 1 full credit per course which then may be applied toward salary advancement; provision for "priority" faculty, departmental, grade level, and Association meetings on the 4 Thursdays of each month; probationary teachers must submit evidence of a physical examination (at district expense if performed by a district-appointed physician) by September 30 of each of the first 3 years of employment; tenure teachers must submit evidence of a physical examination (at district expense if performed by a district-appointed physician) at least once every 2 years after acquiring tenure; board-paid chest X ray is required of all teachers every 2 years.

Miscellaneous: Elementary teachers "will not be required to remain in the library solely to maintain discipline or to sit by as idle spectators"; class size policy based upon current school organization and determined prior to the development of budget requirements for personnel each year with resultant maximums of 25 students in grades K-2, 30 students in grades 3-12, and 20 students in special education classes, grades 7-12.

APPENDIX 5–DENTAL INSURANCE

Schedule of Benefits –

Plan Effective Date: September 18, 1970

Employees Included: All professional employees whose bargaining unit negotiated for Dental Expense Benefits.

Contributory Dental Expense Insurance for you and your Dependents:

Maximum Dental Benefit (in any policy year) ..... up to $1,000.

Maximum Orthodontic Benefit (in any policy year) . up to $500, for orthodontic treatment and any orthodontic diagnosis and evaluation and pre-orthodontic care in connection with such treatment.

Note: This is in addition to the Maximum Dental Benefit.

Dental Deductible Amount.... a cash deductible of $25.

Note: If during a policy year three or more members of the same family incur covered dental charges in excess of $75.00 then on or after the date covered charges are incurred in excess of such $75.00, no cash deductible will be applied during such policy year to charges incurred by any member of the family, except that no one insured person may contribute more than $25.00 towards the satisfaction of such $75.00.

Dental Co-insurance Factor (after satisfying the Deductible Amount) .... up to 80%.

Policy Year ..... for the purposes of this plan, a policy year is defined as a period of time commencing on July 1 of any calendar year and ending on June 30 of the following calendar year.

When Your Insurance Begins –

Becoming Eligible

You will be eligible on the Plan Effective Date shown in the Schedule of Benefits or the date of your employment, whichever is the later date. If you are absent from work on the day on which you would normally become eligible, you will become eligible on the day you return to active work.

Becoming Insured

If you renroll for insurance on or before the day you become eligible, you will be insured on the day you become eligible. If you enroll for insurance on or before the thirty-first day following the day you become eligible, you will be insured on the day that you enroll. If you are absent from work on the day that you enroll, you will become insured on the day you return to active work. You should enroll promptly. If you enroll more than thirty-one days after the date you become eligible, you must satisfy The Equitable Life Assurance Society that you are in good health before you can become insured. In that case, you may be asked to submit a medical examination at your own expense.

When Your Dependents' Insurance Begins

Dependents Defined

If you become insured your dependents are:

1. Your wife or husband except if you are legally separated.
2. Your unmarried children under age 19.
3. Your unmarried children 19 years of age and under age 23 provided they are full-time students.

No person is a "dependent" if he is eligible for this plan as an employee.

Note: If your child is mentally retarded or physically handicapped when his insurance would terminate due to his age, insurance may be continued under the circumstances described in the Group policy. For complete information, consult your Employer within 31 days before his insurance terminates for the appropriate form to continue coverage.

Becoming Eligible

Each dependent will be eligible beginning with the later of these dates:

1. The day on which your insurance begins.
2. The date he becomes an eligible dependent.

Any dependent confined to a hospital (except for birth) when he would normally become eligible, will become eligible only upon discharge from the hospital.

Becoming Insured

If you enroll for dependents' insurance on or before the day they become eligible, they will be insured beginning with the day they become eligible. If you enroll for dependents' insurance after they become eligible but on or before the thirty-first day following the date they become eligible, they will be insured beginning with the date that you enroll them. Insurance on any dependent who is hospital confined (except for birth) when his insurance would normally begin, will begin on discharge from the hospital. Enroll promptly. If you enroll your dependents more than 31 days after their date of eligibility, they will not be insured for at least 3 months after the date you enroll them.

Dental Expense Insurance

What is Covered

Covered Dental Charges incurred while insured and in connection with non-occupational disease or defect, or expenses resulting from non-occupational accident causing injury to teeth.

Definitions

For the purposes of Dental Expense Insurance:

1. Dentist means a Doctor of Dental Surgery or a Doctor of Medical Dentistry.
2. Physician means a legally qualified physician.
3. Treatment Plan means a written report made by the dentist or physician describing the findings of his examination and recommended treatment for the insured's dental disease or defect or accident causing injury to teeth.
4. Policy Year means the period of time commencing on July 1 of any calendar year and ending on June 30 of the following calendar year.

What are Covered Dental Charges

Covered Charges are the regular and customary charge for, or the fair and reasonable value of (as determined by the Society) the following services, supplies and treatment:

1. Routine oral examinations, (including diagnosis, x-ray and prophylaxis) but not more than one examination for the same insured person in any six months period, extractions, fillings, inlays, crowns, root-canal therapy and periodontal treatment, oral surgery, drugs requiring a prescription by a dentist or physician.
2. Initial installation of, or addition to, full or partial dentures or fixed bridgework, if the impression for such dentures and bridgework is taken on or after the effective date of the insured person's coverage.
3. Replacement or alteration of full or partial dentures or fixed bridgework.
4. Repair of dentures or bridgework, or replacement of lost or stolen dentures or bridgework.
5. Orthodontic appliances and treatment.

Note: A "Treatment Plan" is necessary for orthodontic treatment and fixed bridgework and may be required in any other instance. It must be submitted within 20 days following the examination which reveals the need for treatment.

What is a Benefit Period

A Benefit Period is the period of time during which an insured person may receive benefits. It is established with respect to an insured individual when, during a policy year, he incurs Covered Dental Charges in excess of the Dental Deductible Amount shown in the Schedule of Benefits. Any expenses incurred during the last 3 months of any policy year which were applied toward the Deductible for such policy year count toward the Deductible for the following policy year.

When Does a Benefit Period Begin and End

It begins on the date on which accumulated Covered Charges exceed the Deductible. It ends on the date insurance terminates or on the june 30 of the policy year in which it begins, whichever is earlier.

Multiple Benefit Periods

When a Benefit Period ends, another may be established in any succeeding policy year by satisfying the requirements for a new Benefit Period.

How Much

Reimbursement during a Benefit Period for Covered Dental Charges in excess of the Deductible will be made at the rate (Co-insurance Factor) shown in the Schedule. The Maximum Dental Benefit payable for any one person during any policy year shall be that shown in the Schedule. The Maximum Orthodontic Benefit payable for any one person during any policy year for orthodontic treatment (including diagnosis, evaluation, and pre-care) shall be that shown in the Schedule.

If There Is An Accident

If an insured family incurs Covered Dental Charges due to an accident occurring while insured, a single cash deductible will apply to the combined Covered Dental Charges of the family for that accident during the following policy year. If during any policy year one of the family incurs Covered Dental Charges not due to the common accident, he may use toward the cash deductible of such charges any Covered Dental Charges which he incurred during the policy year and which were applied to the common accident cash deductible.

Not Covered

Covered Dental Charges shall not include expenses for services, supplies and treatment:

1. unless they were prescribed as necessary by a dentist or physician,
2. incurred in a Veterans' Administration Hospital, or which in the absence of insurance, would have been furnished without cost, or which are furnished under conditions which the insured person has no legal obligation to pay, or if the expenses are reimbursable by any local or other governmental agency,
3. incurred on account of . . . war, declared or undeclared, including armed aggression . . . received from a dental or medical department maintained by an employer, a mutual benefit association, labor union, trustee or similar type of group . . . injury or sickness connected with employment with any employer . . . performed by a member of the insured person's immediate family,
4. for installation, replacement or alteration of, or additions to, dentures or fixed bridgework except as provided in "Covered Dental Charges" . . . for dentistry for cosmetic purposes, including the alteration or extraction and replacement of sound teeth to change appearance,
5. for installation, replacement or alteration of, or additions to, dentures or fixed bridgework, or for orthodontic diagnosis and evaluation and pre-orthodontic care, if such expenses are incurred, or if expenses are incurred for a course of orthodontic treatment if such treatment commences
   - (a) for you during the first two years after the effective date of your Dental Expense Insurance, if you enroll for your own Dental Expense Insurance more than thirty-one days after you become eligible, or if you enroll again for insurance after previous termination of your Dental Expense Insurance while remaining in the eligible classes;
   - (b) for your dependent—during the first two years after the effective date of your dependent's Dental Expense Insurance, if his Dental Expense Insurance became effective more than thirty-one days after the date of his eligibility for such insurance because
     - (i) you enrolled your dependents more than thirty-one days after the later of the date you became eligible for Dental Expense Insurance, and the date you first had dependents eligible for such insurance, or
     - (ii) you enrolled for your own Dental Expense Insurance more than thirty-one days after you were eligible, or enrolled again for such insurance after previous voluntary termination of your Dental Expense Insurance while remaining in the eligible class.

Extended Benefits

If a person's insurance terminates before the completion of dental work which began before such termination, then, Dental Expense Benefits will be payable for Covered Dental Charges incurred as if they were incurred while insured.

EXCEPTION: In no event shall such benefits be payable for Covered Dental Charges incurred more than (1) one month after the Dental Expense Insurance terminates because of termination of the group policy or its amendment to terminate the Dental Expense Insurance of the class of which he is a member, or (2) three months after the Dental Expense Insurance terminates for any other cause.

General Information

Non-Duplication of Benefits

If an insured person is entitled to any medical, dental care or major medical benefits or services from another source (excluding any individual policy which is not issued under an arrangement of coverage for individuals in a group), such benefits under this plan may be reduced to an amount, which, together with all such other benefits, will not exceed 100% of any necessary, reasonable and customary item of expense covered under this plan or any such other plan.

Your Certificate

The insurance briefly described in this booklet is subject to the terms of the group policy issued by the Equitable. When you become insured you will receive a certificate.

When Insurance Terminates

Your insurance terminates when you leave our employ, when you are no longer eligible or when the group policy terminates, whichever happens first. A dependent's insurance terminates when your insurance terminates or when he is no longer an eligible dependent, whichever happens first.

Note: If you cease active work, inquire as to what arrangements, if any, may be made to continue insurance.

Procedure for Filing Dental Claims

1. Secure two claim forms and mailing envelope from your school office. Give dentist forms so he may complete reverse side of forms. Be sure all dates and information are included and that the form is signed by the dentist. A duplicate claim form is for his records. YOU ONLY SEND THE ORIGINAL TO THE PLAN ADMINISTRATORS.
2. Complete all questions listed in the section on the form entitled CLAIM FOR BENEFITS—TO BE COMPLETED BY CLAIMANT. Item 5 pertains to any other Dental Insurance you or your family may be covered for. Leave policy number and certificate number blank.
3. Complete questions 1, 2, 4, 5 and 7 only of section entitled POLICYHOLDERS STATEMENT. Leave space for certificate number blank. Where the name of the policyholder is requested insert the name of your school district.
4. Return one (1) claim form to Plan Administrator in the envelope provided.

Key Points to Remember

1. Be sure dentist completes his portion of the claim form.
2. If Bridgework or Orthodontic Treatment is necessary, the Treatment Plan which the dentist completes must be submitted within 20 days of the examination.
3. If drugs in connection with the Dental Expenses are needed, and these charges are made by someone other than the dentist, the bill should show the name of the patient, a description of what the drug was prescribed for and date incurred. The bill should be signed by the dentist and submitted along with the claim form.
4. You may pay the Dentist direct and receive reimbursement from the Equitable.
5. You may assign your benefit to the Dentist in which case payment will be made to him.

Important

Any questions in reference to Benefits or Claims should be directed to the Plan Administrator: [name, address, telephone number] (Syosset, New York)

SELECTED CURRICULUM REVIEW AND TEXTBOOK SELECTION PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS

An analysis of the 978 negotiation agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in districts with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more reveals that 529 agreements (54.1 percent) provided for some process of curriculum review and/or textbook selection. As shown in Table 1, 123 agreements (12.6 percent) established only a general or professional study committee through which teachers possibly might discuss curriculum review and textbook selection. Provisions relating directly to curriculum review were found in 172 agreements (17.6 percent), while 309 agreements (31.6 percent) referred specifically to textbook selection. Both curriculum review and textbook selection provisions were found in 75 (7.7 percent) of the agreements analyzed.

TABLE 1.—NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS RELATING TO CURRICULUM REVIEW AND TEXTBOOK DISTRIBUTION, 1968-69

Item	Agreements containing designated content
	Number	Percent
1	2	3
Number of agreements analyzed	978	100.0%
Agreements containing pertinent provisions	529	54.1
General study committee only	123	12.6
Curriculum review and joint curriculum committee	97	9.9
Textbook selection and joint textbook committee	234	23.9
Curriculum review and textbook selection	75	7.7

Curriculum review provisions often set forth the rationales for reevaluating the educational program and establish specific joint committees primarily for the purpose of reviewing and recommending curriculum proposals. Other agreements set forth specific procedures for review, including mention of the person(s) initiating the review process, the person(s) responsible for directing or coordinating the review program, program participants and their compensation, the frequency of meetings, details regarding the final decision on the completed report, and the implementation of curriculum change.

Teacher involvement in curriculum study may be accomplished through regular or ad hoc meetings on a building-wide, area-wide, or system-wide basis during the school year proper or as a specified summer program. Teachers may be granted released time or compensatory time for curriculum study during the school year, while summer program participants may be compensated at an hourly rate or by a specified stipend. When curriculum change is to be implemented, some agreements establish pilot programs, others guarantee teacher involvement prior to the change, and still others call for inservice training programs for teachers.[1]

In many agreements, textbook selection is understood simply to be part of the curriculum study or review process or briefly is mentioned as one of several subjects for possible discussion by a curriculum review committee. Other agreements establish procedures for textbook selection in varying degrees of specificity and usually in conjunction with a joint committee composed of three to six members appointed by the representative teachers' organization and a similar number of members appointed by the superintendent or the school board. Textbook discussions may be initiated by contractual mandate, by a specific committee, by the school board or the administration, or by the representative organization at the suggestion of teachers. While a few state laws provide that the state education board shall establish required textbooks, most state laws provide that the state board shall recommend textbooks, or that textbook selection shall be left entirely to the individual school district's discretion.

[1] For a more detailed analysis of negotiated curriculum review provisions see: National Education Association, Research Division. "Curriculum Review in Negotiation Agreements." NEA Research Bulletin 48:106-108; December 1970.

Teachers generally are guaranteed involvement in the selection process, and some agreements provide that the representative organization be cognizant of teacher involvement and be consulted prior to any change in the selection procedure itself. However, such involvement varies widely from the research, review, and evaluation functions of committees or study groups to meeting and discussing changes with the administration to guaranteed direct involvement in the actual selection of textbooks. Some agreements provide that textbook suggestions or changes will be considered only if proposed by more than one teacher; others state that principals or department heads are to discuss changes with the teachers affected. Occasional agreements allocate funds for pilot programs whereby textbook projects can be implemented or studied and evaluated.

Recommendations or proposals for textbook selection or change most always are advisory, whether they are the product of a majority opinion of the teachers involved, the findings of a departmental or grade level study, or the result of committee review or study efforts. Such recommendations generally are submitted to the school board for a final decision and in some cases the board must provide the committee with an explanation of any actions taken. If textbook changes are to be implemented, some agreements provide that adequate materials and/or equipment shall be provided prior to the implementation, while others state that appropriate inservice education programs will precede the changes.

Miscellaneous considerations negotiated in various agreements include released time and/or compensation for textbook selection or study work at a prorated amount of regular salary or a stated percentage of the B.A. base. Some agreements stipulate the frequency of committee meetings as well as the times at which they are to be held; others provide that teacher involvement in the study and development of instructional materials outside regular teaching hours shall be voluntary, while involvement during school hours shall be as equal as possible and practical. More recent agreements provide for the involvement of lay and/or student representatives in both curriculum review and textbook selection procedures and recommend the inclusion of or set forth guidelines for the consideration of materials dealing with minority groups.

Examples of negotiated curriculum review and textbook selection provisions are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Article XVI

Curriculum revision shall be thoroughly researched by a joint committee of the League and the Board. The teachers shall play an active role in the preparation, implementation, and evaluation of curriculum.

A. The procedures for developing new curricula shall include the following:

1. The appointment from among teachers who volunteer to a new curricula planning committee.
2. There shall be at least one teacher, but not more than two from each grade level for which the curriculum is designed.
3. At least one administrator, but not more than two will be appointed from the administrative staff.

B. The planning committee will complete a tentative curriculum outline for presentation to the Board of Education for approval.

C. If approved by the Board, the Superintendent will nominate from among the planning committee members, a curriculum writing team, for summer employment to write and publish the curriculum.

D. Materials needed to implement the new curriculum should be made available to the teachers concerned prior to the start of the new program.

E. The Board will encourage and support in-service training programs to prepare teachers for the new curriculum and will consider the use of released time when in the judgment of the administration it is required for an effective in-service workshop.

F. The advisability of pilot programs rather than full implementation will be considered.

G. Both the Board and the League will constantly evaluate and study both established and new currriculum and either may suggest modifications or changes.

Freeport Town Schools, Freeport, Maine

Article VI–Textbooks

A. The Committee guarantees that it will provide sufficient textbooks to insure that each pupil in a classroom has textbooks for his own use.

B. Before the Administration changes textbooks or selects new textbooks, the administration will notify the Association and the Educational Development Committee that it is considering such a change or selection. The EDC will have the right to meet and discuss with the administration such change or selection. Similarly, the EDC may, if it desires initiate discussion over a change in a textbook or the selection of a new textbook.

C. It is expressly understood that in granting the Educational Development Committee the right to discuss changes in and selections of textbooks, the School Committee in no way waives its right to make the final decision in regard to these matters.

Article XXI–Educational Development Committee

A. The Educational Development Committee: Until those in Education reach the state whereby they can unanimously declare that all the proper educational objectives necessary to fulfill the needs of the students whose education depends upon an adequately functioning school system have been correctly defined and the proper procedures for obtaining those objectives been initiated and implemented, it is obvious that education must always undergo a continuous process of evaluation, modification and growth in order to satisfy the educational needs of the students. Such a process will necessarily so include such elements as curriculum changes, materials changes, and procedural changes.

Since all of these aforementioned changes affect teachers' behavior and since the collective wisdom of practicing teachers promises greater effectiveness in the discovery, initiation, evaluation and implementation of such changes, it is logical and reasonable that the Freeport School Department give assurances of a direct relationship and responsibility of teachers in the necessary process of educational change. In this light, therefore, the Freeport Teachers Association asserts that a committee called "The Educational Development Committee," shall be formed whose responsibility it shall be to represent the teachers in the process of educational change.

1. Structure of Committee (Proportionate Representation). The committee shall consist of two (2) students, two (2) lay people, two (2) School Committee members, one (1) superintendent, and three (3) teachers representing (a) high school, (b) junior high school, and (c) elementary levels. Principals will be included as ex-officio members of the Educational Development Committee (EDC).
2. Selection of Educational Development Committee
   a. The Teachers Association will name five (5) lay people and the School Committee will name five (5) lay people. Both parties must select and mutually agree on two (2).
   b. Each party agrees to accept the two (2) student-elected representatives to the EDC from the senior high school.
   c. The teacher members of the EDC will be chosen annually by the President of the Freeport Teachers Association and approved by the Executive Board. A certified list of the teachers on the committee will be submitted to the Superintendent of Schools each year so that the necessary administrative steps can be taken. Specifically, said teachers will have their nonteaching load (supervision of study halls, recess, hall, bus duty, etc.) reduced in order to pursue their new duties relating to the committee (EDC).

B. Duties/Responsibility of Educational Development Committee

1. They shall use their "released time" period for duties related to EDC work.
2. They shall attend all joint meetings.
3. This committee shall encourage and consider all proposals from any source respecting curriculum, teaching techniques, aids and materials, educational facilities, design and equipment of new and remodeled school construction and any matters pertaining to the improvement of the educational programs carried on or proposed to be carried on in the Freeport School Department.

4. They shall discuss, investigate, evaluate and make suggestions to the members of the administration pertinent to problems regarding curriculum. Such suggestions will be considered public.

5. No proposals for changes in curriculum, scheduling or buildings or any other matters having widespread or significant effect on learning will be implemented until they have been referred to this committee for review and recommendation. Specific experimental curriculum projects are encouraged throughout the system providing the immediate supervisor, and this committee is cognizant of the undertaking.

6. They will cooperate and assist the administration in development of procedures for implementation of educational revisions which the EDC considers useful to the students of Freeport.

7. This committee shall have the right to meet with the School Committee at reasonable times, not more often than once per month unless by mutual agreement.

8. The Educational Development Committee will issue an annual report to the President of the Freeport Teachers Association, Superintendent of Schools, and Chairman of the Freeport School Committee concerning their activities, and said report will include the minutes of each meeting, a summary of the work of the year, and suggestions and conclusions to and the work of future committees. The report is due June 1 of each year.

9. This committee may establish sub-committees to consider particular matters within this committee's jurisdiction, but all proposals respecting such matters shall come to this committee for the consideration and recommendation.

10. The Freeport Teachers Association, the Administration, and the Freeport School Committee shall give serious consideration to the recommendations of the Educational Development Committee.

Warren Consolidated Schools, Warren, Michigan

Article XXIII, Section 1–Curriculum and Materials–Curriculum Review and Revision

The program described in this Section will exist on an experimental pilot basis for the duration of this contract and will be evaluated by the parties on or before June 12, 1971. The Board agrees to involve teachers in curriculum change through a steering committee of seven (7) people, consisting of four (4) WEA members including the President, and three (3) Administrators, which will be set up to allocate funds ($50,000) to teacher projects and curriculum concerns through the establishment of teacher curriculum study groups. The steering committee will determine its organizational structure and procedures. Established study groups will have the opportunity to report directly to the Board of Education. Teacher study groups will be set up to study the following list of topics. This list may be expanded at the discretion of the steering committee.

Field Trips	Teaching Supplies
Learning Disabilities	Enrichment Materials
Drop-outs and Graduate Follow-up	Textbook Selection and Review
Testing	Experimental Elementary School
Reading Program	Individual Research Projects

Rochester City School District, Rochester, New York

Section III, Item 20(a)–Teaching Conditions–Quality Integrated Education

In order to assure positive action designed to implement the commitments as expressed in Board resolutions of March 7, 1963 (Appendix B), August 27, 1963 (Appendix C), and March 16, 1967 (Appendix D) and the Preamble of this agreement, the Association and the Administration will continue and will accelerate their efforts to provide quality integrated education in the following manner:

a. Text Book and Curriculum Improvement. The Council on the Improvement of Instruction shall study and make recommendations concerning:

(1.) Use of multi-racially oriented textbooks at all levels as part of the basic reading program.

(2.) Use of textbooks and other curriculum material for each pupil in all American history classes in order to cover in depth the contribution of Negro and other minority groups in each unit taught; and the inclusion of such material as part of the course of study in Curriculum Guides.

(3.) Use of supplemental reading materials dealing with Negro and other minority groups contributions, e.g., Jews, Chinese, and American Indians.
(4.) Use of Comprehensive units which cover African, Asian and Latin American history at appropriate grade levels.

Tacoma School District No. 10, Tacoma, Washington

Article IV, Section J–Instruction–Selection of Instructional Materials

The Board of Education has delegated to the Superintendent the responsibility for appointing and supervising an Instructional Materials Committee; and in addition, to establish regulations for selection of instructional materials in accordance with the School Instructional Materials Law (RCW 28.23 and RCW 28.58.100).

The permanent members of the Instructional Materials Committee shall consist of the Deputy Superintendent, the Administrator for Elementary Education, and the Administrator for Secondary Education. Other members of the committee will be three principals and at least three teachers, one each from the elementary level, the junior high level, and the senior high level. The terms of service for these committee members shall be organized on a rotating basis.

It shall be the duty of the Instructional Materials Committee to approve procedures for the selection of all instructional materials used in the district. The committee shall also be available to review instructional materials at the request of any selection committee.

For all practical purposes the definition of instructional materials will include all materials used by teachers and students in the process of education. This definition shall include gifts and sponsored materials. Instructional materials purchased by students to be used in the schools must be selected in the same manner as those purchased by the district. Instructional materials is an all inclusive term and shall include such items as books, magazines, pamphlets, programmed materials, tapes, records, films and microforms.

It shall be the duty of each director, assistant, supervisor, or other individual responsible for an instructional area to establish and submit to the Instructional Materials Committee procedures for the review, study and selection of materials in that area of responsibility.

Changes in the methods of selection of materials shall be approved by the Instructional Materials Committee.

Reading lists for individual teachers or departments shall be compiled by responsible professional staff members. These lists shall be on file and available for review by interested parties on request.

All department chairmen or curriculum specialists serving a school shall submit their departmental or curriculum needs to the principal prior to the time the principal must prepare the building budget.

The procedures for selecting instructional materials shall reflect the following philosophy:

To provide materials that will stimulate growth in factual knowledge, practical skills, literary appreciation, aesthetic values, and ethical standards.

To provide a background of information which will enable pupils to make intelligent judgments in their daily lives.

To provide materials that will enrich and support the curriculum, taking into consideration the varied interests, abilities, and maturity levels of the pupils served.

To provide materials on opposing sides on controversial issues so that young citizens may develop under guidance the practice of critical thinking and analysis.

To provide materials representative of the many religious, ethnic, and cultural groups and their contributions to our American heritage.

To place principle above personal opinion and reason above prejudices in the selection of materials of the highest quality in order to assure a comprehensive collection appropriate for the instructional materials.[2]

Reconsideration of Challenged Instructional Materials.

It is recognized that opinions differ concerning appropriateness of instructional materials. Occasionally an individual or group may find instructional materials used in the Tacoma Public Schools in conflict with their views. Therefore, in accordance with provisions of the Instructional Materials Act, the following procedures have been established "to provide a system for receiving, considering and acting upon written complaints regarding instructional materials used by the Tacoma School District."

[2] Adapted from the Library Bill of Rights and Freedom to Read Statements.

All complaints must be presented in writing to the building principal (see Citizen's Request Form) and will include the name of the author, title, the publisher, and the objections by pages and items; or in case of materials other than printed material, written information specifying the precise nature of the objection shall be given. The statement must be signed and identified in such a way that a proper reply will be possible.

When a complaint is received by a principal, the principal will acknowledge the receipt of the complaint and answer any questions regarding procedure. The principal will then notify the Administrator for Elementary or Secondary Education, the department chairman and the teacher or teachers involved. The Administrator for Elementary or Secondary Education will determine whether the complaint should be considered an individual request or if a building or district level review committee should be activated to reevaluate the material.

An individual student may be excused from using challenged materials after the parent or guardian has completed the Citizen's Request form. The teacher will then assign the student alternate materials of equal merit.

The building level review committee shall be under the direction of the Administrator for Elementary or Secondary Education and composed of the building principal and four or more members selected by him from school or district personnel directly concerned.

The district level review committee shall be under the direction of the Deputy Superintendent and composed of the Administrator for Elementary Education or the Administrator for Secondary Education and five or more members selected by the Administrator for Elementary or Secondary Education from the administrative and instructional areas directly concerned.

The use of challenged materials by class, school or district shall not be restricted until final disposition has been made by the appropriate review committee. Individuals may be excused from using challenged materials according to the Procedure for Individual Request.

In the deliberations of challenged materials, the committee shall consider the educational philosophy of the school district, the professional opinions of other teachers of the same subject and of other competent authorities, reviews of the materials by reputable bodies, the teacher's own stated objections in using the materials, and the objections of the complainant.

The finding of the building review committee and/or district review committee shall be a matter of written record and transmitted to the Deputy Superintendent and the Administrator for Elementary or Secondary Education who will determine how interested parties shall be notified.

SELECTED PROVISIONS RELATIVE TO TEACHER INVOLVEMENT OUTSIDE THE REGULAR INSTRUCTIONAL DAY

Of the 978 comprehensive agreements effective in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more during the 1968-69 school year, 644 (65.8 percent) contained negotiated provisions relative to the noninstructional hours of classroom teachers. The analysis indicated that 425 provisions (43.5 percent) referred to time requirements before and after school hours, 373 provisions (38.1 percent) mentioned regular teacher meetings, 200 clauses (20.4 percent) provided for parent-teacher conferences, and 209 provisions (21.4 percent) specifically referred to teacher supervision of student extracurricular activities (unscheduled extra-duty pay). Table 1 presents the number and percent of agreements containing various combinations of the four items pertaining to the teacher's noninstructional day; only 28 of the 644 agreements referred to all four.

Time required of teachers before and after a system's instructional hours varies from five to 30 minutes with some agreements providing that a teacher may leave his building at the end of the day when he has met his commitments or finished performing his professional duties. Teachers may be required to arrive at school early so they will be in their classrooms when students arrive, or so they may perform bus duty, corridor duty, or take care of homeroom responsibilities. In some agreements time before and after classes is allocated for purposes of preparation or consultation with students requiring special assistance. Other agreements specify that teachers remain after student dismissal for workshops, inservice programs, staff meetings, parental conferences, various student extracurricular activities, and for student detention or discipline purposes. On Fridays or the day before a holiday, teachers generally are permitted to leave when students are dismissed.

According to a 1969 arbitration case involving the Trenton (Mich.) education board, it was not a violation for a principal to require homeroom teachers to be in their classrooms at 8:10 a.m. when the new contract provided that homeroom would begin at 8:20 a.m. Although the contract clause specified the time at which "official" homeroom activities such as announcements and attendance taking began, it was not inconsistent with past practice for the principal to require teachers to meet students in their homerooms at 8:10 a.m. Moreover, the contract's management rights clause authorized the principal to assign teachers to noninstructional duties once they had reported at 7:55 a.m.

Another arbitration case involved construction of a clause reading: "Teachers are normally expected to remain for periods of 30 minutes beyond the dismissal time of students as the teacher finds—or the principal instructs him—is necessary to the administrative details of closing." As it had been pre-contract practice for teachers to remain in school for the specified period of time, the arbitrator held that the language of the Needham (Mass.) contract did not indicate an intention that the 30-minute period be a voluntary matter with teachers. He accordingly determined that principals need not "evaluate and instruct" each teacher separately, but could direct all teachers to remain after school each day for the full 30 minutes.

Regularly scheduled staff meetings, whether on a building-wide, department-wide, or system-wide basis, are negotiated in many agreements and are to be held on designated days of the week or month with a maximum of three such meetings per month. Time limits ranging from 45 minutes to 90 minutes often are placed upon such meetings, although some provisions state that students will be released early if additional time is needed. In the event that faculty meetings are held too often or are too lengthy, occasional agreements allow teachers to protest or grieve the matter. Teachers often are permitted to suggest items for the agenda of a meeting, and a representative of the teachers' organization may speak at the meeting for five or 10 minutes upon prior request. If a meeting is not regularly scheduled, the teachers involved are to be given at least two or three days' advance notice.

Teachers generally are encouraged and in some instances required to confer with parents at least once each school term or more often if mutually desired, or if necessitated by achievement or discipline problems. Some agreements provide the teacher's preparation period for parent-teacher conferences, while others allow a block of time at the end of a grading period or permit conferences during school hours with the principal's approval and if they do not interrupt classroom instruction time. Such conferences may be used to discuss pupil progress, a pupil's problems, and any disciplinary difficulties. Teacher participation in or attendance at various school functions (such as an open house or back to school night), special public programs of the schools, and evening Parent-Teacher Association (PTA) meetings usually is strongly encouraged but remains a voluntary matter with the individual teacher. In some agreements, teachers are required to attend a specific PTA-related function such as a back to school night, while participation in all other PTA meetings is optional.

Teacher supervision of student extracurricular activities for which no additional compensation specifically is scheduled generally is on a voluntary basis. In the event that an appropriate volunteer cannot be found, some agreements stipulate that an administrator may appoint a teacher for a period not to exceed two successive years. An arbitrator found that the Indianapolis (Ind.) education board violated its contractual relationship with the Indianapolis Education Association when it did not prepare a list of uncompensated extracurricular activities far enough in advance for five teachers to select their assignments. Although the principal could make final assignments without a teacher's consent, past practice dictated that the board allow teachers to choose the activities they preferred and that it comply with those selections when practicable.

Uncompensated extracurricular activities include supervising intramural sports, chaperoning after school events, sponsoring club activities, accompanying students on field trips, chaperoning dances, and directing concerts, exhibits, plays, and dinners. Teachers are not required to drive students to activities away from school, but often may do so voluntarily with prior approval by the appropriate administrator. Some agreements provide that no teacher shall be required to supervise more than one extracurricular activity during the school year.

An arbitrator held that it was improper to impose a two-day disciplinary suspension on a Groton (Conn.) teacher who refused to accept an assignment as chaperone at a Saturday night dance when the contract stated that a teacher's responsibility "requires the performance of duties that involve the voluntary expenditure of time beyond the normal school day." Although the preceding agreement had omitted the word "voluntary," the arbitrator determined that the clause "must be given the meaning intended by the last amendment of the parties."

In another arbitration case it was found that the Newburgh (N.Y.) board did not violate a clause providing that "the working day for teachers shall not exceed seven hours and twenty minutes" when it required certain teachers' attendance at an evening school concert. In rejecting the contention that the evening assignment was barred by the work day clause, the arbitrator explained that such a clause pertains to the limitations on a teacher's "classroom" activities and does not constitute a "ban on mandatory teacher services outside the classroom day." Furthermore, past practice indicated a long history of teacher participation in activities outside the normal day, and the arbitrator held that this practice could be halted only through relevant contractual terms.

Provisions illustrative of the way in which items relative to teachers' noninstructional hours have been negotiated are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Before and After Instructional Hours

Hammond City School District, Hammond, Indiana

Article IX, Section B–Teaching Conditions

No teacher will be required to be in school more than ten (10) minutes before the students' official day begins. All teachers may leave their respective buildings when they have met their commitments for that day.

Freeport Town Schools, Freeport, Maine

Article VIII, Section 3–Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

No teacher shall be required to report for duty earlier than fifteen (15) minutes before the opening of the pupils' school day, and shall be permitted to leave fifteen (15) minutes after the close of the pupils' school day except on duty days. On Fridays or on days preceding holidays or vacations, the teachers' day shall end at the close of the pupils' day except on duty days.

Swampscott School District, Swampscott, Massachusetts

Article IX, Sections 3 and 5–Teachers' Duties

The work day of classroom teachers (except, however, teachers at the junior high and senior high school, who shall report ten (10) minutes before the scheduled starting time) will begin fifteen (15) minutes before the starting time and will end fifteen (15) minutes after the final dismissal time as described in Section two (2) above; except, however, that a teacher may be required to remain reasonable amounts of time after final dismissal for the purpose of giving extra instruction or special help to students in need of assistance and/or for make-up work or for such other purposes specifically defined in this Agreement; except also, in their discretion, that the librarians will remain on duty for as long as their professional services are required up to 4:00 p.m.

Teachers may be required to remain after the end of the regular work day for up to one and one-half (1½) hours to attend a reasonable number of departmental, individual school, or system-wide staff meetings (which shall not include special help or assistance at student corrective or remedial interviews) each school year. Meetings in excess of twenty-five (25) in a school year however, may be referred to PR&R Committee for a determination of the need and/or justification for said meetings. Teachers will be notified of such meetings (and subject matter of same) a reasonable time in advance of the meeting. In case of extraordinary programs, or the introduction and/or implementation of new programs in the system, by agreement of the parties, the requirements of this subsection may be waived.

Teaneck Public Schools, Teaneck, New Jersey

Article 25, Section 7–Teaching Hour and Teaching Load

Elementary teachers shall report one-half hour before school starting time in the morning and five minutes before school starting time in the afternoon. They shall remain one-half hour after school closing with the exception of No. 4 above [which relates to administrative or department meetings after school one day per week].

Regular Teacher Meetings

New Fairfield School District, New Fairfield, New Jersey

After School Meetings

A. Teachers are not required to remain longer than one hour for staff meetings:

1. First Monday of each month—General Staff Meetings or other meetings called by the Superintendent of Schools.
2. Second Monday of each month—Building Meetings called by the Principal of each school.
3. Third Monday of each month—Subject Field Groups, Grade Level Groups or Special Groups authorized by the Superintendent of Schools.
4. Emergency or special meetings called by the Administration as designed essential for the proper operation of the school.

Freeport Town Schools, Freeport, Maine

Article VIII, Section D—Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

1. Building-based teachers may be required to remain after the end of the regular workday, without additional compensation, for the purpose of attending faculty or other professional meetings twelve (12) days each year. Such meetings shall begin no later than fifteen (15) minutes after the student dismissal time and shall run for no more than ninety (90) minutes. If additional time is needed, students shall be dismissed early.
2. An Association representative may speak to the teachers at any meeting referred to in paragraph 1 above for at least ten (10) minutes on the request of the representative.
3. The notice of and agenda for any meetings shall be given to the teachers involved at least three (3) days prior to the meeting, except in an emergency. Teachers shall have the opportunity to suggest items for the agenda.

Jersey City Public Schools, Jersey City, New Jersey

Article 14—Teacher Meetings

Principals of individual schools or other duly authorized personnel shall notify the faculty of any meeting to be held at which their attendance is required at least two (2) days in advance of the meeting date, except in emergencies. Notice of the meeting shall include the proposed agenda.

The Board and the Association recognize that meetings requiring attendance of the entire faculty of a building after regular school hours should only be called for such items as those which relate to the safety and welfare of students and teachers and for other significant purposes.

Normally, no more than two (2) meetings per month shall be called and, normally, such meetings shall not exceed forty-five (45) minutes. If, in the judgment of the principal, it is necessary to hold any additional meetings, the Association representative will be notified, under normal circumstances, two (2) days in advance and, in all circumstances, in advance.

The Association Director shall have an opportunity to speak during any meeting for a period normally not longer than five (5) minutes.

Should the teachers in any building feel that an excessive number of meetings are being called, they may act according to the Grievance Procedure beginning at Step III.

Penns Grove-Upper Penns Neck Regional School District, Penns Grove, New Jersey

Article VII, Section D—Teaching Hours and Teaching Load

1. Building-based teachers may be required to remain after the end of the regular workday, without additional compensation, for the purpose of attending building faculty or other professional meetings one day each month. Such meetings shall begin no later than ten (10) minutes after the student dismissal time and shall run for no more than forty-five (45) minutes. Except in cases of an emergency involving the health and safety of students and teachers, if additional time is needed, students shall be dismissed early.

2. Meetings which take place after the regular in-school workday and which require attendant shall not be called on Fridays or on any day immediately preceding any holiday or other day upon which teacher attendance is not required at school.

3. An Association representative may speak to the teachers after any meeting referred to in paragraph 1 above for at least ten (10) minutes on the request of the representative.

4. The notice of and agenda for any meeting shall be given to the teachers involved at least two (2) days prior to the meeting, except in an emergency. Teachers shall have the opportunity to suggest items for the agenda.

Parent-Teacher Conferences

Baltimore County School District, Towson, Maryland

Article XI, Section 13–Teaching Conditions–PTA Meetings

Teacher attendance at PTA meetings provides a vital link in promoting the total educational program to the parents. It gives an opportunity for parents and teachers to explore jointly their responsibility to their children and to public education. Teachers should be present when the nature of the program indicates a need for their participation. Should professional or personal responsibilities conflict, the problem should be resolved with the local principal. Teachers are encouraged to participate in the executive board activities of their PTA as teacher representatives and to carry a voice in the establishment of program and budget for local school PTA's.

Article XII, Section 6–Maintenance of Classroom Control and Discipline–Suspension Policies

a. Required Parent Conference Notification Forms. In cases where it is desired by school administrators that parents come to the school for a conference, a Required Parent Conference Notification Form will be sent home. The new form will specify that if the parent does not appear for the conference, a formal suspension will be issued. It will not be necessary to send copies of the Required Parent Notification Form to the Office of Pupil Personnel; however, copies will be kept on file in the school. This form will become a standard county parent notification form.

b. Notice of Temporary School Suspension. A student may be suspended as a corrective measure for a period up to five school days at the discretion of the principal or his designee. A parent conference is required as one of the steps taken toward reinstatement.

Hartford County Public Schools, Bel Air, Maryland

Article XI, Section N–General Provisions–Teachers' Meetings

Teachers are expected to attend faculty meetings, support and attend the Parent-Teacher Association, and participate in the special public programs of their schools. From time to time they are asked to attend meetings planned by staff meembers of the Board of Education. . . . A teacher working in two schools will be expected to attend both P.T.A.'s unless an unusual circumstance occurs. A teacher working in more than two schools will be expected to schedule his attendance at P.T.A.'s to cover all schools at a rate of two meetings per month.

A teacher may be excused from attendance at a P.T.A. meeting by his principal to attend an approved and/or required class, provided that an acceptable alternative plan for all conferences which are desired by parents is developed by the teacher and approved by the principal. In all such exceptions, the parents of all students taught by the teacher shall be notified of the alternative plan. Conferences will be scheduled for and held with all parents who wish to take advantage of the alternative plan. In general, such excuses from P.T.A. meetings shall not be granted for two consecutive years. Exceptions may be granted for cause by the principal with the approval of the Director of Personnel.

Colonie Central School District No. 1, Albany, New York

Article 17–Elementary Parent Conferences

A. Elementary classroom teachers shall have at least one conference during the school year with each child's parents. If the teacher is unable to get the parent to come in for a conference, the teacher shall refer the matter to the principal. Should both teacher and principal be unable to get the parents in for a conference, the teacher will complete the conference form, note the parent's unwillingness to come in, and file the conference form in the child's permanent file.

B. The present conference form will continue to be used for all conferences. Upon completion of a conference, this form will be placed in the child's permanent file.

C. In each elementary school, grades 1-6 shall have four half-days allotted to parent conferences; kindergarten shall have six half-days. These days shall be scheduled by the Director of Elementary Education; every effort will be made to schedule these conferences during the second and third quarters of the school year. Conferences will not be scheduled on report card days or the days immediately preceding or immediately following these days.

D. There will be no lunch program on these days. Pupils will be dismissed as early as possible to provide a maximum amount of time for the writing up of and participation in these conferences.

Binghamton City School District, Binghamton, New York

Article XIII, Section 1307–Student Discipline–Parent Cooperation in Discipline

Teachers have the right and are encouraged to enlist the cooperation of parents in handling discipline problems. After consultation with the principal involved, teachers may request parental attendance at a parent-teacher conference to be held during school hours at the school. Teacher conferences are not to be scheduled so as to interrupt classroom instruction time.

Supervision of Student Extracurricular Activities

Freeport Town Schools, Freeport, Maine

Article XI, Section A(4a.)–Nonteaching Duties

Teachers shall not be required to drive students to activities which take place away from the school building. A teacher may do so voluntarily, however, with the advance approval of his principal or immediate supervisor. He shall be compensated at the rate of ten (10¢) cents per mile for the use of his own automobile.

Auburn School District, Auburn, Massachusetts

Article III, Section D(7)–Teaching Hours and Teaching Load–Working Conditions

Assignments to extra-curricular activities shall be voluntary. In the event that no appropriate volunteers are forthcoming for a given etxra-curricular activity, a teacher may be appointed by the administrator, provided that no teacher shall be required to accept such appointment for two (2) successive years.

Colonie Central School District No. 1, Albany, New York

Article 12–Extra-Curricular Activities

A. Teachers shall not be required to participate in any extra-curricular activity. All participation shall be voluntary.

B. Creation of new extra-curricular activities or the abolition of existing extra-curricular activities are the Board's responsibility.

C. On or before April 1 of each year, the Board will post the basic list of all extra-curricular activities for the following year on the bulletin boards agreed upon in Article 8A. Should additional positions be created after April 1, or if vacancies occur in the basic list of approved activities, the Board will post the positions on the agreed upon bulletin boards for at least 10 school days prior to the last day on which applicants will be accepted. (The only exception will be if a position must be filled more quickly than the 10 day time allowed. In this case, the posted notice will give the reason for the shortened time of posting.) This list will include the rate of compensation for each position.

D. The Board will not eliminate any extra-curricular activities after June 1 except upon adoption of a contingency budget or upon a showing of a lack of sufficient interest on the part of students.

Union Free School District No. 7, Great Neck, New York

Article VII—Chaperoning and Supervising Extracurricular Activities

The Association acknowledges that the educational values inherent in such extracurricular programs as dances, proms, parties, picnics, dinners, concerts, art exhibits, dramatic presentations, and athletic events contribute significantly to the full development of youth. It is agreed that henceforward no teacher shall be required to supervise more than one such activity during a given school year.

LOS ANGELES STRIKE SETTLEMENT DECLARED ILLEGAL; ASSOCIATION-UNION MERGER INVALIDATED

The Los Angeles County Superior Court permanently enjoined the Los Angeles City education board from effectuating the terms of an agreement which ended a 23-day strike conducted by district teachers in the spring of 1970. Concluding that the board's adoption of the agreement constituted an unlawful delegation of its authority, the court stated that "except for the strike, the Board would not have considered execution of the contract nor adoption of Rule 3700." The court additionally decided that the "merger" of the Associated Classroom Teachers of Los Angeles (ACTLA) and the Los Angeles Teachers Union (LATU) into an organization known as the United Teachers–Los Angeles (UTLA) was improper under the state's corporation laws.

The present litigation involved the consolidation of four cases arising from negotiation between the board, the negotiating council, and UTLA representatives and resulting in a May 11, 1970, board vote to finalize and execute an agreement submitted by a mediator. On May 20 the board decided to execute the contract, and on the same date defendants in two actions consolidated here (Grasko, et al. v. Board of Education, et al. and Miles, et al. v. United Teachers–Los Angeles, et al.) were restrained and enjoined from entering into that contract.

Nevertheless, the board proceeded to draft Board Rule 3700, which was substantially the same document as the contract except that it was "in the form of a unilateral statement of policies, employment relation procedures and goals; instead of a bilateral binding agreement." On June 4, the board indicated by formal resolution its intention to "sign the recently negotiated agreement when legal restrictions [i.e., the injunctions] confronting the Board were removed." Rule 3700 became the subject of a third case consolidated here (Citizens Legal Defense Alliance, Inc. v. Los Angeles City Board of Education), while the fourth case (Hayes v. ACTLA) involved an aspect of the merger.

Sec. 13085 of the California Education Code (a portion of the Winton Act) provides that a school board shall meet and confer with a negotiating council "with regard to all matters relating to the definition of educational objectives, the determination of the content of courses and curricula, the selection of textbooks, and other aspects of the instructional program to the extent such matters are within the discretion of the public school employer or governing board under the law." The court pointed out that amendments to the act which became effective November 24, 1970 (NRD, 12-70, 14), substantiated "everything that has been heretofore said by the courts as to limitations upon school boards in employment relations procedures," deleted the "in good faith" requirement of the act, and established a procedure for advisory third-party resolution of "persistent disagreements."

Determining that the Los Angeles board did not have the power and authority to enter into a contract with the UTLA, the court ruled that the defendants in Grasko and Miles be permanently restrained, explaining that > the Board was required to meet and confer with the negotiating council. However, the meeting and conferring is confined to the subjects above indicated, and does not, in the opinion of this Court, permit the hardcore bargaining and labor negotiations which took place, nor contracting as contemplated by the execution of the subject contract.

>
> The contract, . . . both in form and in substance, undertakes to recognize the Negotiating Council as the sole bargaining agent for certificated teachers. The Agreement also recognizes UTLA as the agent of the Negotiating Council.
>
> This Court has concluded that the Negotiating Council is not an entity legally qualified to enter into a contract.
>
> The Court has further concluded that the Board is without express statutory authority, or necessarily implied authority, to enter into a binding bilateral agreement. . . . The results of meeting and conferring sessions under the present state of the law cannot result in more than a unilateral determination of policy in the form of rules or resolutions in regard to the subjects above enumerated. The rules and policies of the Board must be subject to change and modification at its pleasure, with the possible exception of those rules which by implication are a part of an employers contract of employment.

While expressing understanding of the board's hope of developing a "package deal" in regard to employment relations and teachers' concern for educational policies, as well as their own working conditions, the court commented that the teachers' remedy "is clear, namely legislation via the legislative process."

The Citizens Legal Defense Alliance case involved a claim that Rule 3700 was invalid and could not be implemented because, while it was unilateral in form, it was "in substance a contract, and . . . the rule making power of the Board was resorted to merely in order to circumvent the restrictions of the Law against collective bargaining and the preliminary injunctions of this Court." Plaintiffs asserted that the rule constituted an invalid delegation of the board's administrative powers and duties, and that it was "the fruit of the poisoned tree, contaminated by an illegal strike and illegal collective bargaining."

The court initially found "as a fact that Rule 3700 would not have been adopted, nor would it have been considered for adoption by the Board, except for the strike." Furthermore, in examining portions of the contract at length, the court found numerous violations of statutory provisions setting forth the administrative powers and duties of school boards; it particularly cited provisions for equal representation on joint committees, work day, a grievance procedure ending in binding arbitration, the restoration of certain educational programs and services without further meet and confer sessions, the appointment of school representatives by the negotiating council, and the creation of three additional negotiating entities performing essentially the same function but on different levels.

Concluding that defendants in this case should be restrained permanently from effectuating Rule 3700, the court noted and commented upon defendants' assertion > that no harm can be done because of the nature of a rule, namely that it can be repealed, modified or amended by the Board at any time it pleases. But if the rules of the Board in existence at the time of the execution of a teacher's contract are to be considered by implication, a part of that contract, does the Board, by adopting Rule 3700, to that extend bind itself to abide by the provisions thereof? We would have, then, more than a moral obligation on the part of the Board not to change or repeal the rule. . . . To violate the Rule or to suspend it . . . would amount to such a breach of faith with the Board [of] Certificated Employees as would result in a breakdown in employee-employer relations. . . . We are inclined to agree with the County Counsel when he states in his brief Amicus Curiae:

> ". . . the Board of Education in an attempt to establish a 'collective bargaining relationship,' has effectively abdicated its statutory responsibility to control and manage the school district". . . . While it is true that one might point to specific provisions in Rule 3700 that are within the rule-making powers of the Board, those provisions that are not valid are, in our opinion, so numerous as to invalidate the entire Rule.

The court also pointed out that "one of the inducements to the board was that they were creating a package deal" and that the teachers indicated a goal of reaching an encompassing agreement. From this evidence, the court inferred that neither party intended for some portions of the agreement or the rule to be implemented and others abandoned and stated: "Let the board reenact those portions that are valid, if they see fit, in an atmosphere free of strife and duress, following its customary rule-making processes."

In attempting to "unscramble" the nature and effect of the January 14, 1970, "Merger Agreement" entered into by ACTLA and LATU after a joint membership vote in which a "majority of those voting" approved the "merger," the court found that there was in fact no merger of the two associations and that ACTLA continued to exist although it was functionally defunct. The California Corporation Code provides that "any corporation may elect to wind up its affairs and voluntarily dissolve by the vote or written consent of its shareholders or members representing 50 percent or more of the voting power." As an incorporated body, ACTLA had to abide by this rule. But the court found that the results of the ACTLA membership vote on adoption of the Merger Agreement—6,760 yes votes and 4,997 no votes out of an active membership of 18,200—"cannot be tortured into a consent of the members representing '50 percent or more of the voting power,' " thereby invalidating the presumed dissolution of ACTLA.

Moreover, the transfer of ACTLA's assets to UTLA "was unauthorized because it was without the consent of a majority of the membership" as required by the ACTLA Articles of Incorporation. The court also noted testimony of the UTLA president (former ACTLA president) to the effect that the Merger Agreement "did not effect a merger but was intended as an Agreement between ACTLA and UTLA to create and appoint an agent, namely UTLA, to represent them on the negotiating council . . . and, in turn, to represent the two associations in their negotiations with the school board." According to the court, "incorporated and unincorporated associations can engage in joint enterprises, and we assume they can jointly appoint an agent; thus we may be able to give UTLA legitimacy, rather than have to consider it an offspring of a putative union."

Deciding that "ACTLA does exist, has not been dissolved, nor has any merger been effected, but that a dissolution at the end of the interim period [February 1, 1970 to January 1, 1971] is contemplated, the court ruled in Hayes that the contemplated dissolution and termination of ACTLA on January 1, 1971 . . . can only be done legally with a consent of the majority of the voting power of ACTLA. . . . Therefore . . . the Court has found that the defendants [in Hayes] unless enjoined will terminate ACTLA without the authority required by the statutes applicable.

It further concludes that funds and properties have been wrongfully appropriated. We do not mean in this finding to imply a dishonest taking but rather that funds and properties have been transferred mistakenly and without legal authority.

The defendant individuals responsible for such transfer should be required . . . to account for such funds and properties. Further, they should be enjoined from continuing to transfer to UTLA, ACTLA membership dues deducted by the Board and remitted to it by ACTLA. (George F. Hayes, et al. v. Association of Classroom Teachers–Los Angeles, et al.; Natalie Grasko, et al. v. Los Angeles City Board of Education, et al.; Farrel T. Miles, et al. v. United Teachers–Los Angeles, et al.; Citizens Legal Defense Alliance, Inc., et al. v. Los Angeles City Board of Education, et al., Los Angeles County Superior Court, October 20, 1970.)

MICHIGAN

COURT AFFIRMS APPROPRIATENESS OF UNIT OF SCHOOL SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL

The Michigan Court of Appeals upheld a decision of the then Michigan Labor Mediation Board (MLMB) which found that supervisory personnel are public employees within the meaning of the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA) and that a unit of supervisory personnel employed by the Hillsdale Community Schools was appropriate for collective bargaining purposes (NRD, 2-69, A-1, C-14).

At issue on appeal was the interpretation of MCLA 423.9e (a portion of the Michigan Labor Mediation Act) which is incorporated by reference into sec. 13 of the PERA. Sec. 13 provides that the state labor board "shall decide in each case, in order to insure public employees the full benefit of their right to self organization, to collective bargaining and otherwise to effectuate the policies of this act, the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining as provided in Section 9e of Act No. 176." Sec. 9e then states:

The board, after consultation with the parties, shall determine such a bargaining unit as will best secure to the employees their right of collective bargaining. The unit shall be either the employees of 1 employer in 1 plant or business enterprise within this state, not holding executive or supervisory positions, or a craft unit, or a plant unit, or a subdivision of any of the foregoing units: Provided, however, that if the group of employees involved in the dispute has been recognized by the employer or identified by certification, contract or past practice, as a unit for collective bargaining, the board may adopt such unit.

When the Hillsdale Community Schools Principals and Supervisory Association sought an election in a proposed unit of "high school, junior high, and elementary school principals, curriculum coordinator, reading coordinator, ESEA coordinator, cooperative education coordinator, head librarian, and physical education director," the district objected (in part) on grounds that supervisors and executives have no collective bargaining rights under the PERA. The MLMB, however, determined that there is no prohibition against units of supervisory personnel. Moreover, since the personnel included in the proposed unit were not employees "who formulate, determine and effectuate management policies," they would not fall within the "executive or supervisory" exclusion of sec. 9e.

Finding itself bound by that determination, the appeals court explained that sec. 9e presents 4 choices of bargaining units; (1) a unit consisting of all of the employees employed in one plant or business enterprise within the state, (2) a craft unit, (3) a plant unit, and (4) a subdivision of any of the foregoing units.

The language in § 9e ". . . not holding executive or supervisory positions, . . .", is a modification of only the first type of unit listed. It does not modify the remaining units defined, nor is it in itself a prohibition against executive or supervisory employees constituting a bargaining unit. In its decision in Saginaw County Road Commission . . . the LMB held supervisory personnel to be covered by the terms of PERA:

"The words 'public employee' are to identify the employees other than private and does not define public employee so as to exclude supervisory personnel."

The court of appeals concluded that a sufficient community of interest existed in the proposed unit and accordingly affirmed the MLMB's unit determination. (Hillsdale Community Schools v. Michigan Labor Mediation Board and Hillsdale Community Schools Principals and Supervisory Association and Michigan Education Association, Michigan Court of Appeals, Division 2, May 26, 1970.)

NEW JERSEY

SALARY INCREASES ADOPTED AFTER BUDGET SUBMISSION BECOME EFFECTIVE ONLY WITH FUTURE BUDGETS

Teacher pay increases adopted by the Newark education board on August 5, 1969, but refused implementation by the board of school estimate for the 1969-70 school year were ruled applicable only to future school budgets by the New Jersey

Supreme Court. As the 1969-70 school budget had been adopted prior to the August resolution, implementation of the resolution would have called for salary increases beyond the scope of that budget. A lower court had held that barring requests for additional funds which were of an "emergency" nature or fell within the "underestimate" category, "there is no statutory provision permitting a board of education to amend its annual budget after it has been approved." This finding was affirmed by the state supreme court in its interpretation of a seeming inconsistency in applicable statutory language.

Following a lengthy salary impasse (NRD, 3-70, 7) and subsequent mediation, the Newark board adopted the following resolution on August 5, 1969, some six months after the board statutorily had submitted a budget for the 1969-70 school year which contained no salary increases:

> Whereas, the Board deems that salary increases for all its employees are both warranted and necessary for the best interests of this school district, and
> Whereas, in order to implement this policy, I hereby move that the Board adopt the following salary schedules, the effective date of both this policy and salary schedules to be the date of receipt of a proper appropriation or the receipt of funds from such other sources which may be available for the implementation of this policy. . . .
> Resolved that the Board of School Estimate be asked for an appropriation of $4,700,000 to implement the salary schedules.

When the board of school estimate refused to certify to the city the amount necessary to implement the new salary schedules, the Newark Teachers Association (bargaining representative at that time) entered a superior court action seeking immediate implementation of the new salary schedules (NRD, 4-70, 4). That court denied the Association's motion for summary judgment in finding that the term "effective date" as used in N.J.S.A. 18A:29-4.1 "does not require that a new salary schedule shall go into effect on the date of its adoption. [The statute] says that the salary policy shall be binding on the board of education for two years from the effective date of the policy—not from the date of its adoption."

In the instant matter, the state supreme court found the Newark board's view of N.J.S.A. 18A:29-4.1 correct under both the statute's original terms and the slightly different language of its revision in that the board "acted upon the premise that a salary schedule could be effective only with respect to an annual budget thereafter adopted." As originally enacted, the statute provided in part that "every school budget thereafter adopted, certified or approved . . . shall contain such amounts as may be necessary to fully implement such policy and schedules for that budget year" (emphasis added). According to the court, "the theme of the act was that a new policy or schedule shall not upset a budget already adopted . . . that the time sequence would be (1) the adoption of a resolution by the board of education, followed by (2) the incorporation of the salary needs in a budget thereafter adopted."

Although the revised version of the statute omitted the word "thereafter," the state supreme court determined that "there is no reason to assume a substantive change was intended. . . . The likely explanation is that the reviser thought the word 'thereafter' was redundant because under the terms of the statute the implementing budget would necessarily be adopted after the adoption of a new policy and schedule by a board of education."

Noting that the present litigation involved only the 1969-70 school year but that the budget for the following school year incorporated the new salary schedules, the court commented that > it is evident from what we have said in dealing with the issue presented in this case that we gather the statute was intended to mean that the employees shall not be denied the promise of a new schedule adopted by a board of education. Thus to enable the board of education to have the final word does depart from the historic statutory plan, but that seems to be the thrust of the measure. We state this tentative view to the end that the Legislature may quickly clarify its intent if we have misconceived it.

(Newark Teachers Association v. Board of Education of Newark, County of Essex, et al., New Jersey Supreme Court, October 26, 1970.)

NEW YORK

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF UNUSED SICK LEAVE TO ESTATE UPON TEACHER'S DEATH RULED VALID

A decision of the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, ruled valid and constitutional a negotiated article providing for the payment of a percentage of accumulated personal sick leave to a teacher's estate upon his death. In so ruling, the court reversed a lower court's decision and affirmed an arbitrator's award made pursuant to an agreement between the Central High School District No. 3 Teachers Association and the local board. The appellate court additionally determined that in the absence of "an express legislative restriction" against the negotiation of such a provision, a school board already is broadly and impliedly vested with the statutory authority to provide for payment of unused sick leave.

Schedule C of the parties' 1968-70 agreement provided that upon an employee's death, his estate would receive the increase in salary (based upon unused accumulated sick leave) to which he would have been entitled. That increase would amount to 20 percent of accumulated personal sick leave for employees with up to and including 15 years' service.

The instant matter was brought by the Association on behalf of a teacher who died in 1968 after having served less than 15 years with the district and accumulating 15 days' sick leave. An arbitrator determined that Schedule C was enforceable, and that the teacher's estate should receive a sum equal to 20 percent of the pay for the 15 days of accumulated leave. The New York Supreme Court at Special Term ruled to the contrary, stating that payment of the sum would violate Art. VIII, sec. 1 of the state constitution. That article provides in part that "[n]o county, city, town, village or school district shall give . . . any money or property to or in aid of any individual, or private corporation or association."

On appeal, the higher court traced the development of case law dealing with pensions and allowances for public employees in the face of the constitutional prohibition and concluded that > the courts have recognized that the State and its municipalities . . . are not conferring gifts upon their employees, but that essentially the promised rewards are conditions of employment—a form of compensation withheld or deferred until the completion of continued and faithful service. . . . In our opinion, sick leave as a condition of employment enjoys the same shelter from the constitutional bar. It offers an inducement to competent and efficient workers to enter public service; and the right to accumulate unused sick leave encourages the employee to stay in public service and at the same time deters absenteeism for trifling ailments. . . . Nor do we see any constitutional barrier to the payment of a sum equivalent to a percentage of accumulated unexercised sick leave when the employee dies in service or severs his relationship.

The school board urged that it lacked authority to negotiate such a payment, citing a statement of counsel to the state education department which held that a school district may pay employees for unused vacation time, but not for unused sick leave (sec. 92 of the General Municipal Law). But the appellate court found that "nowhere in the statutes has the Legislature withdrawn from a board of education the power to pay for unused sick leave" and held that > the authority to provide for such payment resides in the respondent under the broad powers and duties delegated by the statutes. Were it otherwise, a board of education would not be able to bargain collectively and to make agreements concerning terms of employment with its teachers unless specific statutory authority for each provision of the agreement existed. . . . Section 92 does indeed sanction the granting of vacations and sick leave and the payment for unused vacation time, without providing for the payment of unused sick leave. In those terms the statute merely express[es] the power of the respondent to do that which it was already empowered, either expressly or impliedly, to do. . . . [N]either the absence of express power in section 92 nor the veto of a bill to make the power express in section 92 changes the essential character of the powers already broadly vested in the respondent by the provisions of the Education Law and the Civil Service Law. The undertaking by the respondent to pay for unused sick leave in the collective bargaining agreement was an exercise of reasonably implicit power pendent to its express power and duty to contract with its teachers and to determine the compensation and conditions of employment under which the teachers were to perform their services.

(Teachers Association, Central High School District No. 3 and Board of Education, Central High School District No. 3, Nassau County, New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Second Judicial Department, June 22, 1970.)

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

DECISION NOT TO RENEW NONTENURE TEACHER'S CONTRACT BASED UPON PERFORMANCE, NOT UNION ACTIVITIES

The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana dismissed a suit brought by a nontenure Griffith, Indiana, teacher who contended that the local board's refusal to grant him tenure was in retribution for his union activities and violated his constitutional rights of free speech and association. The court found itself "convinced that the decision of the defendants not to place plaintiff on tenure status was based on a reasoned appraisal of plaintiff's abilities and shortcomings." Citing a portion of the decision rendered in Parker v. Bd. of Education of Prince George's County, Md., the court held that "where the abridgement of the abstract right of free speech results from government action taken for the protection of other substantial public rights, no constitutional deprivation will be found to exist."

Plaintiff taught social studies at the Griffith High School from September 1965 through June 1970 and would have attained tenure under Indiana law if his contract had been renewed for the 1970-71 school year. After being notified on April 29, 1970, that his contract would not be renewed, plaintiff brought suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. In hearing the matter on its merits, the court pointed out that a school board's "latitude of discretion" in granting or denying tenure "must necessarily be quite broad," but that a decision not to renew "is impermissible if it deprives a teacher of constitutionally protected rights."

Plaintiff established that he was an active member of the Griffith Federation of Teachers in that he had been a member of several union committees, was vice-president of the union during the 1968-69 school year, was unsuccessful in his bid for union president in 1969, was an alternate member of the union's negotiating committee, and had been a primary instigator of a one-day strike held in the fall of 1969. But the court found no "credible evidence that there was a causal connection" between plaintiff's union activities and the board's decision not to renew his contract. Citing instances in which other union members had been promoted or granted tenure, the court held it > incongruous that a school board with a bias against the union, as alleged by the plaintiff, would exercise that bias by preventing only one union member from attaining tenure while elevating several others to permanent status and promoting other members of the union. The Court is convinced that the school administration was not acting under a bias against the union generally, or against the plaintiff in particular because of his union activity.

In examining the board's reasons for not retaining plaintiff, the court found "a substantial basis" for the nonrenewal decision and decided that "the motives of the defendants were proper." Specifically, plaintiff's tardiness had been noted, his "tendency toward insubordination" was documented in three instances, one of which involved his advising students to violate the school's dress code, and his lack of concern for parents was pointed out in two other instances. Moreover, plaintiff had caused "dissension and divisiveness" among the staff by criticizing and embarrassing other teachers, displaying "a bellicose attitude," drinking heavily and using profanity at various social functions, refusing to cooperate with other teachers, and contributing to the friction between the union and the Griffith Teachers Organization.

The school board's final reason for denying plaintiff tenure was the "significant difference" between plaintiff's educational philosophy and that sought by the board. The court found "substantial evidence . . . that [plaintiff] had abused his teaching position by using his classroom 'as his personal forum to promote union activities, to sanction polygamy, to attack marriage, to criticize other teachers and to sway and influence the minds of young people without a full and proper explanation of both sides of the issue.'" Moreover, plaintiff belittled the opinions of students who challenged him, used inappropriate language in the classroom, and told his class that "if his statements were repeated outside of the classroom he would deny, under oath, having made them."

Pointing out that defendants' reasons for denying renewal to plaintiff "all relate directly to plaintiff's performance in the classroom and/or the smooth functioning of the school system," the court concluded that > the school administrators were not acting with a desire to deprive plaintiff of his freedoms of speech and association. The First Amendment freedoms of a teacher are necessarily affected by the right of the school board to retain only those teachers who adequately discharge their teaching responsibilities and do not disrupt the efficient operation of the school. To the extent that this is a restriction on the freedom of a teacher, it is only incidental to the exercise of the school board's duty to maintain good schools. It is a question of balancing the interest of the teachers with that of the State. . . . There is no credible evidence to support plaintiff's contention that defendants acted with a bias toward the union or an intent to deprive plaintiff of his constitutional rights. The complaint therefore must be dismissed on the merits.

(Thomas C. Knarr v. Board of School Trustees of Griffith, Indiana, et al., U.S. District Court, Northern District of Indiana, September 25, 1970.)

Board Findings and Rulings

CONNECTICUT

PARAPROFESSIONALS MAY BE REPRESENTED BY TEACHERS' STATE OR NATIONAL ORGANIZATION BUT MUST HAVE FULL MEMBERSHIP RIGHTS

A petition by the New Haven Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 933, for certification as representative of all paraprofessionals except supervisors employed by the New Haven education board was dismissed without prejudice by the Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations. As the union's proposed relationship with the paraprofessionals did not allow such employees their statutory right to full union membership, the state board held that recognition of the unit would violate that right. Moreover, the state's statutory bargaining scheme calls for separate and separately represented local units of certified teachers and/or administrators and municipal employees (including paraprofessionals).

The New Haven board objected to the union's petition for certification on grounds that paraprofessionals were ineligible for membership in the union. Shortly afterward, the union altered its constitution to provide for the establishment of a paraprofessional unit whose members would have no vote in union affairs and thus no voice in the choice of union officers or negotiation representatives. Moreover, members of the paraprofessional unit would not be permitted to withhold union dues against the union's will.

Emphasizing that the statutory right to join a labor organization entails the right to "full membership," the state board ruled that the relationship contemplated did not afford the paraprofessionals that right. It additionally held that since teachers and paraprofessionals are covered by separate bargaining statutes, they may not be included in the same unit, nor may separate units be represented by the same union local. The state board explained that the implicit policy of the statutes is that teachers and/or administrators and municipal employees be substantially independent of each other. While they may be represented by the same state or national union, representation on a local level must be by different, entirely independent union locals. (Matter of City of New Haven Board of Education and New Haven Federation of Teachers, Local 933, AFL-CIO, Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations, December 30, 1970.)

ILLINOIS

DEATH BENEFITS AWARDED WHERE UNION FAIRLY PRESUMED RETROACTIVITY OF INSURANCE CLAUSE

An arbitrator awarded $2,000 in death benefits to the estates of 37 teachers in a dispute involving the retroactivity of a life insurance clause negotiated by the Chicago Teachers Union (CTU) and the Chicago education board. In examining the parties' intent regarding the language of the clause, the arbitrator held that the union "was entitled to rely" upon the superintendent's statements as to the January 1, 1969, effective date of the clause during 1969 contract negotiation. Thus, while the clause itself mentioned no effective date, the board was obligated to make payments to the estates of unit members who died between January 1 and September 1, 1969, the date of actual benefit coverage.

During negotiation of a group life insurance plan for bargaining unit members, the Chicago board agreed to the plan in principle and appropriated $225,000 for its implementation. Following various insurance company delays, the policy was effectuated on July 9, and the board subsequently established a September 1 date of benefit coverage. Prior to this, the parties agreed on May 28 to a one-year contract made retroactive to January 1 and extending through December 31, 1969.

When the CTU learned on July 3 of the board's action regarding the insurance clause, it objected on grounds that it had understood the policy to be retroactively effective to January 1. The board failed to act upon the objection, so the union filed a grievance charging that the board's delay in the effective date of the policy violated the parties' agreement.

The board initially contended that the arbitration proceedings were invalid because a circuit court had ruled in Illinois Education Association v. Board of Education that an education board may bargain collectively with a union only under three conditions, one of which is that if negotiation fails "to resolve differences, the decision of the board shall be final." The board accordingly argued that the binding arbitration provision in the parties' agreement violated this condition and constituted an illegal delegation of authority. In addition, the board denied any intention to make the insurance coverage retroactive, since the contract clause was not specifically backdated to January 1, as were other negotiated provisions. Finally, the board maintained that the CTU knew there would be a delay in effectuating the insurance coverage, and that it had not inquired about the effective date of coverage prior to July 3.

The union responded with the argument that the circuit court ruling referred to the resolution of differences during the negotiation process, not the arbitration of grievances. It also contended that the board should be estopped from raising the question of arbitrability because in four prior negotiation situations the board had agreed to a binding grievance arbitration clause without disputing its legality.

As to the issue of retroactivity, the CTU maintained that the parties had intended in their May 28 settlement for every article to be effective as of January 1, except those designated to take effect on September 1. It quoted a statement made by the superintendent at the April 1 negotiating session:

> We have a number of items in this supplemental agreement, if I can call it that.
> Let me give one example, group life insurance, which at this time the board committee is, as you know, working on and trying to get effective as soon as we can. My understanding, I think it is January 1, when it was supposed to be effective.

Then on April 2, when the superintendent noted that union fringe benefit proposals contained no effective dates, a union representative said that all items not specifically designated as taking effect in September were to be effective as of January. The superintendent answered: "That's all I wanted to hear." The union finally asserted that no board representative had informed a union representative of the effective date of the insurance coverage prior to July 3. Moreover, the board's $225,000 appropriation for 1969 benefit coverage indicated to the union that a January 1 effective date had been intended, since $75,000 would have sufficed for the September through December 1969 period.

In discussing the issue of arbitrability, the arbitrator stated that "the issue of legality [raised by the union's estoppel argument] cannot be disposed of in that fashion since an illegal commitment remains invalid regardless of the number of times that the issue of legality might have been raised but was not." While the word "negotiation" as used in the circuit court's opinion may be applied to the grievance procedure, the arbitrator noted that the word usually refers to the process for determining wages, hours, and conditions of employment, and that the judge in Illinois Education Association had not specifically mentioned grievance arbitration:

> By [the judge's] decision authorizing the board to engage in collective bargaining he must have intended it to negotiate typical collective bargaining clauses; certainly his failure to prohibit the arbitration of grievances strongly suggests that the board had power, under his decision, to negotiate such a clause if it so desired. One of the other conditions in [the judge's] decision, it should be noted, required the union to agree not to strike. If it could neither strike nor arbitrate grievances, any agreement made would be subject to unilateral interpretation by the board, a most unsatisfactory system in labor-management affairs and one that might vitiate the entire collective bargaining process. It would be a most unusual system of interpretation that would read this result into [the judge's] decision, in the absence of clear language to that effect.

The substantive issue "turns primarily on the intent of the parties," according to the arbitrator, and "the question is whether some mutual agreement can fairly be inferred from everything they said and did." Noting the board's $225,000 budgetary action, the arbitrator found it "suggestive as to [the board's] intent at that time, but not conclusive" since the board could not have known in January when an insurance company would be selected and how the insurance clause (including its effective date) would be phrased.

However, he did find conclusive the April 1 and 2 statements of the superintendent which, while somewhat equivocal, represented an understanding of the union's position and established a presumption that the insurance policy would be effective as of January 1. The arbitrator thus concluded that > the union's intent that the life insurance program be retroactive to January 1 was known to the board, and that the union was entitled to rely on [the superintendent's] statement on April 1. . . . The arbitrator finds, under the circumstances of this case, that the board's negotiators had an obligation to make their change in position, from that stated by [the superintendent] known to the union before the agreement was signed on May 28. He therefore finds that the board incurred an obligation to have payments of $2,000 made to the estates of all members of the bargaining unit who died between January 1 and September 1.

FACT-FINDER BLAMES DISTRICT'S FINANCIAL CRISIS ON PUBLIC'S DEFEAT OF MILLAGE REQUESTS

A Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) fact-finder appointed to resolve a negotiation impasse between the Lansing Education Association (LEA) and the Lansing education board warned the public to "make up its mind" with respect to financing local education. Naming four factors responsible for the Lansing schools' financial crisis—all of which were "beyond the control of the board and the association"—the fact-finder placed most of the blame for the situation on the public's defeat of two millage requests in June and August 1970. Pointing out that the August defeat deprived the board of some $3.3 million previously available, the fact-finder said that > the Lansing School District is in a financial crisis . . . purely because 109 people in June, 1970, refused to renew an existing tax millage. . . . By refusing to renew the 4.6 millage, the public has engaged in false economy. It has caused cutback in programs. It has caused the announced elimination of extracurricular programs so valuable to many students. It has begun the process of making Lansing education inferior. It has caused the prospects of additional cutbacks. . . . Perhaps the Lansing taxpayer may be overjoyed by the fact that in the current year the total operating millage is 25.65 as compared to last year's operational millage of 30.85, but his children are being short changed.

During reopener talks specified in the parties' 1969-71 agreement, an impasse on salary increases, extracurricular pay, and class size limitations arose, and the parties jointly sought fact-finding. A comparison of the parties' salary proposals with comparable school districts and the Lansing district's ability to pay resulted in the fact-finder's appraisal that both groups' proposals were unrealistic. Specifically, he held that the board's offer of a B.A. base of $7,750 and an M.A. maximum of $14,105 was too low, while the LEA's demand for a $8,175 base and an M.A. maximum of $15,287 was too high.

In testing the competitive nature of Lansing's B.A. base (which represents an index of 1.00 and thereby sets the entire salary schedule), the fact-finder rejected the LEA's contention that the districts used for comparison should include higher-paying systems within the influence of the Detroit metropolitan area. Instead, he adopted the board's proposal that Lansing salaries be compared with "out-state" districts which already had negotiated their 1970-1971 salaries, were outside the Detroit influence, contained about the same number of students, and had similar tax bases.

In so doing, he found that the board's B.A. base and M.A. maximum offers would cause Lansing teachers to forfeit their relative position compared with other districts, while the LEA's demand for a B.A. minimum attempted to place Lansing teachers within the Detroit metropolitan area influence. Furthermore, no district had negotiated a salary increase as high as the $800 sought by the LEA, and all comparable districts (except one) had agreed upon a rise in the B.A. base which exceeded the board's offer by $50. Citing the need for "market place compensation" and a "fair, adequate teacher salary," the fact-finder recommended that the B.A. minimum be "$7,850.00 or a $100.00 increase over the board's offer. Based upon the present index in the contract, which this fact-finder is recommending be continued with the same tracks, the M.A. minimum at a 1.82 index would become $14,287.00."

He adopted the board's proposal that no changes be made in the existing extracurricular pay scale owing to the district's financial situation, increases built into the existing schedule, and the "concept of protecting the integrity of a two-year contract."

In regard to class size reductions, the fact-finder found the LEA's demands financially unfeasible despite its "very eloquent educational reasons for reducing class size particularly in the elementary grades." He recommended maximums of 29 students per kindergarten class, 27 students in grades one and two, 32 students in grades three through six, 35 students (with exceptions) per secondary class and a maximum pupil contact figure of 160 students per day, and 27 students per class in combination grades.

The fact-finder's recommendations were adopted by the parties in a one-year agreement effective through June 30, 1971. (Lansing Board of Education and Lansing Schools Education Association, Michigan Employment Relations Commission, October 8, 1970.)

FACULTY UNIT AT ONE MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY COLLEGE FOUND INAPPROPRIATE

A petition for an election in a unit of some 220 teaching personnel in all academic ranks employed at one Michigan State University (MSU) college was rejected by the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) as insufficiently different from the approximately 1,800 teaching personnel employed at 14 other MSU colleges. Citing its decision in Wayne State University Board of Governors (NRD, 3-70, 7), the MERC pointed out that "the record must show that the sought-for unit has inherent cohesiveness, that is, an internal community of interest among the employees in the proposed unit, and a cleavage between the community of interest of those employees and all other employees of the employer."

In seeking an election, the University College chapter–MSU District, Michigan Association for Higher Education argued that a unit of University College faculty was appropriate because the college "enrolls and is responsible for the academic progress of substantially all freshmen and sophomores in the University" and offers four courses required as a condition of graduation for most all students. Moreover, it maintains a department which provides testing services for other MSU colleges and is one of the few colleges which does not grant a degree. The Association additionally noted that the MSU catalog and other publications refer to University College as a separate college, that the college has its own quarterly journal, and that it has established a set of bylaws governing its internal procedures.

In opposition, the American Association of University Professors, MSU Chapter, and MSU itself argued that the only appropriate unit would be a university-wide unit of teaching personnel.

According to the MERC, the college's bylaws "refer primarily to intra-college matters and are authorized and controlled by the bylaws of the University." College faculty members are subject to uniform MSU salary scales and fringe benefits, and "many aspects of academic policy, admissions, evaluations, counseling, allocation of equipment and classroom space are administered centrally for the University." Moreover, the MSU president and board of trustees must authorize decisions regarding hiring, promoting, and the granting of tenure, and university-wide faculty committees handle major curriculum, tenure, faculty, and educational policy matters. Finally, the MSU budget is centrally prepared and managed, and monies are allocated by the legislature to MSU, rather than individual colleges.

While "dual levels of administrative authority" reflecting "significant departmental freedom in many areas" were evident here, the MERC emphasized that "centralized authority and control is retained" by MSU. Unable to "discover factors that will create a cognizable line of demarcation between the employees in the proposed unit and the balance of the faculty," the MERC rejected the petition. NEW YORK

EMPLOYER'S REFUSAL TO EXECUTE WELFARE FUND PROVISION CONSTITUTES AN IMPROPER PRACTICE

In response to an improper practices charge brought by the New Rochelle Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, against the New Rochelle school district, the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) held that the district's refusal to execute a negotiated contract containing a welfare fund provision constituted a lack of good-faith bargaining. Although the district questioned the intent and meaning of the provision and felt that it was illegal, the PERB ruled that once an agreement is reached the parties are mandated "to execute a written agreement incorporating the terms and conditions negotiated." The PERB thereby reversed the findings of a hearing officer.

Negotiation of a 1969-70 contract proceeded through the spring of 1969, but when no agreement had been reached by June 12, district teachers engaged in a five-day work stoppage. During the strike, the parties continued "lengthy and intensive" negotiation of several unresolved items, one of which was a "union welfare trust fund." Early on the morning of June 18 the parties reached a package settlement including a welfare fund proposal which the district's chief negotiator had agreed to and initialed. The strike ended, and the parties agreed that their chief negotiators would meet in July to incorporate their agreement into a final contract for execution. The welfare fund clause read:

> The Board will provide $60.00 per teacher per year toward the purchase of welfare benefits. Said moneys are to be paid to a trust fund similar to those established for Yonkers and Mt. Vernon teachers.
> In the event the establishment of such a fund is judicially declared unlawful, then said moneys shall be used to purchase benefits from an insurance carrier licensed to do business in the State of New York and a committee consisting of an equal number of members designated by the Board and the Union shall determine the kind and the nature of the benefits. In the event of an impasse, the matter shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedures set forth in this agreement.

At a July 23 meeting of the parties, the district stated that it would not accept the proposed declaration of trust submitted by the union owing to disagreement about the nature of the Yonkers trust fund. Furthermore, it maintained that it would not sign the negotiated agreement until the union would agree to a collateral agreement which specifically would limit the use to be made of district monies paid into the welfare fund.

The district also questioned the legality of the fund without the collateral agreement and submitted the proposed declaration of trust to the state education department for an opinion. Counsel to the state education department responded that the "transmittal of public funds pursuant to the proposed union welfare trust fund agreement would constitute a gift or loan of public funds and is therefore prohibited by Art. VIII, § 1 of the State Constitution."

On September 8, 1969, the union entered its improper practices charge alleging that the district had violated portions of the state's Taylor Law by refusing to execute a negotiated agreement. At a subsequent hearing, the hearing officer noted that the parties eventually reached agreement on a declaration of trust and a collateral agreement limiting the use of monies paid into the fund and executed the contract on February 9, 1970. Included in this contract was the original welfare fund proposal. He concluded that the district had not refused to negotiate in good faith and that the charge should be dismissed in its entirety since the district's chief negotiator believed the fund would be illegal without the collateral agreement, the meaning of the welfare fund provision was unclear, and the district "at no time withdrew its commitment to provide the agreed upon funds for the purchase of welfare benefits."

The PERB, however, pointed out that "the whole structure of collective negotiations depends upon the incorporating into a written agreement of all of the terms and conditions of employment agreed upon by the parties during the course of collective negotiations." The district's reliance upon the opinion of counsel to the state education department "would not appear to preclude the signing of the negotiated agreement or even excuse a refusal to sign [since] . . . the welfare trust fund [provision] contained an alternative procedure to provide welfare benefits if the establishment of the fund was 'declared unlawful.'"

Moreover, the PERB found that if the negotiated Yonkers agreement > placed limitations upon the use of the money contributed to the fund by the employer, it would appear unlikely that the Declaration of Trust would not reflect such limitations and the trust fund proposed here was identical to the one in Yonkers. In any event, the agreement reached between the parties here provided that the New Rochelle Teachers trust fund would be similar to the trust fund in Yonkers, thus the implementation of the agreement here would appear to require a trust fund similar in all respects to the fund in Yonkers.

While negotiation here reached a "crisis point," the PERB concluded that an agreement reached under stress > may not be reneged on or subject to second thoughts prior to its incorporation into a written contract. Otherwise, collective negotiations would be unending if not meaningless. In fairness, we must state that we do not accuse [the district] of willful bad faith. However, the fact remains that the parties reached agreement during collective negotiations, which agreement was not incorporated into a written contract until sometime subsequent to the filing of charges herein.

>
> Section 209-a of the Act under which the improper practice charge herein was filed did not become effective until September 1, 1969. Therefore, the initial refusal of [the district] prior to the date to execute the contract herein did not constitute a violation. However, the evidence establishes the fact that subsequent to September 1, the [union] did make repeated demands that [the district] execute the contract agreed upon. We find that the refusal of the [district] to accede to this demand did constitute a refusal to negotiate in good faith. In fashioning a remedy we realize that the parties have signed a final agreement and . . . [the district] has accepted the proposed declaration of trust. Therefore, no remedial order would appear to be required. However, we do make a finding of a violation here to indicate . . . to all public employers and employee organizations generally that the Act mandates that both . . . organizations involved are under a solemn duty to execute a written agreement incorporating the terms and conditions negotiated.

Negotiation Notes

MASSACHUSETTS

NEGOTIATED ECONOMIC ITEMS ALONE ARE SUBJECT TO REVIEW BY LOCAL LEGISLATIVE BODIES

A town manager's unilateral institution of personnel policies and practices in breach of a collective agreement and upon the rejection of budgetary amounts requested to effectuate that agreement "clearly manifested" a violation of the Massachusetts Municipal Employee Relations Act, according to the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC). The statute provides that if funds requested for implementation of a written agreement are rejected by the legislative body, "the matter shall be returned to the parties for further bargaining." It was not intended to mean > that the legislative body of the municipality should have the right to veto in its entirety a valid collective bargaining contract. . . . We must take a pragmatic approach—only those items of the contract which are economic, i.e., require implementation by the appropriation of funds are subject to the review of the legislative body. . . . We are dealing with municipalities with a budget-making process that is geared to a tax rate. The responsible individuals on the management side do not possess the discretion required in the private sector relative to the raising of money. Therefore, it is incomprehensible to us to destroy the entire contract and voiding all of the noneconomic items agreed upon, where a legislative body has not seen fit to adopt the economic package agreed upon.

When the funds necessary to fully implement salary increases and adjustments under an agreement between the town of Saugus and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 262, were reduced by the Town Meeting in the spring of 1970, the new town manager considered the contract a nullity. Despite lengthy past practice and the terms of the current and previous agreements, he unilaterally increased the working hours of clerical employees and denied them increased vacation time. The MLRC held that such > a labor relations policy . . . is aimed at defeating and destroying the Union as the collective bargaining agent of these employees. [The town manager] has had a long career in the labor relations field in the private sector . . . [and] has the expertise coupled with the technical statutory requirements relating to municipal finance and appropriation to engage in a sublime plan to create protracted litigation and labor dispute, the practical consequences of which will be to frustrate these employees in their guaranteed rights under this Statute.

> [The town manager] . . . by his action and conduct has clearly manifested a violation of the collective bargaining law Section 178L, section (1) by interfering with, restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights under the Statute; (2) dominating or interfering with the formation, existence or administration of any employee organization and (4) refusing to bargain collectively in good faith with the exclusive representative of employees in an appropriate unit.

The MLRC ordered the city to cease and desist from refusing to bargain collectively with the union, immediately effectuate all noneconomic portions of the negotiated agreement, and "reimburse, compensate, or otherwise make whole by compensation, payment for the harm suffered by clerical employees in the deprivation and loss of time and extra vacation leave" as provided in the agreement. Moreover, the city was to engage in good-faith bargaining with the union in regard to the economic items reduced by the Town Meeting, with such items becoming retroactively effective on January 1, 1970.

MICHIGAN

PUBLIC EMPLOYER MUST BARGAIN BEFORE SUBCONTRACTING UNIT WORK

A Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) trial examiner held that a union "should have the right to bargain with the employer in cases where a public employer feels it must contract out the unit work because there are no available unit employees for the vacant jobs." While the Lenawee County Road Commission could have eliminated three vacant janitor-watchman positions without bargaining with the International Union of District 50, its unilateral decision to subcontract the work was a violation of its duty to bargain. Moreover, this action left the union in "the unusual position of having the right to bargain concerning the wages, hours and other conditions of employment of janitor-watchman one day and not the next, with the same work still being done." The examiner concluded that the union should at least know, in advance of subcontracting, that their contractual right to bargain for unit work may be curtailed or ended. The employer should bargain prior to subcontracting existing unit work because such a basic union right of representation cannot be changed, altered, or eliminated by unilateral action. If the public employer wants the right to subcontract work without first bargaining with the union . . . then the employer should put such an agreement in the contract itself.

When Lenawee County found that it could not fill the janitor-watchmen positions and that the work would have to be contracted out, the union should have been contacted and told of the problem. If the problem remained after bargaining, the employer could still subcontract in order to get the job done. The union would at least have had an opportunity to know and find out why their contractual right to bargain for the work of janitor-watchman might be, or would be, altered or abrogated.

The MERC subsequently agreed with the examiner's findings and sustained his order that the road commission invite the union to bargain the return of janitor-watchman duties to bargaining unit employees "or explain why such work should not or cannot be done by public employees represented by District 50." In addition, the commission was ordered to take measures aimed at returning the work to bargaining unit employees at the end of contracts with private companies performing the subcontracted work.

ELECTOR'S RIGHT TO FILE CHARGES UPHELD BUT CASE REMANDED FOR LACK OF DUE PROCESS

The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part a circuit court decision (NRD, 3-70, 5) which found that a strike-ending amnesty agreement negotiated under the state's bargaining statute barred the Madison Board of Police and Fire Commissioners from taking disciplinary action against striking firemen. While not reaching the question of whether the board was bound by the amnesty agreement between the city and the International Association of Fire Fighters, Local 311, "since the facts of this case do not dictate such a decision," the high court in effect upheld the circuit court's reversal of a board order to suspend a fire captain (respondent in the case) for his "contumacious conduct" during the strike.

However, the state supreme court reversed that part of the lower court's judgment which ordered the Madison fire department to reinstate respondent and pay him as though he had been in continuous service. The court found that respondent originally had been denied due process during board proceedings resulting in his suspension and accordingly remanded the case to the board for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

One other issue upon which the state supreme court ruled was whether an amnesty agreement "abrogates the statutory right of an elector to file a complaint" with the board. That is, the complaint against respondent here was brought by a city elector, despite the fact that the board had inquired into the firemen's conduct during the strike and chosen not to bring any charges and despite the amnesty agreement. In that agreement the city agreed to dismiss all legal proceedings against the union and its members, "waive all other causes of action arising out of the negotiations or the strike, and . . . refrain from directly or indirectly commencing an action that would in any way discipline any employee for participation in the strike." The court pointed out that the amnesty agreement > specifically refers to proceedings commenced by the City and to causes of action by the City. The filing of a complaint by an elector with the Board constituted neither. . . . It is the contention of the [board] that the processing of the elector's complaint by the [board] constitutes the City indirectly commencing an action to discipline the [fire captain]. However, the elector has a statutory right to file charges and if the city council could somehow foreclose the right of the Board to process charges filed by the elector, it follows that the lawful right of an elector to file charges . . . would be rendered meaningless. . . . [H]aving determined that the city council cannot enter into an agreement which would foreclose an elector from filing charges with the Board, we do not reach the question of whether the Board is bound by the contract between the City and the Union.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, JANUARY 1971

Figures reported by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), indicated that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items index rose 0.1 percent in January to 119.2 of the 1967 base which became effective that month (NRD, 3-70, 19). The January figure placed the index 5.2 percent above that of a year ago, reportedly the smallest 12-month rise since March 1969.

BLS noted that the prices of food purchased in grocery stores declined somewhat in January, while the prices of food consumed away from home rose more than in recent months. On a seasonally adjusted basis, nonfood commodity prices rose "at a slower pace in January primarily because of declines for apparel commodities and used cars." New car prices, on the other hand, rose for the second consecutive month instead of registering the usual seasonal decline. According to BLS, consumer services charges "continued their uptrend in January despite a substantial drop in mortgage interest rates . . . [and] the rate of increase in transportation service prices accelerated sharply . . . primarily because of a substantial rise in auto insurance premiums." Prices for medical services advanced 0.6 percent that month.

An estimated 67,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based upon the January CPI.

SCHOOL BOARD EMPLOYEES RECOVER OVERTIME WAGES UNDER FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Central office employees of the Chicago education board who brought a class action to recover overtime wages and liquidated damages under sec. 216(b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) were granted relief by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. Citing Maryland v. Wirtz (NRD, 11-68, A-7) in which the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the constitutionality of amendments to the FLSA which brought school boards within the definition of "employer" and school-board employees within the overtime provision, the federal appeals court ruled:

> We fail to see how the Board, after the Supreme Court decision in Maryland v. Wirtz . . . and after receiving the October 18 bulletin [of the Wage and Hour Administrator which rescinded former "tentative" opinions that central office school employees "would not seem to be within the coverage" of the FLSA], can be held to have reasonable grounds for believing that it was not in violation of the Act. Its obligation to pay the overtime, at least from October 18, was clearly established by the Administrator's bulletin and must have been clear to the Board, even if it was in the midst of litigation for periods prior to that date.

In reversing a federal district court's judgment, the appellate court ruled that plaintiffs were entitled to the recovery of overtime wages since February 1, 1967, the effective date of amendments to the FLSA; the district court had held that the Chicago board was liable only for overtime wages after the October 18, 1968, bulletin of the Wage and Hour Administrator. The appellate court additionally held that plaintiffs were entitled to liquidated damages after October 18, 1968, because the board "had no good reason for believing it was not in violation of the Act by refusing to pay overtime." Sec. 216(b) of the FLSA provides that liquidated damages in an amount equal to the overtime claimed automatically are awarded as a penalty for wrongful failure to pay overtime.

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: PUPIL TESTING PROCEDURES AND PROGRAMS

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 28 agreements (2.9 percent) with provisions concerning pupil testing procedures and programs. These provisions generally were subsections of other negotiated articles dealing with working conditions, noninstructional duties, special education programs, and integration policies. Moreover, they usually singled out a particular aspect of the testing program and established regulations governing it.

Table 1 indicates the frequency with which various subjects relative to pupil testing programs were negotiated. Categories listed in the table are not mutually exclusive, and the analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements; no attempt is made to cross-reference the analyzed provisions with other negotiated content which indirectly may affect pupil testing procedures and programs. Many of the sample provisions reprinted here represent only portions of negotiated articles because peripheral and/or unrelated subject matter has been deleted.

TABLE 1.—PUPIL TESTING PROCEDURES AND PROGRAMS, 28 PERTINENT PROVISIONS, 1968-69

A majority of the provisions (64.3 percent) concerned the regular program for testing pupils' academic aptitude and achievement through the use of tests identified as "standardized," intelligence, aptitude, achievement, and regular classroom tests. Prior to effecting the program, one provision involved the staff in determining the schedule by which standardized tests would be given during the ensuing year:

Teachers shall be consulted at the building level and teacher recommendations shall be considered in the development of testing schedules so that the test results can be used to maximum advantage by the classroom teachers. (Plainview, New York)

Regulations governing the scheduling of regular classroom tests and standardized tests were provided in two clauses as follows:

Regularly scheduled testing shall be set for a time which will be least disruptive to the instructional program. (Clintondale, Michigan)

* * *

Tests should be staggered so that several are not planned for the same day. This would hold particularly true in the high school classes where teachers might not be too aware of what other teachers are doing. An extra effort would have to be made here to coordinate testing. (Richfield Springs, New York)

Only two provisions included information concerning the personnel who administered the tests. One stated that "trained testing personnel shall be used to their best advantage. In-service training shall be provided for training of teachers for both classroom and standardized testing" (Clintondale, Michigan). The second clause provided in part that teachers "assist in the administration of objective tests during the school day" (Rye, New York).

The most commonly negotiated item concerning testing was the scoring or grading of tests. Of the 14 provisions (50.0 percent) which indicated who scored the tests or how they were scored, 10 stated that various standardized tests would be machine scored; one of these specifically stated that teachers would not be involved in the process and one provided paraprofessional aid. Of the remaining four provisions, three stated that tests variously were scored by paraprofessionals, by teachers, and by a so-called Directorate of Pupil Personnel Services, and one provision stated only that teachers would not score tests. Sample provisions concerning the scoring of both standardized and regular classroom tests are:

Each teacher will be responsible to grade, mark or return all test and homework assignments required from the students. (Fallsburgh, New York)

* * *

Schoolwide testing programs shall, whenever possible, be limited to machine graded tests. (Rolling Hills, Ohio)

* * *

Teachers will not be required to perform the following duties: (5) Scoring of tests where machine scoring is feasible. (Bristol, Rhode Island)

* * *

All standardized tests given system-wide shall be machine scored or scored by teacher aides. (Ashland, Wisconsin)

Only two provisions indicated guidelines for interpreting and utilizing pupil test results:

The improvement of instruction and the proper evaluation of each student necessitates the meaningful interpretation of subject matter and standardized test results by the teacher. (Dunkirk, New York)

* * *

In professional conferences with guidance counselors teachers on the secondary level shall be informed as to test scores of achievement tests, differential aptitude tests, Otis Group Intelligence tests, college qualifying tests, and minimum competency tests. (Yonkers, New York)

Of the six provisions which mandated the study of and/or changes in the testing program, four were related to the regular testing program under existing school conditions, and two others concerned integration policies. One clause provided that "a Clintondale Testing Committee shall continue to evaluate the testing program periodically" (Clintondale, Michigan). Another provision indicated that the evaluation of tests might occur when school programs in general were evaluated with the aid of teachers. Examples of provisions referring to the evaluation of testing programs and the elimination of certain standardized tests are:

Teachers shall be required to serve on revision and evaluation committees (report cards, testing, curriculum, textbooks). Contributions in these areas made by the teachers shall be noted in their personal files. (Dunkirk, New York)

* * *

The Massapequa-Berner standardized examinations shall be eliminated upon establishment of agreed-on guidelines to replace them, after approval by a subcommittee of the EAC which subcommittee shall make its report by November 1, 1968. (Massapequa, New York)

In addition to the provisions dealing with the school's regular testing program, eight provisions concerned other school programs such as the placement of pupils in special education programs and integration policies. All of the agreements referring to psychological tests stated that such tests would be administered to pupils with suspected emotional problems which might necessitate their placement in special education classes, but they were in no case to be administered to all pupils across the board. Two clauses providing for the use of tests in identifying and placing special pupils are:

The parties, accordingly, will cooperate to increase the psychological testing program, and to correlate their activities with the regular classroom activities of the teachers so as better to meet the needs of special students in the community. (Athens, Michigan)

* * *

Requests of teachers that certain students be tested will be formally processed on forms prescribed by the board. No such teacher request will be disregarded. Teachers will be informed of the psychologists' recommendations. The Administration shall make such arrangements as may be necessary to insure that psychological testing of students is accomplished, as soon as possible, when requested. (Lake Orion, Michigan)

Two of the analyzed provisions reconsidered the character of regularly administered achievement and intelligence tests in light of integration policies. Both provisions called for the review and revision of these tests in order to eliminate cultural bias:

There shall be a complete review and revision wherever necessary of the existing testing program in an effort to eliminate culturally biased tests. (Detroit, Michigan)

* * *

Currently our students are subjected to class-oriented achievement and intelligence test programs. The Federation calls for a complete revision of the existing testing program which will take into account culturally different students. (Inkster, Michigan)

NATIONAL SURVEY OF WHITE-COLLAR PAY JUNE 1970

Salary increases in white-collar occupations registered an average 6.2 percent increase between 1969 and 1970 and represented the largest advance for any year of the 10 years that the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) has surveyed the salaries of selected professional, administrative, technical, and clerical personnel in private industry. The 1969 to 1970 figure was up from the 5.7 percent average increase reported between 1968 and 1969. As indicated in Table 1, increases in nine of the 11 professional, administrative, and technical support occupations ranged from 5.5 percent to 7.4 percent, while the average increase for all such occupations was 6.2 percent. In the clerical occupations, the overall average also was 6.2 percent, while eight of the nine job categories advanced between 5.5 percent and 6.4 percent.

[a]Comparable data not available for both years.

[b]Comparison over this period was not possible because of changes in the definition of the occupation.

[c]Not surveyed.

[d]First surveyed in 1962; therefore, the average annual rate of increase relates to the 1962 to 1970 period.

[e]Data for one administrative occupation, managers of office services last surveyed in 1968, and one clerical occupation, bookkeeping-machine operators last surveyed in 1964, not shown above, are included in the average percent increases for the periods during which they were surveyed.

The BLS survey "provides nationwide salary averages and distributions for 81 work level categories covering 13 broad occupational groups" which account for nearly one-fourth of the estimated total employment in professional, administrative, clerical, and related occupations in all establishments within the scope of the survey. Its coverage includes "establishments in all areas of the United States except Alaska and Hawaii in the following industries: manufacturing; transportation, communication, electric, gas, and sanitary services; wholesale trade; retail trade, finance, insurance, and real estate; engineering and architectural services; and research, development, and testing laboratories operated on a commercial basis." According to BLS, "the minimum size of establishment requirements varied by industry division roughly equalizing minimum size scope in terms of white-collar employment. These requirements ranged from 50 employees in the finance, insurance, and real estate division, which is almost entirely composed of white-collar workers, to 250 employees in the manufacturing and retail trade divisions."

While the survey covers both metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas, BLS pointed out that about 80 percent of total employment and approximately 90 percent of employment in professional, administrative, clerical, and related occupations within the survey's scope was accounted for by establishments located in metropolitan areas. Moreover, nearly 90 percent of the employees in the selected occupations were employed in metropolitan areas.

Table 2 presents monthly and annual salary data for selected professional, administrative, technical, and clerical occupations surveyed between 1969 and 1970. As indicated, the average monthly salaries for the 81 occupational levels varied from a low of $343 for clerks engaged in routine filing work to a high of $2,753 for the top level in the attorney series. In engineering, the largest professional occupation surveyed, average monthly salaries ranged from $851 for recent graduates employed in trainee positions to $2,116 for the highest level of engineers, whose responsibilities typically could include direction of highly complex and diversified engineering programs comprised of many large and important projects. The four keypunch supervisor levels were new to the survey in 1970 and indicated an average salary of $574 per month at the lowest level and $824 per month at the highest level. Keypunch workers were classified according to a combination of their level of supervisory responsibility, the difficulty of the keypunch work supervised, and the number of employees supervised. BLS noted that most all salary levels in metropolitan areas and large establishments were higher than in all establishments within the scope of the survey. In addition, salary levels in finance and the retail trade industries generally were lower than in the other major industry divisions surveyed.

Within each occupation indicated in Table 2, employees were classified according to appropriate work levels or classes which were defined in terms of duties and responsibilities. The Roman numeral I is assigned to the lowest level within an occupational class. Most of the occupational definitions used in the survey were graded by the U.S. Civil Service Commission in accordance with standards established for each grade under the Federal Classification Act. The equivalent classification grade for each work level surveyed and graded is identified in the final survey report.

While the BLS survey originally was designed to compare federal and private pay, it is used as a benchmark by business, labor unions, professional societies, trade associations, schools, and state and local government agencies. Moreover, it is a basic reference source for salary administrators, recruiters, educators, career counselors, employee placement workers, and planners. Copies of BLS Bulletin No. 1693, entitled National Survey of Professional, Administrative, Technical, and Clerical Pay, June 1970, may be obtained at $1 each from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

[a]Industries covered are: manufacturing; transportation, communication, electric, gas, and sanitary services; wholesale trade; retail trade, finance, insurance, and real estate; engineering and architectural services; and research, development, and testing laboratories operated on a commercial basis.

[b]Changes in average salaries reflect not only general salary increases and merit or other increases given to individuals while in the same work level category, but they also may reflect other factors such as employee turnover, expansions or reductions in the work force, and changes in staffing patterns within establishments with different salary levels. Occupations most likely to reflect such changes in the salary averages are the higher levels of professional and administrative occupations and single-incumbent positions such as chief accountant and director of personnel.

[c]Occupational employment estimates relate to the total in all establishments within scope of the survey and not to the number actually surveyed.

[d]Salaries reported relate to the standard salaries that were paid for standard work schedules; i.e., the straight-time salary corresponding to the employee's normal work schedule excluding overtime hours. Nonproduction bonuses are excluded, but cost-of-living payments and incentive earnings are included.

[e]The middle range (interquartile) used here is the central part of the array excluding the upper and lower fourths of the employee distribution.

[f]Not surveyed in 1969.

BRIEFS OF RECENT AGREEMENTS

Scottsdale, Arizona

Between Scottsdale Elementary District No. 48 and Scottsdale High School District No. 212 and the Scottsdale Education Association, effective October 15, 1970, to October 15, 1971. Approximately 1,222 certificated professional employees. Provision for automatic renewal of agreement unless either party notifies the other in writing no later than six months prior to October 15 of a desire to reopen the agreement.

Compensation: (stated as an index of B.A. base which is 1.00) B.A., $6,350 (1.00) to $9,779 (1.54), 9 increments; B.A. plus 15 hours, $10,414 (1.64) maximum; M.A., $6,858 (1.08) to $11,811 (1.86), 12 increments; M.A. plus 45 hours, $13,811 (2.175) maximum; Ph.D., $14,891 (2.345) maximum; summer school teachers, $104 per week for elementary teachers with 16 hours of class per week and 5 weeks of classes, and $130 per week for secondary teachers with 20 hours of class per week and 8 weeks of classes. Differentials: (stated as a percentage of the M.A. minimum where indicated) high-school head football coach, $822.96 (.12 of M.A. minimum); high-school head track, wrestling, and baseball coaches, $617.22 (.09 of M.A. minimum); elementary-school coaches, $150 per sport; high-school varsity choral and drama directors, $685.80 (.10 of M.A. minimum); high-school yearbook and newspaper advisors, and driver education coordinator, $342.90 (.05 of M.A. minimum); high-school department chairmen receive $342.90 to $1,028.70 (.05 to .15 of M.A. minimum according to the number of teachers supervised) and a daily department period in the larger departments. Extra-duty pay of $3.50 per hour with minimums and maximums placed upon certain events and activities. Three separate schedules for financing various athletic activities which set forth the jobs required (e.g., timers, announcers, ticket takers, photographers, scorekeepers, student control personnel, scouts), the maximum number of personnel to be hired in each position, the rate of compensation, and the rate of compensation per activity "level" (i.e., varsity, junior varsity, sophomore, freshman).

Leaves: 10 days' annual sick leave credited at the beginning of the school year, unlimited maximum accumulation; 5 days for bereavement leave or a serious illness in the immediate family deducted from sick leave; 2 separate days' leave for school and classroom visitation, participation on educational panels, lectures, and graduate testing; time as needed for professional conference leave; sabbatical leave at half-pay for an undefined length of time after 7 years' service.

Insurance: Board-paid medical insurance program for individual coverage, with employee paying dependent coverage if desired; board provides a life insurance policy for individual coverage.

Instruction: Within funding limitations, every effort will be made to limit elementary and secondary classes to 30 students, and secondary teachers shall have a daily pupil contact rate of no more than 150 pupils; academic freedom "shall be guaranteed to teachers in order to create in the classroom an atmosphere of freedom, which permits students to raise questions dealing with critical issues of the time and which maintains an atmosphere conducive to the study, investigation, presentation, and interpretation of facts which stress the interplay of ideas"; provision calling for a comprehensive study of differentiated staffing; provision encouraging the use of students as "teacher assistants" (see following provision reprint); any review of, or major alterations or additions to curriculum shall result from the efforts of a joint committee which may include lay and student representatives.

Personnel: Effective August 15, 1970, grievance procedure ends with the submission of the recommendations of a jointly selected, three-member advisory committee to the board for final action; teacher has right to review personnel file and respond to any locally originating material before placement therein; every effort will be made to provide a duty-free lunch period of no less than 30 minutes for all teachers, as well as a 50-minute daily preparation period for elementary teachers, and a 55-minute daily preparation period for secondary teachers; a principal equitably may assign teachers to cover a class on a temporary emergency basis, but a teacher may refuse that assignment if it will interfere with "necessary preparation for classes immediately following the preparation period"; provision for teacher involvement in the staff selection process (see following provision reprint); probationary teachers shall be evaluated no less than twice per year, and tenure teachers shall be evaluated once per year; elementary grade level chairmen are to be appointed by the principal from a list of candidates recommended by teachers of an appropriate level, while high-school department chairmen shall be appointed by the principal from recommended candidates screened and selected by department members; involuntary transfers may be grieved; industrial arts, home economics, and women physical education teachers are to meet with the principals of their schools at a general meeting in May of the preceding school year "to assure they carry no larger load in subject area assignment, professional meetings, and community activities than the teacher assigned to one school" and are given no duty assignments except those related to their subject areas; professional growth requirement that 3 semester hours of credit be earned every 3 years; teachers may be granted 3 professional growth credits for each year of participation on the negotiation commission, 3 credits for each year of participation as president of a recognized teachers organization, and 3 credits for an accepted contribution to the literature of the profession; a Professional Growth Advisory Committee composed of the superintendent, one elementary and one secondary principal or assistant principal, 2 district administrators, 3 elementary teachers, and 2 high school teachers shall meet at least 3 times per school year (September, January, and May) to advise teachers on requests for interpretation of the professional growth plan, consider requests to depart from the plan's requirements, suggest additional professional growth activities, make recommendations to the superintendent for final approval, and prepare necessary informational bulletins.

Staff Selection

A. The classroom teaching staff of the school district represents a rich source of guidance and assistance in the recruiting, selection, and placement of new staff members.

B. Therefore, recruiting and interviewing of potential certificated employees shall, wherever possible, be done by a screening team including representative classroom teachers, department chairmen, and principals. For high school candidates, the department chairman shall assist the principal in selection and placement. For elementary school candidates, the appropriate grade level chairman shall assist the principal in selection and placement.

C. Further development of this concept of staff selection and placement will occur in the study of the feasibility of differentiated staffing. (Scottsdale, Arizona)

Student Use

A. High School. Students who are used as teacher assistants can gain much, both educationally and in appreciation of the teacher's role. These students may be capable of assisting others to learn through reading, preparation of learning materials, etc. Lab assistants, team managers, etc., are examples of advantageous use of students where opportunities can be offered to that student for important incidental learning.

B. Elementary School. The opportunities for using students, particularly in the upper grades, to assist other children in the learning process should be encouraged. Such activities as reading for appreciation to lower grade children, assisting in the library, serving as P.E. assistants and team managers are useful. Every effort should be made to limit the use of students for non-learning activities. (Scottsdale, Arizona)

Park Forest, Illinois

Between School District No. 227 and the Rich Township High School Education Association, effective July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. Approximately 190 certificated professional employees. Provision for negotiation of a successor agreement which shall begin in January 1971.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for "unified teacher association dues"; no fewer than 3 Association representatives shall be relieved of all regular duties without loss of pay for attendance at negotiation meetings held during the school year.

Instruction: No teacher shall be assigned a total load of more than 125 pupils; provision for a maximum of 25 pupils per regular class and 20 pupils per special education class "wherever feasible"; provision for the continuance of a teacher aide program under the direction of the superintendent and with no fewer than 7 aides; secondary teachers shall not be required to teach more than 2 subject matter areas; secondary teachers are required to reserve 1 afternoon per week for giving students individual help for a period of 1 hour after the closing of the school day.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with the appeal to the state education commissioner, the state board, and the state supreme court for a final and binding decision pursuant to statute; teacher has right to review his personnel file and all personal evaluation reports prior to placement therein; where applicants for transfers or promotions are equally qualified, system seniority shall control; for all teachers a duty-free lunch period which shall be equal in length to that of the students; secondary teachers shall have no fewer than 5 planning periods per week; teachers "will be responsible to attend" regular monthly building and department meetings, as well as 2 evening meetings per year for open house or parent visitation; provision for the implementation of the following policies as long as no additional personnel and/or monetary expenditures are required: "No department chairman who has four (4) or more teachers in his or her department will teach more than sixteen (16) class hours per week. All department chairmen shall have a minimum of nine (9) unassigned class hours for departmental supervision and business."

SELECTED TEACHER PROTECTION PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN NEGOTIATED AGREEMENTS

Provisions pertinent to teacher protection—i.e., liability protection and procedures, protection from personal property loss or damage, employee injury benefits, and workmen's compensation—were found in 632 (64.6 percent) of the 978 comprehensive agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with an enrollment of 1,000 or more. As used here, the term "teacher protection" refers to a statement of board support of its employees in the event that any complaint, claim, action, or injury arises in connection with and out of their employment; such a statement may be supplemented by the more definitive supportive measures and provisions mentioned above. An analysis of the 632 pertinent provisions indicated that 127 agreements (20.1 percent) contained a combination of all of the elements mentioned, 63 provisions (10.0 percent) referred only to teacher protection, 37 (5.9 percent) dealt only with workmen's compensation benefits, and 12 provisions (1.9 percent) mentioned only property loss or damage. Table 1 indicates the nature of the teacher protection provisions analyzed.

Teacher protection provisions variously are negotiated as separate items, as sections of a student discipline provision, or as articles relative to liability insurance, employee injury benefits, or temporary or long-term disability leave. While they vary widely in scope, definition, and requirements, most recognize that to some extent a teacher should be guaranteed protection from threats, harassment, interference, or badgering by any group or individual, as well as personal assault, injury, or damage to property, and liability claims resulting from student injuries. However, such protection is applicable only to a teacher's actions within the scope of his employment, i.e., his involvement and activities during the regular school day, within or outside the school building, and his involvement in any other board-approved, school-related activities. Moreover, board fiscal support of a teacher in the event an action is brought usually is contingent upon the absence of negligence in the teacher's action and teacher compliance with board and/or negotiated rules and guidelines.

If a complaint is brought against a teacher by a student or parent, most provisions state that no action may be taken until the teacher is notified of the complaint in writing and/or has the opportunity to reply to the complaint at a hearing. In cases of a serious parental complaint, some agreements authorize the building principal to decide whether to involve the teacher. Many provisions state that if the complaint is to be inserted in the teacher's personnel file, the teacher shall have the right to submit a written response to the complaint.

Since parental complaints can result from disciplinary actions taken by a teacher, many agreements attempt to define carefully the nature of the limitations upon student discipline, procedures to be followed in dealing with disruptive students and chronic troublemakers, and parental involvement in the discipline process. It often is emphasized, however, that within the scope of his employment, a teacher may use such force as is reasonable and necessary to quell a disturbance which threatens physical injury to others, obtain possession of weapons or other dangerous objects, protect himself, and protect other persons or property.

Some systems indemnify their teachers against any damages, fines, legal fees, or other matters arising from the use specifically of corporal or other means of punishment according to board policy. Many other systems carry a more broadly based liability insurance which indemnifies teachers against personal responsibility for pupil injuries and protects the teachers themselves in the case of personal injuries sustained within the course of employment. In some instances, teachers are encouraged to provide their own comprehensive public liability insurance coverage by participating in Association- or board-sponsored plans.

In the event a civil or criminal suit or threat of the same is brought against a teacher, he promptly must submit a written report of the matter and/or deliver the original copy of the summons, complaint, or other legal paper to his immediate supervisor or the superintendent, who then will submit the matter to the school board. A similar procedure generally is to be followed in cases of personal assault, and some agreements require the written report to be dated and to set forth the full particulars of the incident. Most teacher protection provisions state that the board will render all reasonable assistance to the teacher and/or comply with any reasonable request for information relating to the incident or the people involved which is not privileged under the law; in addition, the board often will act as a liaison between the teacher, law enforcement officials, and the courts.

Many agreements state that the board will provide the teacher with legal counsel or reimburse him for his legal fees or a specified portion thereof in the event of a favorable judgment. If a teacher is found guilty of a criminal charge, he may be asked to reimburse the board for all costs expended in providing counsel, or all fiscal responsibility on the part of the board will be waived. Most provisions hold that a teacher involved in school-related legal proceedings shall suffer no loss of wages, leaves, or benefits.

Benefits adhering in the event of a school-related injury or disability generally are governed by state employee injury and/or workmen's compensation laws. As such, negotiated provisions variously allow leave at full salary for a period of three to six months (or until workmen's compensation payments begin), or at full salary less any workmen's compensation payments received for the period of the absence or for a period of up to one year. In general, the absence is not to be charged to any of the employee's leave accruals, and the employee will suffer no loss of benefits. In some agreements, the teacher is to be examined by a board-appointed doctor to determine the length of absence required by the disability; other agreements provide that the board may request periodic examinations during the absence. If the employee or the school system carries no insurance covering such school-related injuries, some provisions state that the board will pay all hospital, medical, and surgical costs.

Personal property which is lost or damaged on school duty, on school premises, or during school-related activities and in the absence of teacher negligence often is to be replaced by the board, or the teacher is to be reimbursed for the value of the property in amounts ranging up to $300. Articles which may be included within such coverage are books, clothing, glasses, dentures, hearing aids, and automobiles.

Examples of negotiated teacher protection provisions are reprinted below. These are sample provisions only; they are not intended to be regarded as exemplary.

Newtown Public Schools, Newtown, Connecticut

Article 17—Protection of Teachers

Teachers shall report immediately in writing to their principal and to the central office all cases of assault suffered by them in connection with their employment.

Such report shall be forwarded through the Superintendent to the Board which shall comply with any reasonable request from the teacher for information in its possession not privileged under law which relates to the incident or the persons involved.

The Board agrees to provide legal counsel to defend any teacher in any action arising out of any claim, demand, suit or judgment by reason of alleged negligence or other act resulting in accidental bodily injury to or death of any person, or in accidental damage to or destruction of property, within or without the school building, providing such teacher, at the time of the accident resulting in such injury, damage or destruction, was acting in the discharge of his duties within the scope of his employment or under the direction of the Board.

Whenever a teacher is absent from school as a result of personal injury compensable under Connecticut Workmen's Compensation Laws, and caused by an assault arising out of and in the course of his employment, be shall be paid his full salary for the period of such absence for up to one calendar year without having such absence charged to the annual sick leave or accumulated sick leave. Any amount of salary payable pursuant to this Section shall be reduced by the amount of any workmen's compensation award for temporary disability due to the said assault injury for the period for which such salary is paid. The Board shall have the right to have the teacher examined by a physician designated by the Board for the purpose of establishing the length of time during which the teacher is temporarily disabled from performing his duties; and, in the event that there is no adjudication in the appropriate workmen's compensation proceeding for the period of temporary disability, the opinion of the said physician as to the said period shall control.

Decatur School District No. 61, Decatur, Illinois

Article XV–Protection of Members of the Bargaining Unit

A. The Association recognizes that each member bears the primary responsibility for maintaining the proper control and discipline in the classroom and wherever else on duty. The Board hereby declares its full support of student disciplinary procedures and policies which are presently in effect and those procedures and policies which may hereafter be adopted by the Board in the matter of student discipline. The Board, the administration, and the members recognize a mutual responsibility for the enforcement of such policies and procedures.

B. The Board hereby agrees to indemnify and protect members against death and bodily injury and property damage claims and suits, including defense thereof, when damages are sought for negligent or wrongful acts alleged to have been committed in the scope of employment or under the direction of the Board. This indemnity shall include judgments, interest, court costs, reasonable attorney fees, and any costs necessarily expended in the defense of any suit heretofore described.

C. The Board does hereby agree to indemnify and protect members against the costs of defense of a criminal proceeding against any staff member by reason of any acts committed within the scope of employment of said member. The costs of defense shall include reasonable attorney fees and other costs necessarily expended in the defense of such criminal action. The indemnity stated in this paragraph shall not apply in the event the member is found guilty by a jury or court of the criminal charge brought against such member.

D. All members of the bargaining unit shall be protected against any harassment, interference, or badgering by any group or individual on the school premises. It shall be the responsibility of the building principal and the Superintendent of Schools to take whatever actions are deemed necessary to provide members adequate protection in such situations. This does not preclude the responsibility of the member to work with parents or guardians in resolving school problems.

E. In the event of an injury to a member of the bargaining unit while in the scope of his employment, the salary of such member shall continue in full, without reduction in accrued benefits, until

1. He is able to return to his full-time teaching duties, or
2. The end of the contract of employment of the member with the Board, or
3. Such member qualifies for disability or pension benefits under the Illinois Teachers retirement System, whichever event occurs first. In the event Workmen's Compensation is payable by reason of such injury, the salary of such injured member may be reduced by the amount of the temporary incapacity payments payable under Workmen's Compensation.

F. The general policy, subject to emergency exceptions, shall be that no action against a member of the bargaining unit may be taken on a complaint by a parent of a student, or student, unless such proposed action is first reported in writing to such member affected thereby and the member given an opportunity for a hearing before a representative of the Board concerning the complaint and action proposed to be taken thereon.

G. Any member of the bargaining unit absent from teaching duties by reason of any of the events set forth in Article XV shall be considered on leave of absence, provided, however, that such period of absence shall not exceed the time limitations as set forth in sub-paragraphs E and H of this Article.

H. Any reasonable time, when a member of the bargaining unit would otherwise be attending to his teaching duties, spent in the preparation of the defense, or attendance at a judicial hearing, pertaining to a civil or criminal charge described in paragraphs B and C of Article XV shall not result in a loss of salary or accrued benefits by such member.

Arlington School District, Arlington, Massachusetts

Article XX–Legal Assistance

A. Teachers will immediately report all cases of assault suffered by them in connection with their employment to their immediate supervisor and the Superintendent in writing.

B. This report will be forwarded to the Committee which will comply with any reasonable request from the teacher for information in its possession relating to the incident or the persons involved, and will act in appropriate ways as liaison between the teacher, the police, and the courts.

C. If criminal or civil proceedings are brought against a teacher alleging that he committed an assault within the scope of his employment, the Committee will furnish legal counsel to defend him in such proceeding if he requests such assistance and provided the Committee has legal authorization to employ such counsel. The rights of a teacher to indemnification in certain actions and claims, and to legal assistance will be governed by General Laws, Chapter 41, Section 100 (c).

Article XXI–Personal Injury Benefits

A. Whenever a teacher is absent from school as a result of a personal injury caused by an accident or an assault occurring within the scope of his employment, he will be paid his full salary (less the amount of any workmen's compensation award made for temporary disability due to said injury) for the period of such absence, and no part of such absence will be charged to his annual or accumulated sick leave.

B. The Committee will make every effort to reimburse teachers for:

1. Any clothing or other articles of personal adornment or educational equipment or material (authorized in writing by the immediate supervisor to be used) which is damaged or destroyed while acting within the scope of his employment, not to exceed the cost of $300. Within the limits set forth above, there is the intent to make the party whole for the replacement value of the article specified. In the event any losses covered by this section are also covered by insurance, the insurance money will first be applied to cover the replacement value and any deficiency or deductible on the insurance premium will then be covered by this section.

2. The cost of medical, surgical, or hospital services (less the amount of any insurance reimbursement) incurred as the result of any injury sustained within the scope of his employment.

Cheboygan Area Schools, Cheboygan, Michigan

Article XII–Protection of Teachers

A. Since the teacher's authority and effectiveness in his classroom is undermined when students discover that there is insufficient administrative backing and support of the teacher, the Board recognizes its responsibility to give all reasonable support and assistance to teachers with respect to the maintenance of control and discipline in the classroom. The Board further recognizes that the teacher may not fairly be expected to assume the role of warden or custodian for emotionally disturbed students nor to be charged with responsibility for psychotherapy. Whenever it appears that a particular pupil requires the attention of special counselors, social workers, law enforcement personnel, physicians or other professional persons, the Board will take reasonable steps to relieve the teacher of responsibilities with respect to such pupil.

B. Any case of assault upon a teacher shall be promptly reported to the Board or its designated representative. The Board may provide legal counsel to advise the teacher of his rights and obligations with respect to such assault and render reasonable assistance to the teacher in connection with the handling of the incident by law enforcement and judicial authorities, provided that it has determined that the teacher has acted within the scope of the Board policy.

C. If any teacher is complained against or sued by reason of disciplinary action taken by the teacher against a student, the Board may provide legal counsel to advise the teacher of his rights and obligations and render reasonable assistance to the teacher in connection with the handling of the incident by law enforcement and judicial authorities, provided that it has determined that the teacher has acted within the scope of the Board policy.

D. Time and money lost by a teacher in connection with any incident mentioned in this Article shall not be charged against the teacher, provided the teacher has acted in a professional and legal manner. The Board may provide legal counsel to advise the teacher of his rights and obligations and render reasonable assistance to the teacher provided that it has determined that the teacher has acted within the scope of the Board policy.

E. The Board will reimburse teachers for any loss, damage or destruction of clothing or personal property of the teacher (value of which is in excess of five dollars [$5.00] and less than one hundred dollars [$100.00] while engaged in assigned school business. If a teacher is injured arising out of, or in the course of his employment, free medical, surgical, or hospital care will be furnished by the Board at a designated hospital provided that the teacher does not have hospital or medical insurance which would cover his expenses.

F. Any complaints by a parent of a student directed toward a teacher shall be promptly called to the teacher's attention.

G. Teachers shall be expected to exercise reasonable care with respect to the safety of pupils and property, but shall not be individually liable, except in the case of negligence or neglect of duty, for any damage or loss to person or property.

Grand Ledge Public Schools, Grand Ledge, Michigan

Article XI–Protection of Teachers

A. LEGAL and PHYSICAL

1. Since the teacher's authority and effectiveness in his classroom is undermined if there is insufficient administrative backing and support of the teacher, the Board recognizes its responsibility to give all reasonable support and assistance to teachers with maintenance of control and discipline in the classroom.

2. Teachers are encouraged to provide for their protection comprehensive public liability insurance in an amount not less than $100,000.00 for each occurrence or accident, similar to protection provided its members by the MEA. Teachers who are not members of the MEA may pay for this protection under the broad liability policy carried by the Board of Education at a cost estimated to be $3.00 to $5.00 per year.

3. All cases of accidents, injury or assault involving teachers or students growing out of the exercise of teachers duties or school activities shall be reported to the principal promptly.

4. Complaints by parents or students directed toward a teacher shall immediately be called to the attention of the teacher, in writing, when such complaints are of a nature to be recorded in the personnel record or the subject of critical evaluation follow-up, and in the judgement of the principal such information will be of help to all concerned.

5. Teachers shall not be required to search for bombs when a building has been alerted for a "bomb scare". Teachers who volunteer for such activity, while others supervise students in approved locations, shall be covered by employee insurance.

West New York School District, West New York, New Jersey

Article XXVII–Protection of Teachers, Students and Property

A. A teacher may use reasonable force as is necessary to protect himself from attack, to protect another person or property, to quell a disturbance threatening physical injury to others, or to obtain possession of weapons or other dangerous objects upon the person or within control of a pupil.

B. Whenever any action is brought against a teacher before the Board or before the Commissioner of Education of the State of New Jersey which may affect his employment or salary status, the Board of Education shall reimburse him for the cost of his defense if the action is dismissed or results in a final decision in favor of the teacher.

C. 1. The Board shall give full support including legal and other assistance for any assault upon the teacher while acting in the discharge of his duties.

2. When absence arises out of or from such assault or injury, the teacher shall not forfeit any sick leave or personal leave.

3. Benefits derived under this or subsequent Agreements shall continue until the complete recovery of any teacher when absence arises out of or from assault or injury. During this period of absence the Board may request periodic examinations by the school physician.

D. 1. Teachers shall immediately report cases of assault suffered by them in connection with their employment to their principal or other immediate superior.

2. Such notification shall be immediately forwarded to the superintendent who shall comply with any reasonable request from the teacher for information in the possession of the superintendent relating to the incident or the persons involved, and shall act in appropriate ways as liaison between the teacher, the police, and the courts.

E. A school nurse shall be scheduled to be in each building for the entire school day.

F. The Board may reimburse teachers for any loss, damage, or destruction of clothing or personal property of the teacher while on duty in the school, on the school premises, or on a school-sponsored activity.

G. The Board may reimburse a teacher for the cost of medical, surgical or hospital services (less the amount of any insurance reimbursement) incurred as the result of any injury sustained in the course of his employment.

Plattsburgh City School District, Plattsburgh, New York

Article XXIII–Teacher Protection

Teachers will immediately report assault and harrassment suffered by them in connection with their employment to their principal or immediate supervisor, in writing. This report will be forwarded to the Assistant to the Superintendent for Business Affairs who will comply with any reasonable request from the teacher for information in his possession relating to the incident or the person involved.

The School District agrees to hold teachers harmless from any financial loss, including reasonable attorneys' fees arising out of any claim, demand, suit or judgement by reason of any act or omission to act by such teacher within or without the school building, provided such teacher, at the time of the act or omission complained of, was acting in the discharge of his duties within the scope of his employment or under the direction of the School District. This shall include financial loss resulting to a teacher from taking students on trips authorized by the administration or the School District, provided the teacher was acting in the discharge of his duties within the scope of his employment. Teachers shall notify the Assistant to the Superintendent for Business Affairs of any accident or claim against them which might be covered by this section within ten (10) days after the accident occurs or the teacher knows of the claim. In addition, a teacher shall not be entitled to the protection of this article unless within ten (10) days of the time he is served with any summons, complaint, process, notice, demand, or pleading, he shall deliver the original or a copy thereof to the Assistant for Business Affairs.

Article XXIV–Personal Injury Benefits

A. Whenever a teacher is absent from his employment and unable to perform his duties as a result of personal injury caused by an accident or an assault occurring in the course of his employment and received workman's compensation payments for such absence, he will be paid his full salary during his absence from employment (less the amount of any workman's compensation award made for temporary disability due to said injury) and no part of such absence will be charged to his annual or accumulated sick leave.

B. The School District shall reimburse teachers for reasonable costs of replacing or repairing dentures, eyeglasses, hearing aids, or similar bodily appurtenances not covered by workman's compensation which are damaged, destroyed, or lost as a result of an injury sustained in the course of the teacher's employment.

C. The School District will reimburse teachers for reasonable cost of any clothing or other personal property damaged or destroyed as a result of an assault suffered by a teacher while the teacher was acting in the discharge of his duties within the scope of his employment.

Arlington County School District, Arlington, Virginia

Article 13–Disability Leave

All permanent and probationary unit members and limited term employees who are eligible for sick leave and who are temporarily disabled in line of duty receive full pay for the period of disability without charge against their annual or sick leave, subject to the following conditions:

1. Provided that the disability resulted from an injury or illness sustained directly in the performance of the employee's work, as provided in the State Workman's Compensation Act.
2. If incapacitated for his regular assignment, the employee may be given other duties with the school system for the period of recuperation. Unwillingness to accept such an assignment as directed by the Division Superintendent results in the employee's ineligibility for disability leave during the time involved.
3. A physician determines the physical ability of the employee to continue working or to return to work.
4. Disability leave is limited to 90 working days for any one injury.
5. So long as an employee is on the payroll while on disability leave, sick leave or annual leave, he must endorse any Workman's Compensation checks over to the Arlington County School Board and forward them to the business office.

Article 28–Employee Protection

A. Furnishing Legal Counsel. The Board will furnish legal counsel to unit members in defense of legal action arising out of the discharge of their duties within the scope of their employment in the school system, provided:

1. The unit member is not entitled to such legal counsel by virtue of its availability through a personal or group insurance policy.
2. Such counsel, when provided, is selected from a list; provided, however, in the event the School Board has any policy of insurance which would provide legal defense in the circumstances, then the unit member must accept legal counsel selected by the insurance carrier unless he pays for his personally selected counsel.
3. If such counsel is furnished in a criminal proceeding and the unit member is found guilty, the unit member shall reimburse the Board for all costs involved in providing counsel.

B. Reporting of Incidents. It is the responsibility of all unit members to report immediately, in writing, to their principal or supervisor all significant incidents of alleged assault, whether involving situations between pupils or between pupils and employees. It is the responsibility of the principal or supervisor to call promptly all significant complaints of parents, students or others to the attention of the employee or employees concerned when such complaints involve assault.

C. Absence from Duties for Reasons of Injury. Whenever an employee is absent from school as a result of personal injury caused by an unjustified assault arising out of or in the course of his employment, he shall be paid his full salary for the period of such absence or the balance of that fiscal year, whichever is shorter, without having such absence charged to the annual sick leave or accumulated sick leave.

1. Any amount of salary payable pursuant to this section shall be reduced by the amount of any workmen's compensation award for temporary disability due to said assault injury for the period for which such salary is paid.
2. The Board shall have the right to have the employee [examined] by a physician designated by the Board for the purpose of establishing the length of time during which the employee is temporarily disabled from performing his duties and, in the event that there is no adjudication in the appropriate workmen's compensation proceeding for the period of temporary disability, the opinion of the said physician as to the said period shall control.

D. Suspensions Pending Legal Action. If an employee is suspended or temporarily relieved of his duties because of pending legal action, such employee shall receive all pay and other benefits of his position until such action is resolved, but not beyond the end of the current fiscal year.

E. Contingent upon the strict compliance with the no corporal punishment policy of the School Board as set forth in the Administrative Manual which reads, "Corporal punishment is not permitted," administrators, teachers, and nurses will be provided professional liability protection in the amount of $100,000 per employee for action related to their official duties.

F. In case of any disciplinary action, unit members will receive their salary and fringe benefits until the case is decided by the Board.

CALIFORNIA

INJUNCTION AGAINST 1969 COLLEGE FACULTY STRIKE AFFIRMED

The California State Court of Appeals sustained an injunction issued against the violent strike conducted by San Francisco State College faculty in January 1969. It held that "California follows and applies the common law rule that public employees do not have the right to strike in the absence of a statutory grant thereof; (2) that no such grant exists; (3) that the strike at the college, enjoined by the present judgment, was unlawful (in the sense that it was violative of state policy, although not attended by criminal sanctions); and (4) that the judgment is accordingly valid in all substantive respects and must be affirmed."

Following bargaining sessions with the college in December 1968, the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1352, conducted a strike and picketed the campus in a dispute over tenure matters, dismissal rules, academic policies, and other working conditions. The college sought a temporary restraining order which was granted in February after the trial court found that "masses of pickets" substantially interfered with and impeded campus operations, attempted physically and by threats to frustrate the movements of other persons on campus, and refused to disperse upon request, thereby resulting in police intervention. After the arrival of the police, there were episodes of violence which included bombings and resulted in numerous personal injuries and arrests.

During further litigation at the trial court level, the college moved for summary judgment; as the union filed no counter-affidavits opposing the motion, the trial court granted the college's motion on October 2, 1969, after hearing arguments. The union's appeal of that judgment to the state appeals court here caused the higher court to observe that under the summary judgment appellants "and their agents, servants, employees, and representatives, and all persons and associations acting in concert or participating with them, shall be and hereby are enjoined and restrained from engaging in or performing, directly or indirectly, any and all of the following acts: 1. Striking or calling or inducing a strike or work stoppage in the nature of a strike against plaintiff at San Francisco State College; 2. Picketing the plaintiff's facilities, buildings, and properties at San Francisco State College in support, promotion, or advocacy of a strike or work stoppage in the nature of a strike against plaintiff at San Francisco State College; 3. Hindering, delaying or interfering with, in any manner or by any means or device, the work at the facilities, buildings, and properties of plaintiff at San Francisco State College, for the purpose of supporting, promoting, or advocating a strike against plaintiff at San Francisco State College; and 4. Coercing, compelling, inducing, or encouraging the employees of plaintiff at San Francisco State College to engage in a strike against plaintiff at San Francisco State College or in picketing in support of said strike."

In concluding that public employees have no right to strike in the absence of authorizing legislation, the appeals court rejected the union's argument that its members thereby are denied equal protection of the laws and that the right to strike is to be inferred from sections of the state's government code. It also held that the judgment here does not prohibit withdrawal of labor in violation of the involuntary servitude proscription of the Thirteenth Amendment because each individual appellant is free to "withdraw" his labor by quitting his job. However, "the right of a public employee to do so. . . does not mean that he has a right to strike," the court said.

The union further contended that the trial court's judgment was too broad because it enjoined all picketing. But the appellate court held that while peaceful picketing clearly is an adjunct of the First Amendment right of free speech, it is equally clear that the right to picket constitutionally is subject to limitation where required by the interests of the state. As the picketing here supported a strike which was illegal under state law and involved violence and disruption of college operations, the appellate court ruled that it properly was enjoined. Moreover, since the judgment enjoined only picketing in support of an actual strike at the college itself, it was ruled constitutional in scope. (The Trustees of the California State Colleges v. San Francisco State College Federation of Teachers Local 1352, et al., Court of Appeals of the State of California, First Appellate District, Division Four, December 18, 1970.)

NEW YORK

APPROPRIATENESS OF STATE-WIDE UNIVERSITY BARGAINING UNIT IS CONFIRMED

A state-wide bargaining unit of academic and professional employees of the State University of New York (SUNY) which had been ruled appropriate by the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) was confirmed by the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division. It found that the PERB "clearly complied with the statutory criteria in defining the appropriate negotiating unit. . . and [that] there is unquestionably substantial evidence in the record to support its determination establishing a State wide unit" (NRD, 10-69, 9; 2-70, 8).

The court additionally found no merit to petitioners' contention that the record lacked a basis for including associate and assistant deans in the state-wide unit. While petitioners argued that proof demonstrating a community of interest among all titles within the term "professional employees" should have been offered, the court ruled that > this is not the posture in which the hearings were conducted, nor as a practical matter could they have been, considering the multiplicity of positions involved, and there is ample evidence of a community of interest among all professional employees of the State University. Accordingly, the board was not unreasonable in rejecting petitioners' evidence to the contrary. The fact that there may be some conflict of interest between the dean and the faculty, due to the supervisory duties of the deans, does not compel their exclusion from the negotiating unit.

(Matter of Samuel E. Wakshull v. Robert D. Helsby, New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Third Department, November 10, 1970.)

NOTE: The Senate Professional Association, bargaining representative of SUNY faculty, voted 628 to 122 early this year to affiliate with the National Education Association and the New York State Teachers Association. Negotiation of the first SUNY contract, which will cover some 15,000 faculty members employed on 26 campuses, is in progress.

PERB POWERS IN PROSECUTING STRIKERS UPHELD

A local government's determination that public employees did not engage in a strike did not bar the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) from prosecuting an employee organization for striking in violation of the state's Taylor Law, according to the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division. In addition, the court found no denial of due process in the statutory procedure whereby investigatory, prosecutory, and quasi-judicial functions are combined in a single administrative agency such as the PERB. The court's ruling affirmed in all respects a judgment of the New York Supreme Court, Albany County, and granted the PERB's motion to dismiss the matter in point of law.

The present appeal was brought by the Buffalo Teacher's Federation, Inc. (an NEA affiliate) in an effort to restrain the PERB from prosecuting a charge that the Federation had "caused, instigated, encouraged, condoned and engaged in strikes on March 5, 6, 12 and 13, 1970 by certain employees of the public school system of the City of Buffalo." A notice of the charge and the charge itself had been mailed on July 1, 1970, to the Federation president and were received on July 6. While the Federation contended that personal service of such a charge statutorily is required and that any other method lacks due process, the court pointed out that > PERB, acting under the authority of subdivision 5(e) of section 205 to make rules and regulations, has adopted a rule permitting service to be made either personally or by mail. . . . Due process does not require personal service, and where the statute does not explicitly mandate such service, PERB, as authorized by the statute, had implied power to adopt a rule authorizing service by mail.

Sec. 210(1) of the Taylor Law provides that "no public employee or employee organization shall engage in a strike, and no public employee or employee organization shall cause, instigate, encourage, or condone a strike." Subdivisions 2 and 3 of sec. 210 then separately provide procedures for determining whether a public employee and a public employee organization have violated the anti-strike clause. Sec. 210(2) authorizes the chief executive officer of the government to investigate and determine whether individual public employees have violated the statute, but does not grant the PERB any responsibility with respect to any violations found. Sec. 210(3), on the other hand, authorizes the PERB "to institute proceedings on its own motion to determine whether an employee organization has violated the statute" and whether that organization should lose its dues deduction right.

As the procedures for determining public employee and public employee organization violations "are separate and distinct," the appellate court ruled that the PERB here was entitled to institute proceedings against the Federation, even though the chief executive officer of the local government found that individual Buffalo teachers had not committed violative acts. It explained that "the determination of the chief executive officer was administrative, without a hearing, and not binding on the board in a proceeding against an employee organization."

The court also concluded that PERB's actions as both prosecutor and hearing office statutorily are authorized, and that the statute's anti-strike provision and procedures are "clear and definite" and constitute no violate of equal protection. (Matter of Buffalo Teachers' Federation, Inc. v. Robert D. Helsby, et al., New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Third Department, December 7, 1970.)

OHIO

CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT TEACHER AIDES HAVE NO TENURE RIGHTS; STAFF REDUCTION RULED LAWFUL

As educational aides employed by a city school district have no tenure rights, the Columbus education board acted lawfully in its decision not to rehire 322 of its 600 aides for the 1970-71 school year. In so ruling, the Franklin County Court of Appeals affirmed a lower court's denial of a permanent injunction sought by the Ohio Association of Public School Employees against the staff reduction. The appeals court explained that the application of tenure laws to nonteaching personnel depends upon the type of school district in which such personnel work; aides employed by a city school district effectively fall within the unclassified service, so they are excluded from statutory tenure protection.

When the Columbus board instituted the reduction among educational aides, it did not give written notice of its intention to those aides who were not to be rehired. The Association accordingly entered an action charging the board with violation of the state's tenure laws and asserting that the aides had been denied protection of the laws. Following the trial court's determination that R.C. 3319.088 "confers no tenure rights upon educational aides employed by a city school district," the Association filed a class action appeal, urging that teacher aides are entitled to the tenure protection of Ohio civil service laws. But the court of appeals held:

> By the express language of R.C. 3319.088, educational aides are not entitled to the tenure protection afforded by R.C. 143.01 to 143.48, the general civil service laws applicable to city school districts.
> Thus, while R.C. 3319.088 first states that educational aides shall have the rights, benefits, and legal protection available to the nonteaching employees, the exception takes some of these rights, benefits, and legal protection away from those educational aides employed by a city school district.

Moreover, in declaring constitutional the categorization of educational aides created by the statute indicated, the court noted that Ohio school districts are classified as three types (local, exempted village, and city) and explained:

> The classification of educational aides is the same as the classification of other nonteaching employees in that those employed by city school districts are placed in one class and those employed by local and exempted village school districts are placed in a different class. In other words, the classification is of school districts rather than employees. . . . A classification of employees by the type of school district by which they are employed is not clearly unreasonable. Therefore, the court must conclude that the classification of educational aides by R.C. 3319.088. . . is not unreasonable nor violative of either the Ohio Constitution. . . or of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

As to the Association's argument that educational aides are denied equal protection of the laws because they are deprived of the tenure protection afforded other nonteaching city school district employees, the appeals court found that > it is only those nonteaching employees of a city school district that are in the classified service who are afforded tenure protection. Those in the unclassified service of a city school district have no statutory tenure protection.

> Thus, when the Legislature in R.C. 3319.088 provided that educational aides have the same rights, benefits, and legal protection available to other nonteaching employees in the school district, it was necessary with regard to city school districts to clarify whether this was to be the rights, benefits, and legal protection of nonteaching employees in the classified service or that of nonteaching employees in the unclassified service. This the General Assembly did by the exception expressly providing that R.C. 143.01 to 143.48, inclusive, shall not apply to educational aides. Thus, the effect of the exception was to place educational aides employed by a city school district in the unclassified service.

The court concluded that city school district aides are not denied equal protection of the laws because they are "in effect afforded the rights, benefits, and legal protection available to the nonteaching employees of a city school district who are in unclassified service rather than those available to [such] employees. . . who are in the classifield service." WASHINGTON

COLLEGE MUST NEGOTIATE, NOT JUST MEET AND CONFER

As an agreement between Seattle Community College and the local teachers' union was to continue in effect until the parties had negotiated a successor agreement, the college trustees' adoption of conflicting policies at a special public meeting breached that agreement and such policies were "not properly adopted or finally adopted, and are subject to be negotiated." The King County Superior Court consequently denied the trustees' motion for summary judgment in one action, and enjoined the trustees' adoption of those policies and ordered the college to bargain such matters with the union in a second action. It also commented upon the relationship between general and special contractual provisions and the right of teachers to engage in collective bargaining, rather than mere meet and confer procedures.

In the first action, the union sought a declaratory judgment and certain equitable relief to clarify its negotiation rights under the state's teacher bargaining act (which is separate from another act relating to municipal employees). The action was brought after the community college trustees adopted on August 31, 1970, policies which "conflict with or purport to abrogate, supplant or otherwise take the place of provisions of the 1969-1970 Agreement," which was intended to be effective through June 1970.

That agreement, however, contained a provision stating that "except as otherwise provided elsewhere herein [the agreement] shall become effective July 1, 1969 and shall continue in effect thereafter until a new agreement is effected between the legal bargaining agent and the Board." In light of that language, the court concluded that the 1969-70 agreement "continues in effect until another contract is executed," and explained that > in the construction of a written instrument the special provision controls over the general provision. I would consider the special provision within that rule, however, to be the one [quoted above]. . . . This is the "special" provision because it is the more specific provision as to this question, i.e.: the status of the parties and subject matter of the agreement during the period following the end of the nominally intended term of the agreement and until the execution of a new agreement for the following year. To constitute an exception to this within the clause "except as otherwise provided elsewhere herein," some other section in the agreement would have to be more specific in saying that the agreement must not extend past the date of June 30, 1970; and no other section is specific enough to say that. The period intended to be covered by the agreement was of course the school year of September, 1969, through June, 1970, but the provision in Art. I, Sec. C must be considered to be the emergency clause to provide for the contingency that no new contract is negotiated and agreed upon as intended in time for the beginning of the school year following June, 1970.

In examining the teachers' bargaining act, the court said it "appears basically to be a labor negotiations and bargaining act but with somewhat different wording" than the municipal employees statute. However, the Court found no "clearly significant difference" in the general purpose of the two acts and commented:

> If the Professional Negotiations Act did not give the teachers the usual rights of collective bargaining which other public employees are given but merely gave them the right to meet and confer, as defendants claim, the act would have very little purpose and would be out of keeping with the clear trend of legislation giving such rights to public groups generally.
> Nor does such an act providing for negotiation and bargaining constitute an infringement of the Board of Trustees' legislative authority. . . . If the Act means the usual collective bargaining in good faith, it does not compel any concessions on the part of the College any more than do other bargaining statutes compel concessions on the part of management.

The court finally held that the union's complaint presented a proper case for relief under the Declaratory Judgment Act since "there is a justifiable issue between the two parties to this action over the construction of a statute and of a contract." But in denying the trustees' motion for summary judgment, the court found it could not grant a judgment in favor of the union because the union had made no corresponding motion for summary judgment on the questions raised.

Following the court's September 29 ruling, the union did enter a motion for summary judgment; the court then determined that since the 1969-70 agreement "is now in full force and effect and remains in full force and effect until a new agreement is effected," the trustees' August 31 adoption of policies constituted a breach of that agreement. As the statutory right to negotiate "is the right to meet at reasonable times with the Board to bargain in good faith for the purpose of reaching and executing a written agreement with respect to matters defined [therein], prior to final adoption by the Board of policies relating to such matters," the court ruled that the trustees' unilateral adoption of policies was an infringement of the union's bargaining rights.

It accordingly enjoined the trustees from adopting policies relating to matters defined by statute "unless and until such policies have been duly proposed and negotiated" with the union and ordered the trustees to "commence negotiations in good faith. . . for the purpose of reaching and effecting, at the earliest possible date, an agreement with respect to matters defined [by statute]." The union was awarded costs and disbursements. (Seattle Community College Federation of Teachers, et al. v. Arthur Siegal, et al., Washington Superior Court, King County, November 4, 1970.)

STATE LABOR BOARD ASSERTS JURISDICTION OVER SMALL PRIVATE COLLEGE

While the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) recently has asserted jurisdiction over nonprofit colleges and universities meeting its $1 million jurisdictional standard, the Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations concluded that it had jurisdiction over proceedings involving New Haven College and the college's Faculty Federation. The state board explained that the college has no out-of-state facilities, and that its out-of-state students and purchases are minimal by comparison with schools over which the NLRB has asserted jurisdiction. Furthermore, the stated primary function of the college, in addition to providing services for its students, is to serve local businesses, industries, and institutions. NEW JERSEY

CO-CURRICULAR ACTIVITY "JOB ACTION" ORDERED RESCINDED; BOARD DIRECTED TO NEGOTIATE RELIGIOUS HOLIDAY POLICY CHANGES

Two separate grievances submitted to arbitration by the Matawan Regional Teachers Association and the regional board resulted in determinations that both parties had violated provisions of their collective agreement. The Association, ordered to rescind a "job action" whereby teachers were urged not to perform uncompensated co-curricular work, was found to have confused "the professional obligation to perform co-curricular assignments with the question of compensation." In the second grievance, the board was directed to bargain changes in the system's religious observance policy with the Association and compensate Jewish teachers for pay lost during Passover holidays when the board had refused to grant paid leave.

During a bargaining impasse in the fall of 1969, the Association instituted a job action policy characterized as "no more than a permissible refusal by its members to render voluntary services to the school district." Arguing that teacher participation in activities outside school hours (such as attendance at faculty meetings and conferences and chaperoning of extracurricular activities) is noncompensable and consequently free and voluntary, the Association asserted that such services may be terminated at any time. The job action was suspended when the parties signed their 1970-71 agreement in May of 1970, but the Association maintained that the action could be reactivated.

The board grieved the matter, charging that the teachers' refusal to participate in noncompensable extracurricular activities constituted a contract violation. The Association countered with the argument that the board had not complied with the requirement for submitting unresolved negotiation issues to arbitration and that the matter was in any case moot since the job action had been suspended. According to the arbitrator, the Association's contention that the job action merely was suspended and could be reactivated comprised the "antithesis of a moot controversy." Moreover, while the board had postponed arbitration proceedings during the negotiation impasse, it sought resolution of the dispute within appropriate time limits.

While the parties' agreement provided that the teachers' day shall precede and extend beyond the students' day by 15 minutes in each case, the arbitrator held that normal activities such as faculty and curriculum development meetings and parent conferences cannot be considered "voluntary activities simply because they cannot be conducted practically during, or within 15 minutes before or after, the pupils' school day."

He noted another contract provision stating that "the association agrees that teachers have professional and statutory obligations. . . [and] during the life of this agreement. . . will not condone violation of any such obligation by an employee in the bargaining unit." In addition, a board's authority to require teacher performance of co-curricular assignments legally has been affirmed, and the state education commissioner has ruled that teachers' hours include the minimum hours established by the board "plus the amount of time required for discharge of such duties and services as may reasonably be expected and required of a member of the professional staff."

Concluding that the Association's interpretation of the contractual teaching hours and load provision was unduly strict, the arbitrator ordered the Association to rescind its job action policy and stated that > the association apparently confuses the professional obligation to perform co-curricular assignments with the question of compensation. The association is obviously aware that since the enactment of [the New Jersey Employer-Employee Relations Act], compensation, including additional pay for performing co-curricular assignments, is unquestionably a mandatory collective bargaining subject. . . . If the association understandably desires to expand the list of compensated co-curricular activities, it has a statutory forum for negotiating its demands.

The second grievance was brought by the Association, charging that board Rule 7.19 had not been applied properly to Jewish teachers who requested leave without pay for up to three days to observe Passover holidays. That rule states: "[T]eachers may be excused without loss of pay for no more than three days per year if such days in the teacher's religion require him to be absent from his duties." During the 1969-70 school year, the Jewish holidays of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur did not fall on school days; the first two and last two days of Passover did fall on school days, but the board refused the teachers' request for unpaid leave and docked the salaries of teachers who did take leave.

The superintendent denied the grievance, as did the board upon appeal. At the same time, however, the board announced a new policy with respect to Rule 7.19. Three days' leave with pay would be granted for the two-day Rosh Hashanah holiday and the one-day Yom Kippur holiday, but no additional days would be allowed if the three holidays fell on weekends or days on which school was not scheduled.

Arguing that teachers, rather than the board, should have the right to decide which three Jewish holidays to observe on a paid leave basis, the Association charged that the board's unilateral restriction of such observance to three specific holidays constituted a failure to negotiate on terms and conditions of employment. The Association pointed out that during 1970-71 negotiation, the board refused to meet its demand that a clause allowing up to three days' paid leave for observance of religious holidays be included in the contract. Moreover, the board did not indicate its intention to restrict application of Rule 7.19 to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. Finally, the Association maintained that a survey of paid leaves for religious holidays granted to Jewish teachers between 1965 and 1970 indicated no restriction of such leaves to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, and that the board's action violated the teachers' constitutional rights to free religious exercise.

In opposition, the board maintained that it held absolute discretion to determine how many holidays and which specific holidays would be granted, and that it reserved the right to alter the interpretation of Rule 7.19 "at will," despite past policy. Furthermore, its new policy of restricting paid religious holidays to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur was mandated because some teachers had requested paid leave on days unrelated to the requirements of their religion.

Dismissing the Association's constitutional rights charge, the arbitrator pointed out that teachers have no constitutional right to paid leave for religious holidays, and that the board did not order them to work on such days under threat of discipline or discharge. Rather, they were "carefully advised that teachers choosing to be absent from school to observe the Passover holidays would not be paid for those days."

As to the survey regarding past board policy with respect to granting paid leave for religious holidays, the arbitrator held that such past practice is not nullified by the board's new policy restricting leave to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. Since past application of Rule 7.19 "demonstrates that the parties intended to give the teachers a voice in the selection of the specific religious holidays," the board had no right to make the Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur holidays nontransferable. Moreover, the arbitrator disagreed with the board's contention that it reserved the right to alter the application of Rule 7.19, observing:

> In order to timely exercise its acknowledged discretion under Rule 7.19 to set the number of religious observance days for the 1969-70 school year, the board had to act at the beginning of that school year, or at the very latest, during the early stages of the 1970-71 contract negotiations. The board did not satisfy this standard. Furthermore, in its attempt to unilaterally change the policy in June, 1970, the board expressed the intention to continue to grant three excused absences each year, albeit under severely restricted conditions. Therefore, the arbitrator finds that despite the board's acknowledged discretion under Rule 7.19 it did not effectively change its past interpretation and application of the rule during the 1969-70 school year.

The arbitrator also rejected the board's contention that its new policy was necessary because the Jewish faith variously asks its adherents to observe holidays ranging in number from three to 13 days, and it is "irrelevant that some teachers have designated different holidays in different school years." Concluding that the board's unilateral institution of a new policy after refusing the Association's negotiation demand violated the Association's right to bargain on an "undisputable term and condition of employment," the arbitrator ordered the board to reimburse teachers for pay lost during observance of Passover holidays. In addition, the board was directed to rescind its restriction of paid leave to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur and bargain with the Association on any changes in Rule 7.19. NEW YORK

UNIT DEFINITION AND PAST PRACTICE OBLIGATE BOARD TO BARGAIN SUMMER SCHOOL EMPLOYMENT

Despite an "inherent ambiguity in the unit definitions," a hearing officer for the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) decided that past negotiation practices of the Westbury Classroom Teachers Association and the education board of UFSD No. 1 "clearly [demonstrate]. . . that they considered summer school employees to be included within the defined negotiating unit." That finding subsequently was affirmed by the PERB in its conclusion that the board had committed an improper practice under the Taylor Law by refusing to negotiate the terms and conditions of summer school employment. The board accordingly was ordered to negotiate in good faith on such matters with the Association and post notice of its intention to do so.

The Association, first recognized by the board as bargaining representative of district "teaching personnel" in 1968, negotiated a 1968-69 agreement with the board which contained a recognition clause stating: "The term 'teaching personnel' shall include all classroom teachers, including those classroom teachers who are department heads or department chairmen, regular substitute teachers, nurse-teachers, librarians, guidance couselors, psychologists, special teachers and attendance teachers." That agreement also contained an article setting forth the terms and conditions of employment relative to elementary, intermediate, and secondary level summer school teachers, and elementary summer school playground directors.

A successor contract covering the 1969-70 school year contained a recognition clause which was identical in all relevant respects to its predecessor, as well as an article on summer employment with salary and hour items similar to those in the previous agreement. The 1969-70 contract additionally stated that district teachers would be given first preference in filling summer school positions, that former summer school teachers would be offered the same summer position or allowed their preference among open positions in their subject area, and that teachers on sabbatical leave would be granted a leave of absence from one year's summer school without forfeiting the right to that summer position the following year. The contract also provided summer school teachers with two noncumulative paid days of sick leave during the summer session.

When negotiation of a 1970-71 contract commenced, the board notified the Association that it did > not choose to include [the existing article on summer employment] in negotiations. Under the provisions of the Taylor Law, negotiations are required only with full-time employees and not with part-time teaching faculties in special schools.

>
> The Board of Education recognizes the fact that in past contracts many items not mandated to be negotiated have been negotiated at the option of the Board of Education. For the contract year 1970-71, the Board of Education will not exercise this option, and will remove this Article from negotiations.

The Association eventually filed an improper practices charge with the PERB contending that "the terms and conditions of summer school employment are subject to mandated negotiations. . . [because] the [board] has designated the [Association] as the negotiating representative of the summer school teachers." Alternatively it argued that summer school employment for regular school year teachers is a fringe benefit similar to extracurricular activities, and that the board's unilateral withdrawal of summer school employment from 1970-71 negotiation constituted a violation of its obligation to bargain in good faith. The board maintained that the Association represents only academic year teaching personnel and that summer school employment is an optional subject of negotiation.

Referring to the recognition clauses contained in the parties' 1968-69 and 1969-70 agreements, the hearing officer held that "while neither unit definition specifically includes summer school teachers. . . both employ the term 'classroom teachers', which is sufficiently broad to encompass them." Accordingly, > it must follow that the [board] had an obligation under [the Taylor Law] to negotiate with the [Association] about terms and conditions of summer school employment. . . . The parties' conduct in negotiating terms and conditions of summer school employment from the inception of their negotiating relationship clearly demonstrates, and I so find, that they considered summer school teachers to be included within the defined negotiating unit. I therefore find that. . . [the board's] admitted refusal to negotiate on this matter constitutes a violation. . . . I recommend that the [board] be ordered to negotiate in good faith with the [Association] concerning terms and conditions of summer school employment for the summer of 1970.

RHODE ISLAND

SEPARATE UNIT OF EXTRACURRICULAR AND SUMMER SCHOOL EMPLOYEES RULED APPROPRIATE

An order of the Rhode Island State Labor Relations Board (SLRB) found appropriate for collective bargaining purposes a unit composed of all coaches, certified summer educational employees, and extracurricular employees of the Pawtucket School Department and directed that an election be held. While the Pawtucket Teachers Alliance, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 930, argued that such employees are not entitled to a bargaining unit separate from that of classroom teachers, the SLRB found that extracurricular activities do not constitute teaching duties and that individuals employed in such a capacity do not have to be certified teachers.

The union's first petition to the SLRB requested certification for all coaches; following two amendments of the petition, the proposed unit was comprised of coaches, certified summer educational employees, and all extracurricular personnel. Contending that employees performing extracurricular activities also are engaged in performing teaching duties, the union urged that the employees in question were not entitled to a separate unit for the performance of extracurricular duties under the Rhode Island School Teachers' Arbitration Act. It also contended that these employees were not part-time personnel within the meaning of the state's Municipal Employees' Arbitration Act and consequently were not excluded from its coverage.

At the outset, the SLRB pointed out that the state education department "does not require certification in the matters covered in these extracurricular activities. . . [and] participation in said extracurricular activities is not a condition of employment required by the School Committee." As such, the activities engaged in by the personnel in the proposed unit did not constitute teaching duties under the teachers' bargaining statute.

Referring to the municipal employees' bargaining statute, which excludes from its coverage "part-time employees who work less than twenty hours per work," the SLRB also determined that the personnel here involved "were not hired on a part-time basis but rather on a full-time basis to fulfill these positions. The Board feels that the twenty hour limitation applies only to part-time employees and is not applicable to the employees presently in question."

Therefore, in order "to insure to the employees concerned the full benefits of their rights to self-organization, to collective bargaining, and otherwise to effectuate the policies of the Act," the board ordered an election among all personnel in the proposed unit "to determine whether they desire to be represented. . . by. . . Local 930. . . or by no organization." (In Re Pawtucket School Department and Pawtucket Teachers Alliance, Local 930, AFT, AFL-CIO, Rhode Island State Labor Relations Board, July 21, 1970.)

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

ELECTION DIRECTED AMONG CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF NONPROFIT RESEARCH CENTER

A direction of election was issued by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) in a proposed unit of testing and interviewing personnel employed at an office of the University of Chicago's National Opinion Research Center. The NLRB determined that the center met the $1 million jurisdictional standard established for nonprofit colleges and universities (NRD, 2-71, 13) and additionally held that the interviewers involved were neither independent contractors nor casual employees. But, since "a substantial number of these employees worked as regular part-time employees," the Board took "particular care to ensure that our determination of voter eligibility takes into account the special pattern of employment evidenced here."

The center, a nonprofit Colorado corporation affiliated with the University of Chicago, grossed $1.8 million during the fiscal year ending August 1967 for services performed for universities, foundations, and private agencies; it now has a $2.5 million contract with the U.S. Department of Labor and the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity.

A representation petition filed by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees sought an election in a proposed unit of assistant supervisors (whom the parties agreed did not fall with the definition of supervisor under the Taft-Hartley Act), test administrators, and interviewers employed at the center's Los Angeles office. That office currently is surveying federal manpower programs.

In response to the employer's contention that interviewers should be excluded from the proposed unit because they are independent contractors, the NLRB applied the act's "right to control" test, explaining:

> Where any person for whom services are performed retains the right to control the manner and means by which the result is to be accomplished, the relationship is one of employment; while, on the other hand, where control is reserved only as to the result sought, the relationship is that of an independent contractor. The resolution of this question depends on the facts of each case, and no one factor is determinative.

The NLRB noted that here the employer withheld no tax deductions from the interviewers' paychecks, made no social security payments, provided no vacations, holidays, or other fringe benefits, and that the interviewers had some discretion in rejecting certain assignments. While some of these factors indicated that the interviewers were independent contractors, the board held that they were "outweighed by others which amply demonstrate the effective control the employer maintains over the day-to-day duties of the interviewers, and which, on balance, support a finding that they are employees both in law and as a 'matter of economic reality.'" The NLRB named six other considerations it found decisive:

(1) All interviewer applicants are interviewed and if accepted must take an orientation course prior to their actual hiring; (2) the employer sets a definite time schedule in which an interview must be completed; (3) the interviewers are solicited for employment by the employer through the usual channels used by employers to secure the necessary help; (4) the employer may terminate an interviewer at will; (5) interviewers are required to submit a record of hours worked and mileage at regular intervals which are subject to review and adjustment by the employer; and (6) the employer maintains, through its supervisor and assistant supervisors, complete supervisory control over the interviewers.

Although the employer argued alternatively that the interviewers were casual employees, that contention also was rejected since from September 1969 through March 1970, some 24 interviewers "worked a total of 147 pay periods which varied from six to 21 payroll periods during each time." Also, about 56 interviewers worked four or more payroll periods from January through March 1970.

Concluding that many of the interviewers were regular part-time rather than casual employees, the NLRB noted that while the center's current porject is scheduled for completion in 1971, surveys are conducted almost continually and interviewers who have not quit or been terminated are eligible for re-employment. The board accordingly decided to limit its voting eligibility standard to "all interviewers, excluding the office employees, who have been employed not less than four weekly pay periods during the 90-calendar-day period from January 1 through March 1970." Interviewers who had worked at least four weekly pay periods during the 90-calendar day period preceding the board's direction of election also were found eligible to vote. Negotiation Notes

STRIKE PROHIBITION DOES NOT DEPRIVE REAPPOINTED TEACHERS OF PREVIOUSLY NEGOTIATED BENEFITS

A February 26, 1971, opinion of the Minnesota attorney general held that the public employee strike prohibition contained in the state's labor relations act was not intended to deny striking teachers who were reappointed the benefits of a prenegotiated contract. Sec. 179.55 of the act provides that a public employee who strikes or participates in a strike > may, subsequent to such violation, be appointed, or reappointed, employed or reemployed, as a public employee but only upon the following conditions: (a) his compensation shall in no event exceed that received by him immediately prior to such violation, (b) the compensation of such person shall not be increased until after the expiration of one year from such appointment or reappointment, employment or reemployment, and (c) the said person shall be on probation for two years with respect to such civil service status, tenure of employment, or contract of employment, as he may have theretofore been entitled.

While the statutory provision deprives a striking teacher of his tenure rights, the attorney general stated that it did not deny striking teachers (upon reappointment) any increased compensation in the succeeding year which automatically was granted to them under a previously negotiated contract.

MONTANA

MANDATORY TEACHER BARGAINING STATUTE ENACTED

A "Professional Negotiations Act for Teachers" which states that it "shall be the duty" of all school districts and teachers' representatives "to negotiate and bargain for agreement on. . . matters relating directly to the employer-teacher relationship such as salary, hours and other terms of employment" was signed by the Montana governor on March 18, 1971, and will become effective July 1, 1971. The act extends bargaining rights to principals, as well as certificated teachers, and allows principals to be included in an appropriate unit of all teachers employed by a single employer, or to establish a separate appropriate unit.

In addition, the act provides exclusive representation rights for organizations representing a majority of the teachers in an appropriate unit as verified by affidavit, or those which win contested representation elections conducted by secret ballot. Determinations resulting from such elections "shall remain in effect for one (1) year after the date of the election and thereafter until the employer or thirty (30) percent or more of the teachers in the appropriate unit shall apply to the board for another election."

The representative organization must serve written notice of its intention to negotiate upon the employer no later than November 1 of the last year an agreement is effective and must state specifically the items to be negotiated. The act stipulates, however, that "the matters of negotiation and bargaining for agreement shall not include matters of curriculum, policy of operation, selection of teachers and other personnel, or physical plant of schools or other school facilities." If the teachers' organization does not serve the required notice, "the employer shall not be required to negotiate any terms of the employer-teacher relationship for the following school year." No agreement reached under the act shall be effective for a period of more than two years, and all settlements "must be ratified by a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit before becoming binding upon the parties."

In the event of a negotiation impasse after 50 days from the commencement of negotiation, the act states that either party may submit the unresolved issues to a panel of three persons, one selected by the representative organization, one by the employer, and the third selected by the other two members. The panel shall issue findings of fact and recommendations which, if not accepted by both parties, shall be made public.

The act additionally enumerates unfair practices, prohibits teachers and teacher organizations from "instituting, maintaining or participating in a strike or boycott against any employer, or picketing any school or school facility," and provides that any teacher who violates the no-strike clause "shall forfeit his salary for every day that he is in violation." The full text of the Montana teacher bargaining statute is reprinted in the "Text" section of this DIGEST.

OREGON

PERB MAY APPOINT OWN MEMBER OR OTHER AGENT AS HEARING OFFICER

An addition to the rules of practice and procedure of the Oregon Public Employe Relations Board (PERB) provides that the PERB may appoint one of its own members or any other agent to hold any hearings required by law or by PERB rules. The paragraph, which became effective November 4, 1970, states in its entirety:

> The board may appoint a member of the board or any other agent to hold any hearing that the law or rules require the board to hold. The board agent shall make findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations and serve a copy upon each party to the proceedings. The affected parties shall have ten calendar days after receipt to file written objections with the board. The board shall review the findings of fact, conclusions of law, recommendations and objections, if any, and shall permit the parties to present oral argument. If a party desires to submit a written argument in lieu of oral argument, it must be filed with the board prior to the date set for oral argument. If no objections are received, the board will make its decision without argument. Review by the board of findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations shall be confined to the record. The findings and order of the board shall be certified in writing to the affected parties.

PENNSYLVANIA

PROXIMITY OF BUDGET SUBMISSION DATE DOES NOT RELIEVE CITY OF DUTY TO BARGAIN

A city's refusal to bargain in the face of an imminent budget submission date was not justified under Pennsylvania's new Public Employee Relations Act (NRD, 10-70, 13, 30) and constituted a violation of its duty to bargain, according to the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Board (PLRB) in its first decision on an unfair labor practice charge brought under the act.

The city of Williamsport contended that it was not obligated to bargain because the statutory deadline for submitting disputes to mediation (at least 150 days prior to the local government's budget submission date) had not been met. But the PLRB ruled that failure to comply with that deadline did not relieve the city of its duty to continue negotiating in good faith, including agreeing to mediation and other voluntary impasse resolution procedures provided by the act as conditions precedent to legal public employee strikes.

According to the PLRB, the city's noncompliance with the act and its refusal to invoke the act's dispute resolution machinery rendered the union incapable of compliance, violated both the spirit and the letter of the act, and thwarted the act's basic purpose of promoting, protecting, and effectuating good-faith bargaining:

> To accept the position of the respondent, i.e., that the shortage of time excuses compliance with the act, is equivalent to saying that the rights accorded employees by. . . provisions of the act only become effective as to those employees when the time schedule can be met. Such an interpretation is contrary to the act. . . . The failure of either party to comply with the good faith collective bargaining requirements of the act cannot be condoned even if based upon a good faith belief that compliance is not required under the circumstances existent in the instant case. . . . Even if the fact that the "Final Budget Submission Date" of December 31, 1970, might justify the respondent's reluctance to bargain on salary and other similar cost items, there are still many other unresolved issues which undoubtedly could be resolved by having continued bargaining. It is, therefore, clear that the respondent had an obligation to meet with the complainant and continue to bargain at least with respect to other terms and conditions of employment which would be nonmonetary in nature.

The PLRB ordered the city to bargain in good faith with the union and embody any agreement reached in a signed, written contract, and required it to submit to the act's impasse procedures.

WISCONSIN

REORGANIZATION OF COUNTY WELFARE DEPARTMENT IS NEGOTIABLE, ACCORDING TO WERC

Reorganization of the Milwaukee County Department of Public Welfare, including the elimination of some bargaining unit positions and the creation of other jobs, properly is a subject for collective bargaining, according to the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC). Despite evidence of extensive state authority in the matter and the county's contention that "there remains virtually no flexibility relating to wages, hours and conditions of employment for the employees involved," the WERC affirmed an earlier order and appointed a fact-finder to investigate the dispute between the county and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 594.

The union, representative of both professional and nonprofessional welfare department personnel, had worked with the county in developing a survey for use in planning the reorganization, and the parties had engaged in some discussions of the matter. However, the department director discontinued the discussions and subsequently refused to bargain matters pertaining to the reorganization. The union petitioned the WERC to initiate fact-finding, which was ordered on September 11, 1970, with the WERC's determination that the county's action constituted a failure to bargain in good faith.

After a delay in naming the fact-finder and some legal maneuvering by the county, the WERC reopened the hearing to allow the county's presentation of additional evidence based upon the facts that the state had decided to assume jurisdiction over the organizational structure of welfare departments and that it then was determining the "appropriate structuring" for the Milwaukee department (including position classification and pay ranges). Specifically, the county presented an opinion of the Wisconsin attorney general which held that the state has authority to prescribe compensation standards for county welfare workers, that these standards must make options available to the counties, that the county must conform to state standards in its choice of options, and that under the state's municipal employee bargaining statute, welfare department workers have "a legitimate interest in being represented in conferences and negotiations at the county level" which deal with salaries and fringe benefits.

However, the attorney general asserted that the state cannot delegate the formulation of pay scales to counties with a civil service system since the law "is specific as to the functions which may be delegated, and formulation of the compensation standards to be applicable to county welfare department employees is not included." The county accordingly contended that fact-finding would be "hopelessly inappropriate" because any areas of local flexibility permitting negotiation would be very limited and subject to further state regulation. But the WERC concluded that the evidence did not warrant > a determination by the commission to set aside its fact finding order and to dismiss the fact finding petition. If we were to accept the Municipal Employer's argument as a basis for dismissing the petition, the Municipal Employer could unilaterally establish salaries and working conditions for its welfare department employees and thus eliminate one of the statutory grounds for fact finding.

>
> As stated in the Attorney General opinion, Section 111.70 of the Wisconsin statutes, applies to county welfare employees as it pertains to salaries and fringe benefits. Such matters could possibly be affected by the reorganization of the Welfare department.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, FEBRUARY 1971

The Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure rose 0.2 percent in February to 119.4 as computed on the base reference period of 1967=100 instituted in January. According to the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), the February advance represented the smallest rise in the CPI in nearly four years. The February figure placed the index 4.8 percent above that of a year ago and resulted in the smallest 12-month rise in the CPI since February 1969.

BLS reported that food prices increased 0.4 percent that month, the largest rise since May of 1970, while the prices of commodities other than food declined slightly (0.1 percent) for the first time since July of 1965. Consumer services charges registered an 0.2 percent advance in February, reportedly the smallest rise since mid-1967. Cost of medical care services rose 0.7 percent, approximately the same rate as the average monthly rise over the past year.

An estimated 551,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based upon the national or city CPI figures for February.

GEORGIA RIGHT-TO-WORK CLAUSE FOUND VIOLATIVE OF FEDERAL CHECKOFF IRREVOCABILITY PROVISION

The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed a judgment of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit which held that a portion of the Georgia right-to-work law conflicted with the period of irrevocability of dues checkoff authorizations provided by the National Labor Relations Act and must yield to it. The high court thereby nullified sec. 54-906 of the Georgia Code which reads: "No employer shall deduct from the wages or other earnings of any employee any fee, assessment, or other sum of money whatsoever, to be held for or to be paid over to a labor organization, except on the individual order or request of such employee, revocable. . . [at] the will of the employee."

An action brought by the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, sought injunctive relief from the failure of an employer to deduct and remit dues (under the parties' agreement) from the wages of employees who had provided valid deduction authorizations conforming to sec. 302(c)(4) of the Taft-Hartley Act. That section, which makes it unlawful for an employer to pay money to any labor organization or officer thereof, makes an exception > with respect to money deducted from the wages of employees in payment of membership dues in a labor organization: Provided, That the employer has received from each employee, on whose account such deductions are made, a written assignment which shall not be irrevocable for a period of more than one year, or beyond the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, whichever occurs sooner.

The employer argued that checkoff authorizations are revocable at any time under the Georgia statute, that the statute is part of a state policy to regulate compulsory unionism as sanctioned by Congress, and that employees "who execute authorizations revocable only after one year but who within twelve months revoke same become forced members of the union." The union pointed to the one-year irrevocability clause of the Taft-Hartley provision.

Finding that the Georgia provision and the federal statute "are completely at odds. . . [and] cannot co-exist," the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Georgia (whose opinion later was adopted by the Fifth Circuit) held that > the state regulation must yield. The area of checkoff of union dues has been federally occupied to such an extent under §301 [of the Taft-Hartley Act] that no room remains for state regulation in the same field. . . . Congress acted with considered purpose in limiting the period of irrevocability to not more than a year. . . conceivably [thinking] that a period of a year would better protect the union's position from deterioration through revocation of checkoff authorizations.

>
> I am confident Congress did not conceive that checkoff of dues for a limited time after an employee's revocation of authorization therefor would amount to compulsory union membership as interdicted by state "Right-to-Work" laws. . . . I do not agree that the one year irrevocability provision in the Act can be varied by a state legislature under the reservation to the states of the power to prohibit "agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment." Section 14(b) [of the National Labor Relations Act]. . . contemplates state regulation only as to forms of union security which are "the practical equivalent of compulsory unionism". . . . Checkoff authorizations irrevocable for one year after date do not amount to compulsory unionism as to employees who wish to withdraw from membership prior to that time.

NEW YORK CITY SCHOOL SUPERVISORS VOTE AFL-CIO AFFILIATION; ORGANIZING COMMITTEE CHARTER ISSUED

New York City school supervisors who are members of the city's Council of Supervisors and Administrators (CSA) recently voted 1,653 to 126 in favor of affiliating with the AFL-CIO. Then at its mid-winter meeting, the AFL-CIO Executive Council moved to encourage the formation of a new AFL-CIO national union of supervisors and administrators by issuing a charter for an organizing committee reportedly comprised of representatives of the CSA and its counterparts in Chicago and San Francisco. If the organizing efforts of the supervisors' groups prove successful, AFL-CIO President George Meany said a permanent charter may be granted in a few years.

The CSA has a membership of more than 3,000 of the 4,000 principals, assistant principals, department chairmen, bureau directors, administrative assistants, and other supervisors employed by the New York City school system. Membership in the Chicago and San Francisco locals is reported at 800 and 300, respectively, although a number of San Francisco's school administrators have joined the Teamsters, maintaining that immediate union protection is needed and that the formation of an independent union would take too long.

Statistics

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: COMPOSITION OF CLASSROOM TEACHER NEGOTIATING UNITS

An NEA Research Division survey of 7,161 school systems with an enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 978 classroom teacher bargaining units which had negotiated comprehensive agreements with school boards effective during the 1968-69 school year. These units comprised 37.5 percent of the 2,605 systems in which active classroom teacher negotiating units were reported and included 420,118 instructional personnel, 43.5 percent of all instructional personnel in active negotiating units. A subsequent investigation of the recognition clauses contained in the 978 comprehensive agreements revealed that while all units represented classroom teachers, most of them also represented school employees in other job classifications. The analysis was confined to the 978 bargaining units since comprehensive agreements usually contain a more definitive statement on the job classifications included in or excluded from the negotiating unit.

Of the 978 agreements, 150 (15.3 percent) lacked recognition clauses defining unit membership. In addition, 99 agreements (10.1 percent) merely referred generally to "all professional personnel," "all certificated staff," "all teaching staff," or "all professional staff excluding administrators and supervisors." Another problem was that the specific job classifications included in and/or excluded from a given negotiating unit were listed in only 729 of the agreements, and the list often was obviously incomplete. For instance, although it was verified by questionnaire that all units included classroom teachers, only 307 agreements specifically referred to them. One other problem was the difficulty in identifying the nature of particular job titles owing to varying nomenclature; this was particularly true of lists of administrative and supervisory jobs wherein it was impossible to distinguish consistently between line and staff positions or to identify exact lines of authority. No attempt was made to compare the organizational charts of the 978 school systems.

The major criterion used in analyzing the bargaining units was the presence or absence of administrative and supervisory staff in classroom teacher units. For purposes of this analysis, department chairmen were not considered to be administrators or supervisors. Table 1 indicates that 53.2 percent of the negotiating units excluded all administrators and supervisors, another 15.6 percent included some, and only 9.9 percent of the units included all administrators and supervisors below the rank of superintendent. Superintendents never were included in negotiating units. Among the states, the portions of units including administrative and supervisory staff varied according to state law and the wishes of local members.

Tables 2 through 6 list the exact job classifications included in and/or excluded from classroom teacher negotiating units. Although 729 agreements mentioned one or more job classifications with respect to negotiating unit membership, it is evident from columns 2 and 3 in each table that no job titles were mentioned in a majority of the agreements. The agreements recognized a professional staff organization which negotiated terms and conditions of employment for its members, but the organization's membership (i.e., the job classifications represented) was left undefined. (Since classroom teacher information previously was obtained by questionnaire, teachers are indicated as included in all 978 units.) Therefore, the percentages of units including and excluding various job classifications (columns 5 and 7 in each table) indicate how often those agreements which did mention a job title included it or excluded it.

As indicated in Table 2, 15 administrative and supervisory job classifications at both the central office and building level were excluded from at least three-fourths of the units. Superintendents, assistant superintendents, business managers, administrative assistants (at the central office level), special program directors, all central office personnel, principals, and assistant principals were excluded from 90 percent or more of the units.

Table 3 then shows that seven of the 12 teaching classifications identified were included in at least four-fifths of the units; these seven classifications were regular teachers, department chairmen, traveling teachers, special education teachers, long-term substitutes, teachers on leave, and supervising teachers. addition, all of these classifications except supervising teachers and department chairmen were included in 90 percent or more of the units. The remaining five teaching classifications—all substitutes, short-term substitutes, intern and student teachers, and part-time teachers—more frequently were excluded from the classroom teacher bargaining unit than included.

The 12 job classifications for pupil personnel staff found in Table 4 were included in teacher negotiating units at least two-thirds of the time, except that physicians never were included. Librarians, guidance counselors, specialists, therapists, social workers, dental hygienists, and attendance teachers were included in about 90 percent or more of the units. As evident in Table 5, the six special program staff job classifications showed little trend as to inclusion or exclusion. While they were included in at least one-half of the units, they never were included in more than two-thirds of the units. Finally, Table 6 shows that the eight job classifications for auxiliary and other personnel also varied with regard to inclusion or exclusion. Secretaries and clerks, teacher aides, custodial and maintenance workers, transportation personnel, and cafeteria workers usually were excluded from teacher units, while library aides or clerks and playground teachers generally were included.

Special Reports

BRIEFS OF RECENT AGREEMENTS

Dekalb, Illinois

Between the Board of Education of School District No. 428 and the Dekalb Classroom Teachers Association, effective July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. Approximately 280 certificated professional employees.

Compensation: B.A., $7,100 to $10,650, 9 increments; teachers whose probationary period is extended for a third year as provided by law reach the top of the B.A. lane in 10 increments after being granted tenure; B.A. plus 16 hours, $11,360 maximum; M.A., $8,875 to $12,780, 10 increments; M.A. plus 30 hours, $15,123 maximum; mandatory retirement at age 65 in accordance with law. Differentials: (1970-71 only) senior high athletic director, $1,360; senior high head basketball coach, $1,020; senior high head football coach, $884; senior high head tennis, golf, and intramurals coaches, $544; junior high head track and cross country coaches, $340; senior high cheerleading supervisor, $476; senior high theatre director, $1,088; senior high chorus director, $428.40; elementary school band director (2 schools), $102. Substitute teachers receive $20 per day, except that after 20 consecutive days they shall be paid $25 per day. Teachers who daily must travel in the district as a condition of employment are allowed $50 annually plus 10¢ per mile on a semester basis.

Leaves: Unlimited sick leave for 1 year from the date of illness or injury with a maximum of 1 year of culminating benefits for the same disability, provided that after 5 consecutive working days of absence, a physician's affidavit be submitted stating that the teacher is unable to perform his assigned duties, giving the nature of the illness, and indicating the approximate length of time necessary for recovery; 2 separate days' personal leave for handling legitimate business, professional, religious, and family obligations which cannot be met outside the regular school day; time as needed for professional conference leave with district paying "allowable expenses incurred"; paid leave for jury duty less per-diem court allowance; sabbatical leave at no less than the district minimum ($7,100) or one-half of the teacher's current base salary, whichever is greater (after deduction for substitute service), for 1 or 2 semesters after 6 years' service.

Insurance: Board-paid comprehensive medical and hospitalization plan for individual coverage; board-paid $2,000 life insurance policy for individual coverage; employee's dependents may be insured, but premium must be paid in full by employee and only through a payroll deduction plan; employment injury benefit plan whereby board will pay the difference between a teacher's regular salary and any workmen's compensation benefits received for 1 year from the date of disability.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; Association business may be transacted on school property at all reasonable times provided that it does not interfere with the operation of the schools; in order to fulfill the responsibilities of his office, the Association president "should be granted time when necessary"; at the mutual agreement of the administration and the Association's Professional Relations Committee, paid leave may be granted teachers who are appointed to a state or national Association committee or elected to an Association office.

Personnel: No new staff member normally shall be assigned to a building unless representatives of the teaching staff have an opportunity to interview and make recommendations regarding the employment of candidates; during planning time, teachers shall not be required to remain in their buildings as long as they notify the building principal of their absence and that absence is of a professional nature; no spouse will be assigned to the same building, nor will the spouse of any supervisor be assigned under his jurisdiction; professional growth requirement that 6 semester hours of credit be earned every 3 years by teachers and administrators with less than a B.A. degree, every 4 years by those with a B.A. degree but not an M.A. degree, and every 5 years by those with an M.A. degree; teachers may apply to have workshop or educational travel experience weighed and credited toward their professional growth requirement at the rate of 1 semester hour of credit per 16 hours of workshop participation, and 1 semester hour of credit per week of travel (a description of and itinerary for which must be submitted and approved in advance); professional development plan allowing credits for an extensive reading program, active professional organization membership and service, and active community participation (see following provision reprint); the Professional Relations Committee shall review and recommend approval or disapproval of all course work beyond the M.A. degree as applied for by a teacher, and shall meet regularly with the superintendent to discuss matters affecting the welfare of pupils and/or teachers, alleged injustices developing from a lack of board or admininstrative policy, and staff conduct.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

A staff member who wishes to develop an extensive reading program which goes beyond his current readings may do so by following these procedures.

1. Submit a statement which includes a rationale for reading the books listed, an annotated bibliography of the books (exclusive of college course readings).
2. State a time period during which the books will be read and file these with the Superintendent and the Professional Relations Committee requesting the amount of credit desired. (Maximum of 3 per year).
3. Upon completion of the program, write a statement which summarizes the value of the content to one's professional development or classroom activities.

PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES

Developed by the teacher for a 3 year period, 6 credits granted upon completion.

Maintain a complete unified professional membership in local, state and national organizations as well as one additional membership in a related curriculum area, and

Maintain active service in at least one of these areas:

1. Service on professional committees or hold an office.
2. Publication of materials or conduct research. Credit will be reviewed and the proper schedule placement determined.
3. Service on a curriculum committee.
4. Service on a building committee.

ACTIVE COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION
(A 3-Year Program—6 Credits)

The emphasis here is placed on participation, rather than just belonging. One must submit a statement of involvement as a contributor to the activities listed below (2 is a minimum).

1. Boy-Girl Scouts
2. Y.M.C.A.
3. Service Clubs
4. Fraternal-Sorority Groups
5. Church

INCENTIVE INCREMENT PROGRAM

Upon completion of C and D over a three year period, the teacher at the top of the salary schedule would receive 10% of his current index salary for the next three years. If a person desires, he may recycle the program by continuing his participation in C and D thereby maintaining the salary increment. This benefit would also be extended to step 10-D of the salary schedule. (Dekalb, Illinois)

Holden, Massachusetts

Between the Wachusett Regional School District Committee and the Wachusett Regional Teachers' Association, effective September 1, 1971, to August 31, 1972. Approximately 105 certificated professional employees. Two employee units represented: Unit A—classroom teachers, and Unit B—principals, assistant principals, and guidance director. Provision for automatic renewal of agreement for successive one-year terms unless either party notifies the other in writing by September 1 prior to expiration of the contract year of its desire to modify or terminate the contract.

Compensation: (Unit A) B.A., $7,500 to $11,300, 10 increments; B.A. plus 15 hours, $11,650 maximum; M.A., $8,200 to $12,700, 10 increments; M.A. plus 30 hours, $13,400 maximum; Ph.D., $14,200 maximum. Unit B: principal, $12,000 to $19,250, 6 increments; first assistant principal, $11,500 to $17,500, 6 increments; second assistant principal, $11,000 to $16,500, 6 increments; guidance director, $11,500 to $17,500, 6 increments.

Leaves: 10 days' annual sick leave earned at the rate of 1 day per month worked, 135 days' maximum accumulation; teachers with 10 years of district service shall earn sick leave at the rate of 1.5 days per month, and tenure teachers automatically are to have 10 days' leave advanced at the beginning of each school year; 1 day of emergency and personal business leave per each 3 months worked, 5 days' maximum accumulation; teachers with no earned emergency and personal business leave days may be advanced a maximum of 5 days at the discretion of the superintendent in the event of a death in the immediate family; teachers who have used all earned accumulated days in one classification may request that their accumulated earned days be combined before a payroll deduction is made; after an individual with 3 or more years' district service has used all of his accumulated sick and emergency leave days, he may be placed on extended sick leave for a period not to exceed 6 months at his current salary rate less a substitute's per-diem pay; sabbatical leave for teachers with an M.A. degree who have been accepted in an approved graduate program at one-half of salary for 1 year after 6 years' service.

Insurance: Board pays 50 percent of Blue Cross—Blue Shield municipal and state employees' plan for individual coverage.

Association: Teachers and Association representatives involved in grievance proceedings during the school day shall be allowed released time without loss of pay; no-strike clause providing that teachers who commit a violation "will at the discretion of the Committee be subject to disciplinary action, including discharge, suspension, or complete loss of seniority."

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with final and binding arbitration; 30-minute duty-free lunch period for all teachers; teachers shall be evaluated annually by their department heads (and each department head or administrator by his immediate superior), although each third year the evaluation shall be conducted by the department head and a member of the administration and shall be used as a basis for selecting teachers for a performance commendation to be established by the Committee; NEA Code of Ethics adopted and accompanied by a statement that "if any member of the professional staff involves the student body in any matters which are properly the sole concern of the Association and the School Committee or agitates, incites, or provokes any action on behalf of the teachers, he will be censured by the Association, and the Administration informed of said action"; teachers are to be available for 30 minutes following the close of each school day in order to help and consult with students; teachers shall attend 1 faculty meeting per month which shall not last more than 75 minutes (2:45 p.m. to 4:00 p.m.), except that 2 meetings may begin at 1:00 p.m. "to allow for in-depth work on school programs or problems", when the administration is unable to secure a substitute teacher, regular teachers shall be assigned as substitutes during their free periods and on a rotating basis, but any teacher who substitutes more than 10 periods per year will be paid 1/900 of his base pay for each period beyond 10; a five-member Association elected Sabbatical Leave Screening Committee shall screen leave applicants and make recommendations to the superintendent by April 15 of each year; in order to advance on the salary schedule, a teacher with a B.A. degree must earn a minimum of 6 semester hours of credit for graduate study, travel, or other professional improvement activities within 6 years, while a teacher with an M.A. degree must earn a minimum of 3 semester hours in 6 years; after the first $40 of tuition for graduate study courses which are related to his subject or degree program and have been approved by his department head, the principal, and the superintendent, a teacher shall be fully reimbursed for up to 9 credit hours in 1 year (no more than 1 course per district semester) on completion of the course(s) with a passing grade(s); teachers enrolled in degree granting programs may leave the district high school early 1 afternoon per week on the day of the course and upon prior approval, and may request in advance an early departure at the end of the school year of a maximum of 5 days, provided the plans covering that final required week of work be approved and that the teacher return to the district for 1 academic year or forfeit the salary paid for those days of early departure.

Miscellaneous: Provision for a joint seven-member committee "to plan ways of scheduling the academic program and associated external educational activities" (see following provision reprint); provision for the formation of a special joint committee composed of the Association president and 2 teachers designated by him, the principal or his designee, the superintendent or his designee, and 2 pupils selected by the student council to draft any required modifications of school discipline regulations (including those relating to detention hall and cafeteria supervision) and submit a progress report to the superintendent by June 1, 1972; the administration "shall exert every effort to adhere to the class size recommended by the area department head"; costs of approved attendance at subject area workshops and conferences on nonschool days and on school days (limited to 2 such conferences per subject area department per year) shall be reimbursed at the rate of 10¢ per mile plus tolls for the use of a personal vehicle (or actual expenditures for commercial transportation), $9 per day for meals, lodging expenses, and subject area association membership dues if the membership is maintained in the name of the district high school.

INTRODUCTION OF CHANGE

1. The Association agrees that the District School Committee shall introduce at any time it feels such action to be desirable, such technological educational improvements and/or new programs of instruction and organization as designed to improve and to facilitate the educational program of the District. No teacher will be removed from the payroll as a result of these changes.

2. Recognizing the educational potential that exists in our surrounding communities, in their citizens, in their government and in their industries, the W.R.T.A., the School Administration and the School Committee plan to establish a program which will use this capability to increase the Resourcefulness, Relevance and Responsibility of our educational operations and at the same time make even more effective use of our existing teaching staff and facilities.

To accomplish this the Chairman of the School Committee, Superintendent of Schools, Principal, and President of the Wachusett Regional Teachers' Association shall appoint a committee of no less than seven people to plan ways of scheduling the academic program and associated external educational activities. These appointments to be made as follows: No less than one appointment by the Chairman of the School Committee; no less than one appointment by the Superintendent, no less than one appointment by the Principal; and no less than four appointments by the President of the W.R.T.A. This committee shall be responsible for implementing the R.R.R. program and for recommending other programs to insure that there will be no need to make additions to the faculty of the Wachusett Regional High School in the academic year 1971-1972. Therefore, the present number of teachers will be expected to assume responsibility for a greater number of students and a greater number of sections but shall retain five preparation periods per week. To enable this program to be organized in advance of the start of the 1971-1972 school year the School Committee will immediately budget up to $5,000. to be used for studies and other necessary research to implement this program. This committee shall have the responsibility of following through with their recommendations with the appropriate personnel in the school. This committee to make recommendations in writing no later than March 1, 1971 to the School Committee, Administration and Faculty. (Holden, Massachusetts)

Leaves: 20 days' annual sick leave, 170 days' maximum accumulation; extended sick leave at half-pay for as many months or fractions thereof as a teacher has years of service, less any months or fractions thereof for which he previously has received such leave; 15 days' leave per year for a serious or major illness in the immediate family deducted from sick leave; 2 separate days of personal leave shall be granted during the 1970-71 school year and 1 day in each subsequent school year which shall be cumulative to a maximum of 5 days; 3 separate days' leave for a death in the immediate family, and 5 separate days for the death of a child or a spouse; leave may be granted to attend state and national Association meetings; teachers shall be granted paid leave when subpoenaed to appear in court, although a salary deduction equal to the substitute's per-diem pay shall be made beginning with the fourth day of such absence; paid leave for jury duty less per-diem court allowance; sabbatical leave at half-pay for 1 year or full pay for one-half year after 7 years' service; summer sabbaticals at 1/40 of annual salary per week for a minimum of 17 weeks and a maximum of 20 weeks shall be taken during 2 summers within a five-year period.

Insurance: Board-paid state health insurance plan for individual and family coverage; board-paid $3,500 life insurance policy for individual coverage; dental insurance "shall be provided beginning January 1, 1971 for each teacher, with the employer premium payment not to exceed $7,500 for all members of the Association"; board provides tax sheltered annuities "in an amount for each covered employee to be determined by an agreed premium not exceeding the employee's statutory exclusion allowance and not less than $250 per year, the type of such annuity to be selected by the employee."

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local Association; the 3 permanent members of the Association negotiating team shall not be given any assignments by their building principals above and beyond the instructional load for a given subject matter area; 3 days' paid leave shall be granted 2 Association delegates to the state Association convention; a one-year leave of absence may be granted a teacher who is elected president of his state or national organization.

Instruction: Every effort will be made so that teachers will have no more than 2 subject matter preparations per day; average class sizes shall be 25 pupils per morning and afternoon session of kindergarten, 25 pupils in grades 1-9, and 20 pupils in grades 10-12; a joint committee composed of 3 teachers and 3 administrators shall, during the 1970-71 school year, discuss and make recommendations upon the concept of overload, a professional activities period, the evaluation of experimental and innovative programs, and the current limitation that denies credit for in-service courses; the proposed school calendar for the following school year "shall be submitted to the Association for review prior to its being adopted by the Board, and every effort will be made to incorporate teacher requests therein."

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with final and binding arbitration in cases of a violation of contract terms, but grievances involving any board rule, regulation, or policy shall end with advisory arbitration; teacher has right to examine his personnel file with the exception of medical, psychiatric, or professional reports contained therein; teachers shall be assigned no more than 5 teaching periods of 45 to 50 minutes' duration per day, except that English teachers "shall not be assigned more than four teaching periods per day of 45-50 minutes duration because a substantial amount of writing requiring careful analysis is expected"; whenever possible, preparation periods should be scheduled after no more than 3 consecutive teaching periods; elementary teachers shall receive a minimum of 195 minutes of unassigned time per week, and no teacher shall be scheduled for more than 1 day per week without any unassigned time of at least 30 minutes; duty-free lunch period of 30 minutes for all secondary teachers and 60 minutes for all elementary teachers; probationary teachers shall be evaluated at least 3 times per year by at least 2 of the following persons: principal, administrator, coordinator; tenure teachers shall be observed at least once per year by a principal or other supervisor; no more than 3 building staff meetings shall be held per month, and teachers are to receive at least 4 days' notification of such a meeting; regular secondary school faculty meetings shall be held on Monday afternoon and normally shall not exceed 1 hour in length; teachers also may be required to attend 3 district-wide staff meetings per year, excluding the orientation program at the beginning of the year; inservice workshop plan whereby each block of 10 graduate credits earned by a teacher for salary schedule advancement may include a maximum of 5 semester hours of workshop credit; a Sabbatical Leave Committee composed of the board president, the chairman of the board's education committee, the superintendent or his deputy, and 2 members of the Association's executive committee elected by a majority vote of that committee shall determine the value of any sabbatical leaves sought to the district and the individual and render a determination no later than 8 months prior to the effective date of the leave.

SELECTED PROVISIONS CONCERNING TEACHERS' RIGHTS AND ACTIVITIES OUTSIDE SCHOOL

An analysis of the 978 comprehensive agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more indicates that 421 agreements (43.0 percent) contained provisions dealing with teachers' rights, their personal and political activities outside school, short-term and long-term leaves of absence for political campaigns and public office, and teachers' employment outside the school system. As shown in Table 1, 90 agreements (21.4 percent) contained subject matter relative to the first three of the four areas of concern, and 88 agreements, (20.9 percent) referred to all four areas.

TABLE 1.—NEGOTIATED PROVISIONS RELATIVE TO TEACHERS' RIGHTS AND ACTIVITIES OUTSIDE SCHOOL, 1968-69

Item	Agreements containing designated content
	Number	Percent

Many of the agreements analyzed broadly stated that a teacher's personal and private life—including his religious, political, and other activities—is not the concern of the school board, provided such activities do not interfere with or reflect unfavorably upon the school or the teacher's responsibility to his pupils. In addition, such activities are not to take place during working hours or in situations construed to be under the sponsorship of the board. Some provisions specify that a teacher's religious or political activities shall not be grounds for discipline or discrimination with respect to his professional employment. Two sample provisions are:

A. The private and personal life of a teacher is not within the appropriate concern or attention of the Board except as it may interfere with the teacher's responsibilities to and relationships with students and/or the school system.

B. Teachers will be entitled to full rights of citizenship, and no religious or political activities of any teacher (provided such activities do not take place during his working hours,) or the lack thereof will be grounds for any discipline or discrimination with respect to the professional employment of such teacher. (Torrington, Connecticut)

* * *

F. Teachers shall be entitled to full rights of citizenship and no religious or political activities of any teacher or the lack thereof shall be grounds for any discipline or discrimination with respect to the professional employment of such teacher. The private and personal life of any teacher is not within the appropriate concern or the attention of the Board as long as the conduct of the individual teacher is within reasonable bounds of generally understood good professional conduct. (Boyne City, Michigan)

A number of agreements provide that a teacher "will be entitled to full rights of citizenship," or "is obligated" to act as an example of good citizenship as in the following provision:

The Board of Education regards teachers as being obligated to promote good citizenship by example as well as by precept and to practice, insofar as it is possible, the citizenship duties of being knowledgeable about pertinent political issues, registered to vote, and voting. The teachers are, of course, free to discuss political issues, campaign for candidates, run for and serve in public office. The teacher's responsibility to children and youth demands that partisan emphasis never be a part of the teaching concerning political issues and personalities. (Harford County, Bel Air, Maryland)

Active involvement in politics is recognized in agreements as a right afforded any citizen, but teacher involvement is restricted to activities conducted outside the classroom, off school premises, and outside working hours. Such activities include lobbying, organizing political groups, campaigning for or serving in public office, registering voters, and serving at polling spots. However, some agreements emphasize that teachers who are politically involved make certain that their actions and utterances are theirs as individuals and that they not exploit the institutional privileges of their professional positions. A sample provision is:

1. The teacher shall be guaranteed the right to be active politically, provided that such activity is not conducted on school premises during working hours and does not involve students of his school on school premises (such restriction does not prohibit a teacher from attending a political meeting on school premises at which students are present), and provided also that the teacher conduct such activity as a private individual and not as a representative of the BOARD or the school district, or its students. Political rights shall include but not be limited to registering and voting or assisting others therewith, participating in party organization activity, discussing political issues publicly, campaigning for or against candidates or propositions, lobbying, organizing political action groups, and running for and serving in public offices which are not incompatible with a teacher's employment with the school district. (Park Forest, Illinois)

Activities specifically prohibited by some contracts may result from state and/or federal statutory prohibitions and usually refer to active political involvement on school premises or within the scope of a teacher's employment. These activities include distributing political campaign literature on school property, posting political circulars or petitions on school bulletin boards, collecting or soliciting funds for political purposes, soliciting campaign workers or utilizing pupils as such, and using school equipment or personnel for political purposes. Occasional agreements provide, however, that these prohibited activities shall not include expressions of individual preference outside the school building (e.g., bumper stickers and buttons), nor shall they be construed to prohibit the use of political material for instructional purposes, as long as the presentation is impartial, open-minded, and fair. In conjunction with the citizenship clauses contained in many agreements, teachers often are expected to and/or considered responsible for providing pupils with the opportunity for examining controversial subjects and situations, including political campaigns. Two "political activity" provisions are:

A. Teachers of the School City of Hobart shall have entire liberty of political action when not engaged actively in their employment, provided such action is within the laws. . . and that such action does not impair their usefulness in their respective capacities.

B. The right of teachers to work and to vote for the party and candidates of their choice shall never be questioned, abridged, or denied.

C. Teachers shall be entirely free from political domination or coercion, or the pretended necessity of making political contributions of money or other things of value, or engaging in any political work or activity against their wishes under the assumption that failure to do so will in any way affect their status as teachers of the School City of Hobart.

D. Teachers are, however, expressly forbidden to participate actively on school property during school hours in any political party activities or political efforts of any kind whatsoever—including distribution of political campaign literature or soliciting funds for political purposes.

E. Use of political material for instructional purposes in the classroom is not forbidden, but each teacher must be accountable that his presentation is open-minded, fair, responsible, and respectful of the differing opinions of others. (Hobart, Indiana)

a. Full rights of citizenship shall be guaranteed to each teacher.

b. The Board and the Association recognize the right of teachers to participate in political governmental affairs in a manner afforded any other citizen, including: the right to vote; the right to be an active member of a political party; the right to campaign for candidates for election to public office; and the right to seek, campaign for, and serve in public office.

c. Political activities of any teacher seeking or holding office or campaigning for a candidate shall be conducted outside the classroom, off the school premises, and outside working hours. The following activities are specifically prohibited upon property under the jurisdiction of the Board:

1. Posting of political circulars or petitions on bulletin boards.
2. The distribution to employees of political circulars or petitions in their school mailboxes or otherwise, except for United States mail.
3. The collection of and/or solicitation for campaign funds.
4. Solicitation for campaign workers.
5. The use of pupils for writing or addressing political materials, or the distribution of such materials to pupils.
6. The use of the school's stenographic help, telephones, or equipment.

d. A teacher shall refrain from exploiting the privilege of his position. Neither shall a teacher exploit pupils in any way for political purposes for himself or for any party, candidate, or political issue. (Baltimore, Maryland)

Absent a specific statutory prohibition, teachers usually are guaranteed the right to become candidates for public office and serve in elective or appointive positions. Long-term and short-term leaves available to permanent (and occasionally probationary) teachers for purposes of campaigning for and holding public office vary widely in duration, but all are unpaid or only partially paid. Moreover, many agreements limit such leaves to employees with at least two to three years of continuous district experience, to a stated percentage of the bargaining unit per year, or to teachers with "satisfactory" performance ratings.

In some systems, a teacher may, upon 30 days' notice, be granted four weeks leave without pay to campaign for his own election to public office; if elected, he must request leave for the period of required duty, or resign his teaching position. Other contracts variously provide unpaid leave for campaigning and serving in full-time, salaried political positions for a period of time limited to the initial appointment, as needed to fulfill one term of office, in segments of one semester or more with a minimum of one semester, or for periods of one to four years. Political leaves often may be renewed or extended by the board upon request, although some agreements limit the length of such leaves to a single term of office of three or four years. Sample provisions are:

D. 1. A teacher who has been on the staff of the Lansing School District for a minimum of three years and has a record of satisfactory service shall be entitled to a leave of absence without pay to campaign for, or serve in, a public office.

2. Such leave shall be granted in segments of one semester or more by the Board on recommendation of the Superintendent.

3. Upon return from such leave, he shall be returned to a comparable position if the same position is not open.

4. Teachers holding political office requiring their occasional presence during school hours for non-compensable political office functions may utilize their available personal leave time for such absences. (Lansing, Michigan)

* * *

12. Political Leave—Upon request, permanent and probationary teachers shall be granted political leave in accordance with the following provisions:

a. With thirty (30) calendar days' notice, a teacher may be granted up to four (4) weeks leave, without pay, for the purpose of campaigning as a candidate in a civic election for public office, subject to the discretion of the Superintendent.

b. The Board shall extend to the teacher who is elected or appointed to public office a leave of absence or absences, without pay, as needed to fulfill one (1) term of office not to exceed four (4) years. At the conclusion of such leave of absence, the teacher shall be returned to his same or a reasonably comparable position. (Sanborn, New York)

A number of agreements differentiate between leaves for full-time, salaried elective or appointive positions (as discussed above) and leaves for part-time, nonsalaried positions, or those which provide only token compensation. In the latter case, teachers may be allowed "reasonable" time without loss of pay (provided no substitute is required) for campaigning for and serving in such a position, or leave as necessary with substitute docking. Some agreements stipulate that teachers use their personal leave time for holding any noncompensable political positions. Again, however, such activity is not to interfere with the teacher's contractual assignment in the school system or in any way impede the educational process. Occasional contracts name part-time municipal or county offices, or state legislative positions which a teacher may hold without loss of salary, although he usually is required to return any legislative salary, per-diem allowance, or other remuneration to the district. Short-term political leaves also may be granted to perform voter registration or Election Day duties. An example is:

6. Employees shall be permitted to participate actively in the party of their choice, serving as one of the county or precinct officers, as long as such participation does not adversely affect the work of the employee. This is to be done without reduction of salary.

Employees shall be permitted to be candidates for and serve if elected in the office of city councilman, and other unpaid or token payment offices within the city and county. Campaigning and serving shall be done on the time of the employee except for reasonable loss of time that shall not require a substitute for the employee. This is to be done without reduction of salary.

Employees shall be permitted to campaign, be candidates for and serve if elected to the Wyoming Legislature. The employee shall continue to receive school salary, but will return all legislative salary to the school system. The employee may retain the per diem allowance to cover living costs while serving in the Legislature.

Announced and unannounced candidates for elective state or national public offices other than the legislature will be expected to request a leave of absence or submit a resignation during the period of the campaign and upon election. The school system shall diligently attempt to place the employee in employment as soon after the election as possible if the employee is unsuccessful in his bid for office. The Board of Trustees will determine when an employee is an announced candidate. (Casper, Wyoming)

If a teacher is unsuccessful in his bid for public office, he usually shall return to his teaching position immediately (or at the termination of the leave period granted) and shall receive all accrued benefits as if he had been on active duty. Teachers who serve in a public office and then return to teaching variously are to return to their same or a comparable position, to their former position on the salary schedule, or to the salary schedule position they would have occupied if they had taught during the leave period. Some agreements state that a teacher's right of return shall not require the displacement of a long-term substitute. In most cases, returning teachers receive no accrued benefits, although they may retain their formerly accumulated sick leave as in the following provision:

A leave of absence of up to two (2) years shall be granted to any teacher upon application for the purpose of campaigning for, or serving in, a public office. Upon return from such leave such teacher shall be placed at the same position on the salary schedule as when he left. Persons on this leave will receive no benefits except they will be allowed to retain sick leave already accumulated. This leave will be limited to not more than one per cent (1%) of the bargaining unit. This leave will be for a minimum of one (1) semester and must commence at the beginning of a semester. (Orchard Lake, Michigan)

A teacher's employment outside school also is not considered to be the concern of the board unless it encroaches upon his instructional time, prejudices his effectiveness as a teacher, or discredits the teacher or the system. Some agreements call for written notification of a teacher's intention to perform outside work, while others require teachers to submit applications for outside employment to the board for approval. Three sample provisions are:

C. The Board will approve extra-curricular work or outside work by its employees following the Superintendent's approval if such work does not interfere with teaching or other functions of the employee and also provided that the outside work adheres to the Code of Ethics of the Teaching profession. All applications for outside work irrespective of its nature must be returned to the Board for its consideration.

D. It is a teacher's responsibility to inform the Board by letter (through the Superintendent's Office) of his intent to work at an outside position and shall give a brief job description. (Torrington, Connecticut)

* * *

While it is also recognized that teachers may accept some work outside of school hours for other employers during the regular school year, this should not interfere with the school assignment. Where there is reason to believe that a teacher's outside work is affecting the quality of his teaching, he will be expected to file with the Board a statement of the extent and nature of his outside work. This statement will be the basis for an evaluation of the teacher's situation by a committee appointed by the Board and the Association. (Logan, Utah)

* * *

Outside work, outside study or other activities undertaken by teachers during their non-duty hours are at the discretion of the individual. Such activities should not impair the teacher's ability to perform effectively in the teaching assignment, nor should they reflect discredit upon the teacher or the Alexandria City Public Schools. Notification of outside employment shall be given to the personnel office on a form established for this purpose. (Alexandria, Virginia)

PROFESSIONAL NEGOTIATIONS ACT FOR TEACHERS

AN ACT RELATING TO THE TEACHING PROFESSION, RECOGNIZING THE RIGHT OF TEACHERS TO JOIN ORGANIZATIONS OF THEIR CHOOSING, PROMOTING COOPERATION AND DISCUSSION BETWEEN SCHOOL BOARDS AND TEACHERS, ESTABLISHING PROFESSIONAL NEGOTIATION PROCEDURES, RECOGNIZING BARGAINING REPRESENTATIVES.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF MONTANA:

Section 1. Short title. Sections 1 through 14 of this act shall be known as the "Professional Negotiations Act for Teachers."

Section 2. Declaration of policy and purpose. In pursuance of the duty imposed upon it by the constitution to provide a system of free public schools and to adopt all means necessary and proper to secure to the people the advantages and opportunities of education, the legislative assembly hereby declares that it recognizes teaching as a profession which requires special educational qualifications and that to achieve high quality education it is indispensable that good relations exist between teaching personnel and their governing boards. It is, therefore, the policy of this state to recognize the rights of professional school employees to form, join, or assist professional employees' organizations to negotiate with their governing boards regarding the terms and conditions of professional service and to confer and consult in other matters for the purpose of establishing, maintaining, protecting and improving educational standards, and to establish procedures which will facilitate and encourage amicable settlement of disputes. It is further recognized that the authority of public school district boards of trustees is established by law and a district board of trustees has final authority for determining policies for the operation of public schools under its jurisdiction which are not inconsistent with law.

Section 3. Definitions. As used in this act, unless the context clearly requires otherwise:

(1) "Teacher" means an individual certificated in class 1, 2, 4 or 5 as provided in section 75-6006, R.C.M. 1947, but shall not include such certificated individuals who are not currently under contract to perform classroom teaching; however "teacher" shall include principals certificated in class 3 who so elect as provided in subsection (3);

(2) "Employer" means a school district as defined in section 75-6501, R.C.M. 1947.

(3) "Appropriate unit" means all of the teachers employed by a single employer. Principals employed by an employer may elect to be included in the appropriate unit or may elect to establish a separate appropriate unit of principals;

(4) "Board" means any public school board of trustees;

(5) "Strike" means any work stoppage by a teacher or teachers which interferes with the operation of a school or schools, which includes abstinence in whole or in part from the full, faithful and proper performance of the duties of employment, for the purposes of inducing, influencing or coercing an employer to change any terms or conditions relating to the employer-teacher relationship;

(6) "Teacher organization" means any organization of employees which includes teachers in membership;

(7) "Representative of teachers" means a representative elected pursuant to the provisions of section 7.

Section 4. Teachers' rights. It shall be lawful for teachers to organize, form, join or assist in employee organizations or to engage in lawful activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or to bargain collectively through representatives of their own free choice. Teachers shall also have the right to refrain from any or all such activity but shall be bound by a professional negotiations agreement involving the appropriate unit of which they are a member. It shall be the duty of an employer to meet and confer on any proposal advanced by a representative of teachers, or by a teacher or group of teachers if no representative of teachers has been selected, if such proposal does not endeavor to amend the terms of a professional negotiations agreement then in effect, and nothing in this act shall be construed to diminish such duty. However, a representative of teachers selected as provided by this act, shall be the exclusive representative of all the teachers in the appropriate unit to meet, confer or negotiate upon all matters permitted in section 5 and such teachers shall not negotiate individually.

Section 5. Duty to negotiate and bargain. It shall be the duty of all employers acting as a board, or acting by and through a bargaining agent designated or employed by the employer, and all teachers, or a representative of teachers, to meet and confer for professional negotiations purposes at the request of either, except as provided by this act, to discuss matters relating directly to the employer-teacher relationship such as salary, hours and other terms of employment, and to negotiate and bargain for agreement on such matters. The matters of negotiation and bargaining for agreement shall not include matters of curriculum, policy of operation, selection of teachers and other personnel, or physical plant of schools or other school facilities, however nothing herein shall limit the obligation of employers to meet and confer as provided in section 4. Teachers under a professional negotiations agreement, or the representative of teachers, shall not demand that professional negotiation conferences begin until after November 1 of the last year such agreement is effective, but, if professional negotiation is desired, must serve written notice of intention to negotiate collectively upon the employer not later than November 1 of such year stating specifically the items to be negotiated. If such notice is not served, the employer shall not be required to negotiate any terms of the employer-teacher relationship for the following school year. Professional negotiation agreements in effect at the time this act becomes effective shall continue to their expiration. No professional negotiation agreement shall extend for a term of more than two (2) years.

Section 6. Unfair practices. (1) Employers, their agents or representatives, are prohibited from the following unlawful acts:

(a) Interfering with, restraining or coercing teachers in any manner in their right of self-organization or selection of a representative;

(b) Discriminating in regard to conditions of employment when the purpose is to discourage membership in a teacher organization;

(c) Refusing to meet, confer or negotiate in good faith with teachers or the duly elected representative of an appropriate unit of teachers or with a panel selected upon impasse as provided in section 9, to discuss or negotiate upon any matter dealing directly with the employer-teacher relationship as provided in section 4;

(d) Refusing to reduce to writing and sign a professional negotiation agreement arrived at through negotiation and discussion;

(2) Teachers or teacher organizations, their agents or representatives, are prohibited from the following unlawful acts:

(a) Restraining or coercing teachers in violation of their rights guaranteed under section 4 or interfering in the conduct of an election as provided in section 7.

(b) Refusing to reduce to writing or sign a professional negotiation agreement arrived at through negotiation and discussion;

(c) Instituting, maintaining or participating in a strike or boycott against any employer, or picketing any school or school facility to further or to induce a strike or boycott because of any controversy; engaging in, or inducing or encouraging any individual to engage in, a strike or refusal to handle goods or perform services or threatening, coercing or restraining any individual where the object thereof is to force or require any employer to discontinue doing business with such individual or to force or require an employer to recognize a teacher representative not selected as provided in section 7;

(d) Refusing to meet, confer or bargain in good faith with an employer or its agents or with a panel selected upon impasse as provided in section 9, to discuss or bargain upon any matter dealing directly with the employer-teacher relationship as defined in section 5.

Section 7. Selection of teachers' representative. Any teacher organization whose membership includes a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit, as verified by affidavit of the secretary of the teacher organization delivered to the employer, shall be recognized by the employer as the representative of teachers in the appropriate unit, however, (1) if the membership of more than one (1) teacher organization desiring to represent the appropriate unit includes a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit or (2) if no teacher organization's membership includes a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit but thirty (30) percent or more of the teachers in the unit have petitioned the board, in writing, for a particular representative, or (3) if the employer questions whether a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit desire the representation of a teacher organization determined by organization membership and applies for an election, the board or his representative shall conduct an election by secret ballot to determine the representative to represent the teachers in the appropriate unit. The board shall give not less than ten (10) nor more than thirty (30) days' written notice of the time and place of such election by mailing to all teachers in the appropriate unit and by posting in the school or schools where such teachers teach. The board shall include on the ballot the names of all teacher organizations verified by affidavit to include a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit, or if no teacher organization claims a majority of such teachers, then the names of all prospective representatives offered by the petition of thirty (30) percent or more of the teachers in the unit received by the board not less than five (5) days prior to the date for election, and in either event the choice of "No representative." One candidate must receive a majority of the votes cast to be recognized as the representative of the teachers in the appropriate unit. If "No representative" receives a majority, no representative shall be recognized. If two (2) or more prospective representatives are named on the ballot and no choice receives a majority, a second election, after notice, shall be conducted naming the two (2) proposed representatives receiving the greatest number of votes in the first election. A determination under this section by secret ballot shall remain in effect for one (1) year after the date of the election and thereafter until the employer or thirty (30) percent or more of the teachers in the appropriate unit shall apply to the board for another election.

Section 8. Ratification of agreements. All professional negotiation agreements reduced to writing and executed by an employer and the representative of teachers must be ratified by a majority of the teachers in the appropriate unit before becoming binding upon the parties. If a professional negotiation agreement is executed by a professional negotiation agent of the employer it must be ratified by a majority of the board of the employer.

Section 9. Professional negotiation. If, after fifty (50) days following the commencement of negotiation between an employer, and a negotiating agent designated by the employer, and teachers, or a representative of teachers, an agreement cannot be reached upon any proper issue or issues presented, either party may notify the other in writing that it desires to present the issue or issues to a panel of three (3) persons, residents of the state in which the employer is located, one (1) to be selected by the employer, one (1) to be selected by the representative of teachers, and the third to be selected by the first two (2) named, who shall act as chairman of the panel. Each party shall select its panel member within ten (10) days after such notification. If the members selected by the parties are unable to agree upon the third member within ten (10) days from the date of their selection, the senior district judge of the county in which the employer is located shall submit the names of five (5) persons to the parties at impasse and each party shall in the presence of such senior district judge alternately strike one (1) name until only one (1) shall remain. The teachers or representative of teachers shall strike the first name. The person so remaining shall be the third panel member. Negotiation shall thereupon continue before the panel. The panel may take oral testimony under oath and shall consider all documents and arguments presented to it. If an agreement has not been reached by the parties within twenty (20) days after presentation before the panel has commenced, the panel shall make findings of fact and recommendations concerning the issues discussed and shall serve a copy upon both parties within five (5) days after such twenty (20) day period. Within five (5) days following mailing of such findings and recommendations, the parties must notify the county superintendent of schools and each other whether or not they accept the findings and recommendations of the panel, and unless both parties do so accept, the panel shall publicize its findings of fact and recommendations in such manner as it deems advisable. Not less than five (5) days nor more than ten (10) days after such publication of findings of fact and recommendations of the panel, the parties shall again notify the county superintendent of schools and each other whether or not they accept the recommendations of the panel. The parties may further negotiate and settle the issues at any time before or after the recommendations of the panel. Each party shall pay the expenses of its selected member of the panel and both parties shall share equally the expenses of the third member of the panel and the publication costs.

Section 10. Employer's right under other state laws. Nothing contained in this act shall impair the employer's right to hire teachers or to discharge teachers for cause consistent with other state laws.

Section 11. Court review. An employer, a duly elected representative of teachers, or if no representative of teachers has been selected, then a teacher or group of teachers, may institute proceedings in the district court for the county in which the employer is located to restrain the commission of any unlawful or unfair practice as provided in this act. Any teacher acting in violation of any court order to enforce the provisions of this act shall be subject to suspension without pay or dismissal at the discretion of the employer.

Section 12. Penalty for violation. Any teacher who violates the provision of section 6(2)(c) shall forfeit his salary for every day that he is in violation.

Section 13. Planning for negotiating sessions closed to public. Professional negotiating sessions between employers and teachers, or their representatives, may be open to the public, but meetings of school boards wherein professional negotiating proposals are discussed prior to any professional negotiating sessions shall be closed to the public.

Section 14. This act shall not operate so as to annul, modify or preclude the renewal or continuation of any lawful agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into between a board and a teacher organization. This act shall not preclude the modification of any existing agreement upon the request of either the board or the teacher organization in accordance with the procedure provided in this act.

Section 15. Severability. This act shall be severable, and should any part or provision hereof be declared unconstitutional by a competent court, such declaration will not invalidate the remaining provisions hereof.

FLORIDA

INSTRUCTION OF NEGOTIATOR AND NEGOTIATION OF TENTATIVE AGREEMENT MAY BE CONFIDENTIAL

Florida's "Government in the Sunshine" law (F.S. 286.011), which prohibits public officials from conducting official business in private, does not prohibit a public employer from privately instructing its negotiator as to his authority and limitations. Nor does it prohibit private negotiating sessions between the public employer and the public employees' representatives prior to reaching tentative agreement. In so ruling, the Dade County Circuit Court determined that procedures followed by the Dade County school board in 1970 negotiation with the Dade County Classroom Teachers Association represented "lawful activity," and that the board's "actions in considering and voting upon the negotiators' package... was a lawful exercise of its authority."

When the Dade County board at its December 9, 1970, public meeting voted preliminary approval of a package mediated in secret with the Association, an attorney filed suit alleging violation of F.S. 286.011. Shortly afterward, the Association filed a counterclaim for declaratory judgment that the statute does not require public employers to negotiate in public, and that the parties' 1970 negotiation was legal.

At the outset, the court cited a 1969 ruling by the Florida Supreme Court in Dade County Classroom Teachers' Association, Inc. v. Ryan which held that Art. 1, § 6, of the state constitution mandates public employee bargaining and grants public employees the same bargaining rights as workers in private industry, exclusive of the right to strike. Examining the procedural steps comprising the bargaining process, the court acknowledged that "some aspects of governmental collective bargaining must be completely open to public scrutiny at all times." It specified that the procedure for determining the negotiating team must be openly conducted, as must "the presentation of the negotiators' tentatively agreed upon proposals for consideration by the government employer."

However, the intermediate steps wherein the public employer instructs its negotiator regarding his authority and limitations and the parties meet to discuss their proposals prior to reaching tentative agreement may be conducted in private. The court explained:

> To rule otherwise is to put the taxpayer at a gross disadvantage when his representatives are chosen and instructed and are negotiating. The Government in Sunshine law applies only to one side—the government employer. The employees' negotiator is, and will continue to be, instructed in secrecy .... If this type of unilateral bargaining is required, the public board, in this case the school board, is hindered and seriously impaired in its ability to function as a bargaining representative. . . . The purpose of collective bargaining is to promote the rational exchange of facts and arguments that will measurably increase the chance for amicable agreement. Public communication of the negotiations would virtually exclude genuine good faith negotiations and would, in effect, limit bargaining on all matters on which the public negotiator took a stand.
> The temporary privacy of this portion of the collective bargaining process enables the government employer to bargain collectively, as he must under constitutional mandate, and to do so on equal terms with his employees. Since the work product of these negotiations is tentative and is binding on no one, and since the public will be given the opportunity to express itself on those proposals prior to their approval by the government employer, this temporary seclusion cannot be in violation of the letter, or purpose of Government in the Sunshine law.

Citing "uncontroverted testimony" to the effect that "meaningful collective bargaining will be destroyed if full publicity is accorded to each step," the court discussed the adverse effects publicity would have upon the employer's original bargaining position and the collective bargaining process generally. Moreover, since the state constitution mandates collective bargaining, "statutory interference therewith would not be justified. To the extent that F.S. 286.011 would curtail collective bargaining, its provisions would be pro tanto unconstitutional. However, this Court construes the provisions of F.S. 286.011 as not reaching into the collective bargaining session or the instructions given to the public negotiators. Such a construction saves the statute."

The court then examined the Dade County bargaining process, finding that the school board hired an independent negotiator as its representative at a regularly scheduled April 1, 1970, meeting which was open to the public and the press, and that it had not discussed the negotiator's employment prior to this time. Secondly, while there was no testimony regarding the manner in which the board instructed its negotiator, the court found no violation of F.S. 286.011, even if instructions were delivered privately. The court stated that "it is the duty of all the board members to meet with the negotiator and set out his guidelines and authority."

Thirdly, the board's practice of having its negotiator meet in secret with Association representatives in arriving at a tentative agreement was "well placed. The public's interest does not lie requiring negotiators for public employers to come to the table stripped of strategy or tactics by premature exposure to the public and their adversaries."

Finally, the tentative proposals developed by the parties' negotiators in secret were presented at an open, regularly scheduled school board meeting on December 9, 1970, where they were modified and adopted. Concluding that the entire procedure "clearly conforms to the interrelated requirements of Article I, Section 6 of the Constitution; and F.S. [2] 86.011," the court ruled that the actions of the Dade County board were lawful and stated that "there is no bar to further action the School Board may take" upon the negotiation package adopted on December 9. (Patrick K. Bassett, et al. v. G. Holmes Braddock, et al. v. Dade County Classroom Teachers' Association, Inc., Dade County Circuit Court, March 25, 1971.)

NEW YORK

DECISIONS ON THREE ASPECTS OF TEACHER STRIKE ISSUE ARE RENDERED

Three recent New York court cases dealing with the teacher strike issue have resulted in separate decisions acquitting individual teachers of criminal contempt for striking while finding the union guilty, upholding the Taylor Law's provision for fining strikers through payroll deduction, and ruling that teachers who appeal strike penalties must enter individual suits rather than a class action. Brief summaries of the cases follow.

- The Westchester County Supreme Court acquitted seven teachers of contempt of court for violating a preliminary injunction against a strike but judged the Lakeland Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1760, guilty of criminal contempt for its "willful disobedience to the lawful mandate of this court." In proceedings resulting from a strike conducted by the union in September 1970, the court held that the school board of Central School District No. 1 failed to sustain its "burden of proof as to the guilt of the individual defendants beyond a reasonable doubt." However, the court did find evidence of the union's "deliberate defiance" of the injunction and accordingly fined the union $5,000.

During the contempt proceedings, the court found that while > plaintiff's witnesses established that there was a strike from Sept. 8, 1970, through Sept. 16, 1970, within the meaning of section 210(1) and (10) of the Civil Service Law and that the defendant union engaged in, caused, instigated, encouraged and condoned the strike, insufficient proof has been adduced to warrant a finding of willful disobedience and therefore to warrant granting the relief sought as to the defendants other than the union.... There was testimony that certain of the defendants were absent during the course of the work stoppage and that certain of the defendants were seen on a picket line in front of the schools during the strike, however, no other evidence of willful defiance of the orders of the court on the part of any of the individual defendants was demonstrated. Plaintiff failed to sustain the burden of proof as to the guilt of the individual defendants beyond a reasonable doubt.

However, the court also found that from September 9 through September 16, the union "instigated the strike and caused strike bulletins and other communications to be issued to teachers and parents in the Lakeland District urging support of the teachers in the strike. These strike bulletins . . . show that the strike was deliberately planned and executed by the defendant union.... The court cannot condone or forgive the defendant union's deliberate defiance of the court." (Board of Education of Central School District No. 1 v. Lakeland Federation of Teachers, Local 1760, New York Supreme Court, Westchester County, February 3, 1971.)

- Another ruling of the Westchester County Supreme Court (NRD, 6-70, 4) which dismissed a petition to enjoin the New Rochelle education board from fining certain teachers who had engaged in a June 1969 strike was affirmed on appeal by the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division. The lower court had held that provisions of sec. 210 of the Taylor Law which authorize payroll deductions of two days' pay for each day a public employee is on strike do not constitute a bill of attainder, since sufficient due process is provided in the statutory procedures by which a public employee may object to a determination that he has engaged in a strike.

In addition, the lower court had ruled that sec. 210 does not infringe upon public employees' rights of free association and free speech because "the ability to strike is not essential to the right of association and it is certainly subordinate to the right of the State to prohibit such activity, this latter right having been repeatedly upheld by the courts." (Matter of Stephen Zeluck, et al. v. Board of Education, Ctiy School District of City of New Rochelle, New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, February 1, 1971.)

- Teachers found to have violated the no-strike provisions of the New York Taylor Law cannot bring class action suits seeking to enjoin the imposition of penalties because each teacher's reasons for absenting himself during the strike are different. In ruling that teachers can challenge strike penalties only by bringing individual lawsuits, the Monroe County Supreme Court dismissed a class action brought by four Rochester city school district teachers on behalf of some 500 teachers who boycotted district classes on March 3, 1970. The court explained:

In the case at bar the reasons submitted by each individual employee in his answering affidavit and supporting proof are personal and are peculiar to each employee. We do not have a question which is one of a common or general interest as is required in Section 1005(a) Civil Practice Law and Rules in order that a class action may be maintained.

Following the boycott and in accordance with provisions of the Taylor Law, the Rochester superintendent fined the teachers two days' pay and placed them on probation for one year. Hearings were offered 180 of the striking teachers, but the superintendent denied hearings to the 500 teachers represented in the present class action. While plaintiffs requested that a hearing be granted to each teacher who had submitted an affidavit challenging the superintendent's findings, the court cited a portion of sec. 210(h) of the law which states:

If the chief executive officer shall determine that the affidavit and supporting proof raises a question of fact which, if resolved in favor of the employee did not violate this subdivision, he shall appoint a hearing officer to determine whether in fact the employee did violate this subdivision after a hearing at which such employee shall bear the burden of proof.

Since the Rochester superintendent acted as chief executive officer pursuant to statute, the court concluded that "the determination of these questions [is] not within the province of this court." It also dismissed as lacking in merit plaintiffs' request that the district be permanently enjoined from penalizing those teachers who had not been granted hearings. The court explained that the law's procedures for determining violations constitute sufficient due process, and that the penalties imposed here statutorily are authorized. (James Sudore, et al. and the Board of Education of the City School District of the City of Rochester and Herman R. Goldberg, New York Supreme Court, Monroe County, February 12, 1971.)

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

IMPARTIAL HEARING NOT REQUIRED IN NONRENEWAL OF TENURE TEACHER

In its first case involving the procedural rights of tenure teachers whose contracts are not renewed, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit decided that a Maine teacher failed to exhaust available administrative remedies and that he had been afforded procedural due process by the Windham, Maine School Committee. Observing that "a determination of what procedures afford dismissed teachers due process requires a complex balancing of interests," the court found "serious problems" with plaintiff's interpretation of the Maine statute governing tenure teachers' procedural rights. It consequently affirmed a district court's entry of summary judgment in the case, which was brought against the Windham superintendent and school committee members under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

The pertinent portion of the Maine statutes provides:

After a probationary period of 3 years, any teacher, who receives notice in accordance with this section [i.e., at least 6 months before the terminal date of the contract] that his contract is not going to be renewed, may during the 15 days following such notification request a hearing with the school committee or governing board. He may request reasons. The hearing shall be private except by mutual consent and except that either or both parties may be represented by counsel. Such hearing must be granted within 30 days of the receipt of the teacher's request.

Plaintiff, a tenure teacher with five years' service in the Windham schools, was notified by the superintendent in a letter dated December 13, 1969, that the school committee had voted not to renew his contract. Upon request, plaintiff was furnished on January 14, 1970, with a list of the reasons for his nonrenewal by counsel to the committee, and a hearing was set for January 21. Then at the hearing, plaintiff's counsel objected because the proceedings were not public, the witnesses were sequestered, and he was not allowed to cross-examine committee members. As the committee refused to sustain any of the objections, plaintiff declined further participation in the proceedings, and consideration of the merits of his nonrenewal never was reached. The committee's initial decision not to renew plaintiff's contract thus remained in effect. Plaintiff entered a district court action, and that court's judgment was appealed here.

The court of appeals initially noted that plaintiffs who bring § 1983 actions normally must exhaust available administrative remedies; it explained that "we hesitate to hold members of school committees liable for tentative dismissal decisions when they are denied the opportunity to view the issue in the light of the facts and argument which the affected teachers might introduce in a formal hearing." However, in light of another decision and plaintiff's argument that the Windham committee followed a procedure which was not required by state statute, the court found that it must consider plaintiff's statutory argument.

Plaintiff first asserted that the Maine statute requires a superintendent to notify a teacher before he recommends nonrenewal to the committee so that the teacher may obtain the reasons for the superintendent's recommendation and be afforded a hearing before the entire committee. As such, the issue of nonrenewal would first be considered during the requested hearing, and the committee presumably would be unable to dismiss a teacher in his absence. The appeals court, however, found no basis in the statute for plaintiff's interpretation and explained:

> Under the statute, a teacher is entitled to notice "that his contract is not going to be renewed . . .", not notice that the Superintendent has recommended nonrenewal. The language contemplates action by the entire Committee before the teacher is notified. Moreover, plaintiff's interpretation assumes that there is no occasion for the Committee itself to initiate a dismissal, yet the Committee is expressly granted the power to initiate a dismissal under the Maine statute.

Plaintiff also maintained that he was given an inadequate statement of the committee's reasons for his nonrenewal and objected because the reasons came from counsel to the committee, rather than the committee itself. In dismissing plaintiff's claim, the court noted that it was inconsistent with his first argument (since the committee could not have furnished reasons before the hearing unless it previously had considered plaintiff's nonrenewal), and that the statute merely requires that a teacher be given "reasons." Moreover, the court found that plaintiff "was clearly put on notice of the charges against him" and pointed out that the committee's characterization of the reasons as unproven charges "instead of reasons to be rebutted may have eased plaintiff's burden of proof and should have eased his mind of the matter initially discussed, namely, that the Committee had prejudged its case."

The court also found no "material significance" to the fact that two of the reasons for nonrenewal were events occurring after the committee's vote not to renew. As long as plaintiff was put on notice before the hearing of all events the committee would consider, the court saw no reason why the committee should ignore incidents "which indicated a continuing course of improper conduct." Observing that the committee "may have afforded plaintiff more procedural protection than he was entitled to under the statute" (e.g., a stenographic record of the hearing was kept), the court held that there was "no justification for plaintiff's refusal to follow the proceedings through to the end."

In the alternative, plaintiff objected to the constitutionality of the statutory procedure, arguing that "due process requires a completely neutral decision-maker at the hearing and that the Committee, having already made an initial decision not to renew plaintiff's contract, was not impartial." But the court of appeals emphasized the inappropriateness of the issue since it was raised for the first time on appeal and "at no point does the record show that this matter was argued or even alluded to before the district court." Commenting on the argument, however, the court concluded that > we might on rare occasion consider it if the facts pleaded, proved, or sworn to clearly pointed to a blatant and clear deprivation of constitutional rights. This, however, is not such a case. Such law as exists on the constitutional requirement and definition of an "impartial tribunal" in cases of teacher dismissals is varied and murky. The policy implications are vast. . . . There is some authority for plaintiff's proposition, Pickering v. Board of Education, ... but we note that no court has required a school system to create the procedure plaintiff seeks.

>
> We see serious problems with this procedure because it would either prevent a Committee from initiating a dismissal or permit it to initiate a dismissal but then require another body of neutral outsiders to review personnel decisions that are properly the responsibility of the Committee. . . . A requirement that the Superintendent serve as prosecutor and bring a proposed dismissal before the Committee for the first time in an adversary proceeding is inconsistent with the Maine statute authorizing the Committee to initiate dismissals. . . . If we required the state or municipalities to create neutral bodies to which the Committee's decision to dismiss could be appealed, we would be engrafting into educational administration an appellate layer of enormous complexity, and might well exceed the boundaries of our judicial authority and trespass into legislative territory.

Board Findings and Rulings

CALIFORNIA

ARBITRATOR SAYS SCHOOL BOARD IS BOUND BY NEGOTIATED BINDING GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION CLAUSE

An arbitrator determined that the education board of Placentia Unified School District was bound by and could not unilaterally withdraw from a provision for binding grievance arbitration contained in an agreement negotiated and ratified by the board and the Placentia Unified Education Association. In a long historical and theoretical discussion of arbitration and the "threshold question of arbitrability," he found that "belated and specious concerns" about the lawfulness of the provision could not alter the board's original commitment and commented:

> The modern legal thrust in public employment generally throughout the country is to sanction grievance arbitration. This trend is increasing with the realization both that the range and specifics of the administrative issues being resolved by submission to grievance arbitration bear a remarkable resemblance to those that have long since been the grist for private-sector arbitration and that arbitrators appear to apply essentially the same standards developed in the private sector. . . . The trend is solidly buttressed by the elemental link between the relinquishment or prohibition of the right of employees to strike and the alternative resort for dispute resolution to arbitration. . . . Where grievance arbitration has existed in the private sector, a marked decrease has occurred in "wildcat" strikes—those that are unlawful because of contractual or statutory prohibition. With the surge of "job actions" in the public sector, including teachers, the moral should be wholly visible: where courts may by reasonable interpretation do so, they should presume lawful rather than unlawful statutory delegation of the power of public employer bodies, including boards of education, to submit grievances for final and binding arbitration.

On September 15, 1970, the Association and the board "informally agreed" upon a document which subsequently was ratified by both parties. That agreement contained a grievance procedure allowing a grievant who remained unsatisfied after pursuing his grievance through three progressive steps to request review of the matter by a three-member panel. The clause then provided that "the panel's review of the grievance and its subsequent findings shall be rendered in writing within five (5) working days after the panel has been confirmed and shall constitute a final and binding decision regarding the grievance."

Three weeks after the board had ratified the agreement, it requested a legal review by the county counsel which resulted in 21 suggested changes in the agreement and a statement "that much of the wording in the existing document goes beyond the requirements of the Winton Act, either as it exists or as it has been amended, effective November 23, 1970." While the board should not feel the suggested changes "must be followed," counsel added that "not to do so would both unduly limit the District's ability to act, and because of the nature of the concessions made therein, provide a wedge usable by CTA in discussions with other districts."

The county counsel's opinion specifically took issue with the finality of the negotiated grievance procedure, observing:

> There is a distinct possibility, based upon the experiences from other districts, that the decision made by such a panel could, in fact, be contrary to Board rules and regulations. While grievance procedures provide that a grievance pertains only to the interpretation of Board rules and policy, panels constituted as outlined here in the proposed (sic) procedure could, because of the equities involved, reach decisions contrary to existing rules. For this reason, and others, we would suggest any decision made by such a panel be advisory to the governing board which should have the power to make final decisions.

On November 30, 1970, the Association president asked that the board designate its representative to sit on the grievance review panel. The superintendent replied (as directed by the board) that "the findings reached by the panel will be advisory only," owing to the county counsel's opinion and a board study of its rights and authority under state law. Concluding that implementation of the binding arbitration provision "would be illegal," the board considered that conclusion to be an "emergency" warranting deviation from a portion of the parties' agreement stating that "no change, alteration or modification of these Articles I through XI shall take place during the 1970-71 fiscal year, unless there is mutual agreement of the Board of Education and the Negotiating Council, except in the case where the Board of Education determines that an emergency exists."

The board appointed its representative to the panel but reiterated its belief that the binding arbitration provision was unlawful and its determination that the panel's findings "would be accepted only as advisory." In addition, in its January 12, 1971, Information Bulletin, the board outlined a "detailed chronology of events related to the status of grievance procedures." According to the arbitrator, > this "chronology" declared that the September 23, 1970, ratification by the teachers and then by it of the Agreement did not create a contractual relationship—"At no time was it considered to be a collective bargaining agreement or master contract of any kind." — . . . although it conceded that the contents of the Agreement "were informally agreed upon" . . . and asserted that "the items were agreed upon in good faith by both parties. . . . The chronology noted that after both parties had "agreed upon" the policies contained in the Agreement "the material" was sent to the Orange County Counsel "for legal advice [and] interpretation". . . . The response of the Counsel prompted the Board to decide that it would "cooperate" in the grievance procedures but that a decision of the panel "would be advisory only" . . . because "the Board was following the advice of their legal counsel which they are required by law to do."

A demand for arbitration was filed by the Association on December 16, 1970, on behalf of two teachers it claimed "were inequitably assigned and overloaded." Once the parties had selected the present arbitrator to chair the grievance panel, the Association raised the question of the case's arbitrability and whether the decision of the panel would be binding on the parties or merely advisory. After various proceedings, the arbitrator ruled that the grievances were arbitrable, "which is to say, that the jointly ratified Agreement of the parties provided for final and binding arbitration of the grievances, and that the Board could not unilaterally abrogate that joint commitment."

When the board's representative declared he was unauthorized to proceed further on that basis, the arbitration hearing was recessed pending an Association appeal for a court order enforcing the panel's arbitrability award and compelling the board to proceed to arbitrate. The arbitrator commented upon the lawfulness of binding public employee grievance arbitration:

> [T]he adverse inference contained in the County Counsel's Opinion letter is unwarranted in the experience of those who have worked with grievance arbitration in recent years. Actually . . . a fair reading of that letter discloses that in major part it amounted to tactical advice on negotiating with the teachers' representative. . . . It is notable that the Opinion did not say that this Agreement was unlawful, only that it went beyond the minimal requirements of the Winton Act. . . . Earlier judicial authority reflecting community attitudes rejecting the idea of negotiating for such things as grievance arbitration by public employees through their elected representatives is simply being bypassed by more recent judicial interpretations. Older notions about "delegability" and "plenary power" are being replaced by more contemporary ideas . . . [and] the notion of illegal delegability is receiving short shrift in the most recent decisions of the state supreme courts. . . . It is obvious that it will serve the public interest greatly to assure that the tensions and frustrations of public employees—including teachers—over unresolved grievances be channeled away from "job actions"—regardless of their legality—and into the ameliorating "therapy of arbitration," as the Supreme Court has described [it].
>
> As Arvid Anderson, Chairman of New York City's Office of Collective Bargaining, and . . . one of the nation's foremost authorities in reference to these problems, has realistically observed, "If the public wants arbitration as a means of resolving public employee disputes, the courts will find new answers to overcome traditional legal obstacles."

INDIANA

ADVISORY ARBITRATOR SUSTAINS UNION GRIEVANCE AGAINST PERFORMANCE CONTRACTING PROGRAM

A three-part grievance brought by the Gary Teachers Union in the face of a performance contracting program which violated provisions of a negotiated contract was sustained by an advisory arbitrator. Observing that "it has been held that a contract entered into knowingly by a party which subverts an existing agreement is not enforceable," the arbitrator ordered 13 teachers reinstated, directed that the pupil-teacher ratio at the experimental school be readjusted, and called for the restoration of negotiated "local conditions and practices." However, since the arbitration award is not binding, effectuation of the award by the Gary school board remains open to question.

The performance contracting arrangement agreed upon by the board and the Behavioral Research Laboratories (BRL) of California provided that BRL would operate an inner-city "Curriculum Center School" under a four-year program involving a minimum of 700 pupils in kindergarten through the sixth grade. Regular staff members at the designated elementary school were to do the teaching, but all teaching and related school services (secretarial, janitorial, food service, and busing) were to be supervised by a BRL "Project Manager."

Then, when the program was under way, 14 teachers at the elementary school were notified by BRL that they were "surplus" according to a teacher profile developed by the company and not discussed with any staff members involved.

One teacher later was reinstated, but the other 13 were transferred under a clause in the BRL-board agreement providing: "Upon fifteen (15) days written notice from BRL, [the school board will] accept for reassignment any teacher or administrator who BRL advises is not suitable for work in the Center."

Prior to implementation of the program, the Indiana attorney general advised the Gary school system that the proposed contract "would have the effect of removing [the designated elementary school] from the Common School System of Indiana and would, therefore, be illegal." While the BRL contract was rewritten to place the company in a merely "consultive capacity," a subsequent investigation of the program by the state assistant superintendent for instructional services found that BRL actually operated the elementary school and made all administrative and instructional decisions. The state official additionally reported that 25 percent of the school's staff was not certified or licensed, that the project manager was not eligible for certification, and that there appeared to be violations in the areas of "letting of the contract, use of state adopted textbooks, portioning of time to provide for a fully-rounded curriculum, administration of the program and building, certification, and maintenance of the pupil-teacher ratio required by the commission now held by [the school]."

The union first charged that it was neither consulted about the performance contracting program nor given much information about it, despite the superintendent's statement that "successful execution [of the program] will require extensive negotiations with the teachers union and the state Department of Public Instruction." Union objections to the BRL agreement with respect to the 15-day transfer provision (which had no counterpart in the negotiated contract) and a probable imbalance in the negotiated maximum pupil-teacher ratio were presented to the Gary board at a conference, but no action was taken. Later in the year, paraprofessional employees at the elementary school threatened to strike owing to dissatisfaction with BRL management of the school; the strike did not, however, occur.

When the union sought arbitration of its grievance, the school board apparently agreed to a hearing. But the board boycotted the actual arbitration proceedings, and the hearing was held ex parte. At that time, the union contended that the board "wilfully" had agreed to a contract with a private organization which contained provisions violative of the parties' negotiated agreement. While the superintendent had recognized that the program should be negotiated, no discussions occurred, and the union maintained that it had given the board "every reasonable warning" of the grieved matters. Therefore, it contended that the board committed an "anticipatory" breach of the negotiated agreement by proceeding with the program.

The arbitrator first pointed out that the parties' contract specifies that involuntary transfers shall be effected only when necessitated by "the opening of a new building, the closing of an old facility or when a change in course offerings or reduction in pupil enrollments necessitates a reduction in staff." He noted that none of these conditions "is met by the transfers that were made." Moreover, while "it cannot be gainsaid" that the performance contracting program altered local conditions and practices as defined in the negotiated agreement, the arbitrator found that the union "was alert to the problems which were unfolding and cannot be accused of not trying in every reasonable way to bring its views before the board and superintendent." He explained further:

> Nor should it be assumed that the union in this matter is taking a "stick in the mud" attitude of simply opposing new teaching ideas for the sake of their newness. There is nothing in this record to indicate that BRL has any touchstone of success for teaching reading and mathematics. Certainly the utilization of unlicensed teachers to the extent of 25 percent of the faculty is not a step in the direction of enlightened improvement of instruction. Nor does it appear from the backgrounds of these unlicensed teachers and the unlicensed project manager that they possess any noted expertise in the very areas which BRL professes such competence.
> The teacher-pupil ratio is completely out of kilter under the BRL operation, and this violates the union agreement provisions predicated upon studies made by the Gary schools themselves in 1967.

With regard to the union's "anticipatory breach" argument, the arbitrator found that the Gary board did in fact render itself incapable of complying with the negotiated contract by entering into a conflicting agreement with BRL. Questioning the enforceability of the BRL agreement, the arbitrator observed:

> There is grave doubt that the BRL agreement meets the requirements of contract law for being in accord with "public policy" and "not being illegal." The requirements of licensure of teachers no longer is open to judicial question. The courts long ago settled the proposition that the profession of teaching is so affected with the public interest that licensing is an appropriate exercise of the state's power.
> Anything which tends to debase to learned professions is at war with the public interest and contrary to public policy. . . . The arbitrator is well aware of the importance of not invoking the doctrine of "public policy" carelessly, but certainly it is applicable when any agreement is negotiated which has the effect of countenancing violations of teacher licensing laws and other legal requirements governing education.

In sustaining the union's grievance, the arbitrator concluded that "if the school board finds itself in a dilemma of having agreements which are antagonistic to each other, the provisions of the agreement with the union are valid and subsisting and should be carried out." (In Re Arbitration Between Gary Teachers Union and Gary School Board, American Arbitration Association, February 19, 1971.)

NEW YORK

SCHOOL BOARD COMMITS IMPROPER PRACTICE BY UNILATERALLY IMPOSING POST-SABBATICAL LEAVE REQUIREMENT

A school board's acknowledged unilateral imposition of a post-sabbatical leave requirement was ruled an improper practice under the Taylor Law by the New York Public Employment Relations Board (PERB). The PERB agreed with a hearing officer that sabbatical leave is a term and condition of employment and is a proper subject for negotiation. It additionally determined that while it has no "general jurisdiction to police and enforce" public employee agreements, "conduct which constitutes a breach of contract may also constitute an improper practice" and thereby be subject to PERB jurisdiction. Finding the board's action to be a violation of its statutory obligation to bargain in good faith, the PERB ordered the board to cease and desist from its unilateral activities and refrain from enforcing the requirement.

The East Meadow Teachers Association alleged that the UFSD No. 3 school board committed a violative act when in April 1970, it unilaterally required unit employees "as a condition for the granting of . . . sabbatical leave, to . . . return to employment . . . for a period of not less than two years." The parties' negotiated agreement contained no such provision, and the board admitted that it unilaterally had imposed the requirement during the term of the agreement. Determining that sabbatical leave is "a condition of employment similar to other types of paid leave in which an employment relationship is maintained," the hearing officer held that > despite the fact that the [board] is empowered . . . to adopt rules or regulations for the granting of leaves of absence, it follows, and I find, that the post-sabbatical leave provision lies within the scope of mandatory subjects of negotiations. The [board], prior to exercising its conceded power under the Education Law, was required by the [Taylor Law] to engage in good faith negotiations with the charging party. This it did not do. Accordingly, the [board] must be found to have violated §209-a.1(d) of the Act, unless there is merit in its affirmative defenses.

In considering the board's arguments, the hearing officer found that the PERB "clearly has jurisdiction in this matter" since it is granted "the power and function of establishing 'procedures for the prevention of improper employer and employee organization practices.'" He also pointed out that > the statutory obligation to negotiate in good faith does not cease subsequent to the execution of a collective agreement. As was stated in a recent article by the Director of Public Employment Practices and Representation of this Board and a member of his staff: "Moreover, even after a contract has been signed, the parties may be guilty of bad-faith bargaining. Thus, it would appear to be improper for one of the parties to unilaterally change a negotiated or preexisting term or condition of employment." Just as a public employer could not, in the first instance, unilaterally determine those matters to be included in a collective agreement, neither can it, during mid-term of the agreement, make unilateral changes. Unilateral action, at either stage, is the antithesis of good faith negotiations.

The school board next contended that PERB jurisdiction should not be asserted because the union had failed to submit the dispute to the contractual grievance procedure. But the hearing officer found that "this dispute is not one of contract interpretation, but of statutory obligation. Therefore, the charging party may rely herein upon the provisions of the Act rather than the collective agreement."

Finally, the school board argued that its unilateral action was for the purpose of achieving certain desirable educational goals according to its past experience. In dismissing that argument, the hearing officer held that > neither experience nor reasonableness is at issue here. What is at issue is the manner and method in which the [board] acted and its deliberate circumvention of the duly recognized negotiating representative of its employees. Clearly, this constitutes a failure to engage in good faith negotiations. It follows that the [board's] unilateral action cannot be condoned, even if based upon an erroneous legal premise or a bona fide business consideration.

The hearing officer accordingly concluded that the board's unilateral action constituted a refusal to negotiate in good faith, thereby depriving district employees of "their statutory right to have the employee organization of their choice negotiate with regard to a significant change in a condition of their employment."

In filing exceptions to that conclusion, the East Meadow board argued that sabbatical leave is not a condition of employment under the Taylor Law, that its alleged unilateral action would constitute a breach of agreement (not an improper practice) and thus could only be grieved by the Association, and that the question had become moot since the parties' subsequent agreement contained a provision covering the point at issue. The PERB initially dismissed the board's first contention in agreeing with the hearing officer's determination that sabbatical leave is a proper subject of negotiation.

With regard to the grievance procedure argument, the PERB noted that the issue was one of first impression, and that it raised the question of board authority to "police and enforce" negotiated public employer-employee agreements. Concluding that it has no such power and that the state legislature "has not dealt explicitly with this problem," the PERB turned to the private sector where it appears to be well-settled that the National Labor Relations Board does not have general jurisdiction over alleged violations of collective bargaining agreements. In reaching this conclusion, the Supreme Court relied upon the legislative history of the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act and concluded that Congress "deliberately chose to leave the enforcement of collective agreements to the usual processes of law." . . . [W]e find the conclusion reached by the Supreme Court in the private sector to be a salutary approach, particularly since the legislature of this state did not provide that a breach of a negotiated agreement would constitute an improper practice. However, . . . a second question arises whether conduct which constitutes a breach of contract may also constitute an improper practice. This question requires an affirmative answer in light of facts of this case.

Respondent herein agreed, in the negotiated agreement, to maintain existing policies, practices and procedures relating to sabbatical leave. Respondent unilaterally changed such practices, policies and procedures without negotiating such change with the representative of its employees. This constitutes a violation of §209-a.1(d) of the Act in that it violates respondent's obligation "to negotiate in good faith" with such representative.

Finally, the PERB dismissed the board's third argument as "not a defense at all" and ordered the board to cease and desist from its unilateral action, as well as refrain from enforcing the post-sabbatical leave provision with respect to unit employees who had been granted sabbatical leave. WISCONSIN

DEMAND THAT TEACHERS SIGN INDIVIDUAL CONTRACTS PRIOR TO COLLECTIVE SETTLEMENT NOT A PROHIBITED PRACTICE

The Elmbrook Joint Common School District No. 21 did not commit a prohibited practice when it required teachers to sign individual contracts by a specified date prior to settlement of a collective agreement and did not permit removal of those contracts from the teachers' respective buildings. Moreover, the district's action in notifying teachers that vacancies would be declared in positions for which signed individual contracts had not been received by the specified date and its alleged refusal of summer employment to one teacher who refused to sign his individual contract in time was neither unlawful nor prohibited. In so ruling, the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) reversed the prior findings of a trial examiner (NRD, 6-70, 12).

From January to May of 1969, the Elmbrook board and the Elmbrook Education Association engaged in negotiation of a 1969-70 collective agreement. In order to prevent teachers from withholding their individual contracts and in compliance with state statute, the district required returning teachers to sign their individual contracts on or before April 15, 1969, and additionally determined that the individual contracts should not be removed from school premises. The individual contracts were prepared on standard forms which previously had been used, and they provided that salaries and working conditions reached in the collective agreement would supersede similar terms in the individual contracts.

In finding the form of the individual contracts lawful, the WERC noted that a majority of the teachers signed a "declaration of intent" indicating their intent to accept employment during the coming school year subject to negotiation of a collective agreement. It held that neither the district's concerted withholding of the individual contracts nor the teachers' concerted refusal to execute the individual contracts constituted prohibited or concerted activities. Moreover, there was no evidence that the Association or an individual teacher had requested or been denied the opportunity to examine the individual contracts or remove them from school premises, or that anyone was unaware of the language of the individual contracts.

Although the board later informed teachers that vacancies would be declared in positions for which signed contracts had not been received by the close of the school day on April 15, the WERC held that this was not a denial of teachers' protected rights since under the circumstances, the right to refuse employment to teachers who timely failed to execute their contracts was not a prohibited act of interference. As to the alleged denial of summer employment to one teacher, the WERC noted that an unlawful motive on the board's part did not have to be established and that the board had in any case not committed prohibited acts of interference, restraint, or coercion. It accordingly dismissed the Association's complaint.

A dissenting opinion, however, found that the district had committed prohibited practices because its failure to provide an opportunity for teachers to examine the individual contracts and discuss them with the Association amounted to district regulation of the teachers' relations with their representative organization. The dissent also maintained that the district's statement regarding vacancies in positions for which signed contracts had not been received constituted an unlawful threat. Furthermore, the district's refusal to hire teachers who had not signed their individual contracts by the specified date, as well as the situation regarding summer school employment, effectively undermined the bargaining representative, according to the dissent. (Elmbrook Education Association v. Elmbrook Schools Joint Common School District No. 21, et al., Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, December 30, 1971.)

NLRB ISSUES FIRST UNIT DETERMINATION INVOLVING UNIVERSITY FACULTY

In its first unit determination involving a university teaching staff, the National Labor Relations Board directed an election within a unit of full-time faculty, adjunct faculty, professional librarians, guidance counselors, and research associates employed at the C.W. Post Center of Long Island University. Acting upon a petition filed by the United Federation of College Teachers, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 1460, the board initially asserted jurisdiction over the private, nonprofit university in finding that its gross annual revenue and that of the Post Center, as well as the center's annual purchases of goods across state lines, well exceeded the board's $1 million jurisdictional standard.

The union's petition sought a unit of all professional employees of the center who are engaged directly or indirectly in student instruction, while the center maintained that full-time faculty should comprise one unit, and that a separate unit or units should be established for the other job categories involved. A question as to the supervisory status of some personnel also had arisen.

In determining that the center's 335 full-time faculty members are professional employees within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) and are entitled to its coverage, the NLRB pointed out the similarities in academic qualifications, teaching experience, and responsibilities among the four academic ranks (professor, associate professor, assistant professor, and instructor). It additionally noted that full-time faculty within the Long Island University system are granted "the power and responsibility to formulate and recommend student admission, curriculum, and graduation requirement policy, and rules for students, grading, and honor assignments." Matters relating to faculty status (e.g., appointment, reappointment, promotion, tenure, and dismissal) also are a responsibility of the full-time faculty, which collectively makes recommendations subject to review by university officials and final action by the board of trustees. While "mindful that we are to some extent entering into an unchartered area," the NLRB decided that > the policymaking and quasisupervisory authority which adheres to full-time faculty status but is exercised by them only as a group does not make them supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, or managerial employees who must be separately represented. Accordingly, we find that full-time university faculty members qualify in every respect as professional employees under Section 2(12) of the Act, and are therefore entitled to all the benefits of collective bargaining if they so desire.

The NLRB also included 206 adjunct professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and lecturers in the unit upon determining that "they are regular part-time professional employees whose qualifications and chief function, teaching, are identical with those of the full-time faculty." While adjunct faculty do not enjoy the fringe benefits provided full-time faculty, may not achieve tenure, are reappointed annually according to the availability of work and may hold positions at other schools, the NLRB pointed out that they "participate in the policy deliberations discussed above to the extent that they may attend meetings and can be heard. Although under the [university] statutes, they do not have the right to vote, on occasion they have voted." The board concluded that "under well-settled principles, neither difference in benefits, high ratio of part-time to full-time employees, nor additional employment elsewhere militates against their inclusion."

Also included in the board-determined unit were 27 librarians operating the center's libraries, a biology department research associate, and two guidance counselors. With respect to the librarians, the NLRB found that each has a master's degree, that they are designated in the university catalog as "with the rank of" instructor or assistant professor, that they have the salary, benefits, and privileges of faculty members of similar rank (except that they are not tenured), that they work with students individually and in groups, and that they cooperate with the faculty in supplying books required for courses. Moreover, they participate in faculty meetings, and the board found evidence that they had voted, although the university contended that its statutes did not permit librarians to vote. Consequently, the NLRB held that the librarians are professional employees within the meaning of the NLRA, that they are engaged in functions closely related to teaching, and that they share a community of interest with the faculty.

While the rank of the research associate was unclear, the NLRB found that "the intellectual character of his duties [pure research] and his qualifications [a doctor's degree], . . . are similar to those of other faculty members," thereby rendering him "a professional employee with similar interests." The guidance personnel, both of whom are qualified psychologists with psychology degrees, assist students with emotional problems and arrange outside professional therapy when necessary. In addition, both teach classes, and one holds the rank of associate professor. As they "are required to have advanced knowledge and are performing the intellectual and varied functions contemplated in the definition of professional employees in . . . the Act in both their teaching and guidance functions [and] there is no evidence that the Guidance Center director has any supervisory authority," they were included in the unit.

Excluded from the unit on the basis of supervisory status were deans and department chairmen, as well as division chairmen who are also department chairmen; the NLRB found that these personnel "exercise the authority to make effective recommendations as to the hiring and change of status of faculty members and other employees." The manager of the biology department laboratory also was excluded on supervisory grounds since he "responsibly directed the other laboratory employees in the duties they perform." Two other individuals—the manager of the chemistry laboratory and the biology technical assistant—were excluded from the unit as nonprofessional employees since their work did not require advanced degrees in their fields, they performed merely technical functions, and there was no evidence that either individual was training for a faculty position.

The remaining exclusions included four admissions counselors and 14 academic counselors who hold at least bachelor's degrees, enjoy no faculty privileges or rank, generally do not teach, and rarely attend faculty meetings or participate on faculty committees. The NLRB concluded that these personnel "are not required to have knowledge of the advanced type, and are not performing the intellectual and varied tasks, contemplated in Section 2(11) of the Act. The knowledge they are required to possess and the duties they perform are not related to a discipline or field of science, but require only a knowledge of the Center's curriculum and services." Post Center of Long Island University and United Federation of College Teachers, Local 1460, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO,* National Labor Relations Board, made public April 23, 1971.)

Negotiation Notes

CALIFORNIA

STATE AND NEIGHBORING CITIES MAY FURNISH AID DURING POLICE OR FIREMEN'S STRIKE, ATTORNEY GENERAL SAYS

A December 29, 1970, opinion of the California attorney general held that the state and neighboring police or firemen may aid a city where there is a strike involving police and/or firefighting personnel and "serious threats to public life, health or property" are posed. In response to a strike situation last October wherein counsel to a firefighters' union asserted that certain state statutes prohibit mutual aid during an emergency resulting from a labor controversy, the attorney general initially pointed out that neither law enforcement officers nor firefighters have the right to strike. Moreover, portions of the Military and Veterans Code (now part of the Government Code) and the California Emergency Services Act (formerly the Disaster Act) define various states of emergency as situations which do not apply to or include "conditions resulting from a labor controversy."

The attorney general thereby determined that this manifests a legislative intent that the forces and potential of the state not be marshalled to assist one side in a labor dispute. But this raises two questions: (1) Is a strike by a policemen or firemen who have no legal right to strike a "labor controversy" within the meaning of the California Disaster and California Emergency Services Acts, and (2) is the state prevented from rendering aid to a local government when necessary to protect life, health and property in an emergency which might not have developed except for a labor dispute?

The Legislature expressly considered and rejected applying to public employees the right to bargain collectively and to strike during the same session that it enacted the provisions of the California Disaster Act in 1943. . . . Thus, since public employees do not have a legal right to strike, we would conclude that any such illegal activity was not a labor controversy within the intent of these Acts.

We believe that in using the phrase "other than conditions resulting from a labor controversy" the Legislature was only concerned with the direct and proximate effects of labor disputes between private employers and employees. Hence the state may render whatever aid and assistance is necessary to preserve and protect the public health, safety and welfare in the event that firemen of a city refuse to perform their duty.

The attorney general also found that mutual assistance agreements between public agencies could be provided without reference to the California Disaster or California Emergency Services Acts owing to another statute which "specifically recognizes the existence of local pacts" outside the Disaster Act. As such, cities mutually may contract or agree to furnish police and fire protection for each other in the event of an emergency such as a police or firemen's strike.

IDAHO

TEACHER BARGAINING STATUTE ENACTED

A statute granting bargaining rights to certificated school district employees was signed by the Idaho governor on March 12, 1971, and will become effective July 1. The law states that the board of trustees of a school district "is hereby empowered to and shall upon its own initiative or upon the request of a local education organization, enter into a negotiation agreement with professional employees and negotiate with such employees in good faith on those matters specified in any such negotiation agreement." Either party to an agreement may initiate negotiation, which is defined as "meeting and conferring in good faith . . . for the purpose of reaching an agreement, upon matters and conditions subject to negotiations as specified in a negotiation agreement."

The statute provides exclusive representation rights for any local education organization "designated or selected for the purpose of negotiations by the majority of the professional employees in a school district." The term "professional employee" is defined as "any certificated employee of a school district," and the act provides that superintendents, supervisors, or principals may be excluded from the teacher bargaining unit if the parties' agreement so specifies. It further stipulates that the persons selected to negotiate for the representative organization "shall be a member of the organization designated to represent the professional employees and shall be a professional employee of the local school district."

In the event of a negotiation impasse, the disputed issues "shall be submitted to mediation at the request of either party"; procedures governing the mediation proceedings are to be determined by both parties. If no agreement is reached following mediation, either party may request submission of the remaining unresolved issues to fact-finding. The parties mutually shall appoint one or more fact-finders, although the state superintendent of public instruction shall make the appointments if the parties are unable to agree. All findings of fact and recommendations reached by the fact-finder are to be submitted in writing only to the parties.

The full text of the Idaho statute is reprinted in the "Text" section of this DIGEST.

MAINE

STATE ARBITRATION ACT AMENDED

An amendment to the Maine Uniform Arbitration Act states that employers, unions, and employees shall notify the Panel of Mediators created by the act "whenever contracts are to be negotiated between the employer and the employees or whenever a dispute arises between the parties threatening interruption of work, or under both conditions." Approved on February 18, 1971, the amendment becomes effective 90 days after adjournment of the legislature.

Conciliation and arbitration procedures provided by the act are available to municipal employees (including teachers) if the parties to a negotiation impasse jointly agree to utilize such procedures.

OHIO

COURT DISMISSES APPEAL OF INJUNCTION AGAINST PAYMENT OF RAISES TO STRIKERS

In the absence of any substantial constitutional questions, the Ohio Supreme Court dismissed an appeal of a lower court injunction (NRD, 11-70, 13) restraining the city of Cincinnati from executing the terms of a strike settling agreement reached in February 1970 with more than 1,300 city employees who conducted a month long walkout. That settlement granted the strikers an average 7 percent pay raise and various increases in fringe benefits, and contained a no-reprisal clause and a promise that the city would drop all suits and contempt litigation.

However, in what was reportedly the first alplication of Ohio's Ferguson Act to public employee strikes, the Hamilton County Court of Appeals ruled that since public employee supervisors statutorily are prohibited from authorizing or approving a strike, they have no choice but to impose provisions of the Act forbidding wage increases for striking public employees for one year after the end of a strike. It additionally held that public employee strikes are illegal at common law and that the Ferguson Act, "an expression of the common law," is constitutional under both the state and federal constitutions. The appeals court consequently enjoined the city's action and that judgment was upheld by the state supreme court here.

WISCONSIN

CITY ORDINANCE PROHIBITING RESIDENTIAL PICKETING RULED CONSTITUTIONAL

The Wisconsin Supreme Court ruled constitutional an ordinance of the city of Wauwatosa which states in part that "it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in picketing before or about the residence or dwelling of any individual." In upholding the ordinance as a valid exercise of local governmental powers, the court affirmed a lower court judgment which found guilty and fined an individual who was one of 25 to 35 persons picketing the homes of local school-board members in connection with a labor dispute. The court commented:

> The massing and marching of 25 to 35 picketers on the lawn or sidewalk of a man's home involves more than the conveying of information to him or his neighbors. Even as to media coverage, it would be naive to believe that reporters and TV cameramen assembled to record and report what was lettered on the placards the marchers carried. That opportunity they had passed up when the placards were earlier carried in front of school buildings. What is involved is a process more complex than conveying information. What is involved is conduct, as well as words or ideas.
> Examination of United States Supreme Court decisions on this point reveals that earlier intimations that picketing might be no more than a communication of ideas, have had to yield "'to the impact of facts unforeseen' or at least not sufficiently anticipated." One such fact clearly is that the element of physical patrolling in picketing itself can induce action very different from the point of view being communicated. In a number of cases the United States Supreme Court has made clear the fact that picketing involves more than an exercise of free speech, and that the conduct involved is subject to public regulation. Freedom of speech is to be jealously guarded, but, when intertwined with conduct, total freedom stops and the right to regulate begins. Picketing, demonstrating and parading involve conduct that can be regulated.

Citing numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the court additionally held that "the safeguarding of the home is a vital public interest," and that "a prohibition of picketing, demonstrating and parading in a certain designated area is not constitutionally prohibited. The state interest justifying such area-based controls is the orderly functioning of the activity carried on in such areas, an activity that would be interfered with by the presence of pickets, demonstrators or paraders." Finally, the court emphasized that the public purpose to be served by the ordinance is that " 'members of the community enjoy in their homes and dwellings a feeling of well-being, tranquility and privacy' "; therefore, "the prohibiting of picketing before or about the home is a clearly related and entirely reasonable means to such end."

AVERAGE ANNUAL RISES IN SALARIES OF TEACHERS AND FEDERAL WHITE-COLLAR EMPLOYEES COMPARED

A study by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), revealed that from 1946 to 1968, the average salaries of federal white-collar employees rose at an annual rate of 5.3 percent. Average public-school teacher salaries, which were recorded every other year from 1945 through 1967, registered an annual increase of 5.1 percent. Following adjustments for changes in consumer price levels, federal white-collar salaries rose an average of 2.5 percent annually, while teacher salaries advanced at an annual rate of 2.2 percent.

Noting the strong influence that private sector economic levels and trends exert upon government as well as the increasing tendency for public employees to join unions, BLS also reported that in 1966, federal expenditures for fringe benefits as a whole were about the same as those of private industry, or 23.8 percent of basic salaries. The proportion of basic pay represented by major types of benefits for white-collar federal employees in that year was 11.5 percent for paid leave except sick leave, 5.2 percent for health and insurance benefits including sick leave, and 6.8 percent for retirement programs. According to BLS, the federal government expends a relatively larger amount for paid leave and health benefits, but a relatively smaller amount for retirement and employment securities benefits than does private industry.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, MARCH 1971

The Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items figure rose 0.3 percent in March to 119.8 percent of the 1967 base, according to data released by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS). The March rise placed the index 4.6 percent above that of a year ago and was attributed in large part to an 0.9 percent increase in the cost of food, reportedly the sharpest rise in food prices since late 1969.

While charges for most consumer services continued to rise in March, BLS noted that the index for all consumer services remained unchanged that month for the first time since 1964, owing to a decline in mortgage interest rates. An estimated 43,400 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based upon the March CPI.

During the first quarter of 1971 the annual rate of increase in the index was 2.7 percent, reportedly the smallest advance since the first quarter of 1967. For the six-month period ending in March, the CPI registered a 4.1 percent annual rate of increase.

EMPLOYMENT TESTS MUST BE JOB-RELATED, U.S. SUPREME COURT DECIDES

Employment procedures or testing mechanisms which are unrelated to job performance or measuring one's job capabilities violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, according to the Supreme Court of the United States. The high court's March 8, 1971, decision reversed a portion of a ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in finding that "neither the high school completion requirement nor the general intelligence test [here involved] is shown to bear a demonstrable relationship to successful performance of the jobs for which it was used."

The court initially observed that the intention of Congress in enacting Title VII was to require "removal of artificial, arbitrary, and unnecessary barriers to employment when the barriers operate invidiously to discriminate on the basis of racial or other impermissible classification." Moreover, it emphasized that "Congress directed the thrust of the Act to the consequences of employment practices, not simply the motivation." While the Duke Power Company's institution of diploma and intelligence testing requirements did not suggest evidence of discriminatory intent, the high court found that "employees who have not completed high school or taken the tests have continued to perform satisfactorily and make progress in departments for which the high school and test criteria are now used."

The company argued that its general intelligence tests specifically are permitted by a section of the Act which authorizes the use of "any professionally developed ability test" that is not "designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race." However, the Supreme Court found that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which is responsible for enforcing the Act, "has issued guidelines interpreting [that section] to permit only the use of job-related tests." In addition, the legislative history of that section and the Act generally indicates that the commission's construction "comports with congressional intent."

The high court accordingly concluded that "what Congress has commanded is that any tests used must measure the person for the job and not the person in the abstract."

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATION NOTES

- During the first 14 months of operation under Executive Order 11491, representation petitions filed with the assistant secretary of labor for labor-management relations outnumbered unfair labor practice charges by a ratio of more than five to one. John Shinn, deputy assistant secretary, attributed the representation activity to unions' attempts to obtain more exclusive recognitions; the order eliminated informal recognition and all formal recognitions will expire on July 1, according to rules issued by the Federal Labor Relations Council. He predicted that "when organizing is consolidated," more unfair labor practice charges will be filed, as was the experience of the National Labor Relations Board in the years immediately following its inception.

Shinn reported that from January 1, 1970, through March 1, 1971, representation petitions filed with the assistant secretary numbered 1,583; of these, 977 cases have been closed. Elections were held in 758 instances, and hearings were held in 98 cases. In contrast, only 281 unfair labor practice charges were filed with the assistant secretary during the same period. Cases which have been resolved number 110, and hearings were held in three instances. The assistant secretary also received 75 appeals of regional administrators' decisions during the 14-month period and has acted upon 50 of them, Shinn said.

- The imminent demise of formal recognition additionally is responsible in large part for a 4 percent increase between November 1969 and November 1970 in the total number of federal employees represented in exclusive units, according to a Civil Service Commission report. In its annual survey of union recognition in the federal government, the commission reported a 17 percent jump (from 416,712 in 1969 to 487,245 in 1970) in the number of white-collar employees represented in exclusive units. The number of blue-collar employees represented in exclusive units rose only 1 percent to 429,136 in 1970, while the size of the seven national exclusive postal units declined by 1 percent. Unions now represent a total of 1,542,111 federal workers, or 58 percent of all federal employees covered by Executive Order 11491.

While the number of white-collar employees represented in exclusive units exceeded the number of blue-collar employees for the first time, the commission noted that the greatest organization gains during the survey period were made among blue-collar employees. The percentage of blue-collar employees organized in exclusive units rose from 72 percent in 1969 to 81 percent in 1970; white-collar organization rates increased from 29 percent in 1969 to 35 percent in 1970. The commission also reported that the number of exclusive units in the federal service increased by 363 to 3,010 in 1970, while the number of formal recognitions declined by 286 to a total of 915.

SUPREME COURT DECLINES REVIEW OF BACK OVERTIME WAGES AWARDED TO SCHOOL-BOARD EMPLOYEES

The Supreme Court of the United States declined to review a decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (NRD, 4-71, 16) which awarded back overtime pay and liquidated damages to central-office employees of the Chicago education board under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). In reversing a federal district court's judgment, the appellate court had ruled that the employees were entitled to recover overtime wages from the effective date of their coverage by the Act (February 1, 1967) to the time at which the Wage and Hour Administrator issued a final opinion (October 18, 1968) that they were covered.

Moreover, the appellate court held that plaintiffs were entitled to liquidated damages (as provided by the FLSA) after October 18, 1968, because the Chicago board "had no good reason for believing it was not in violation of the Act by refusing to pay overtime."

THREE-JUDGE FEDERAL COURT PANEL DISMISSES CHALLENGE TO FEDERAL STRIKE BAN

A three-judge federal court panel dismissed a suit brought by the United Federation of Postal Clerks (UFPC) in an attempt to invalidate portions of federal statutes which prohibit federal employee strikes and impose criminal penalties (fines of up to $1,000 and/or imprisonment for a year and a day) upon persons found guilty of violating those statutes. The suit also challenged the no-strike provisions of Executive Order 11491.

Reiterating the common law rule that "no employee, whether public or private, had a constitutional right to strike," the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia held: "It seems clear that public employees stand on no stronger footing in this regard than private employees and that in the absence of a statute, they too do not possess the right to strike." The decision represented the first ruling by a federal court on the federal strike prohibition.

Pointing out that "Congress has consistently treated public employees as being in a different category than private employees," the court decided that in the absence of a constitutional right to strike > it is not irrational or arbitrary for the Government to condition employment on a promise not to withhold labor collectively, and to prohibit strikes by those in public employment, whether because of the prerogatives of the sovereign, some sense of higher obligation associated with public service, to assure the continuing functioning of the Government without interruption, to protect public health and safety or for other reasons. Although plaintiff argues that the provisions in question are unconstitutionally broad in covering all Government employees regardless of the type or importance of the work they do, we hold that it makes no difference whether the jobs performed by certain public employees are regarded as "essential" or "non-essential," or whether similar jobs are performed by workers in private industry who do have the right to strike protected by statute.

The court also stated that the right to strike cannot be considered a "fundamental" right and emphasized that the absence of the right to strike does not interfere with public employees' fundamental and constitutionally protected right to organize and select representatives for purposes of collective bargaining. It explained:

> There certainly is no compelling reason to imply the existence of the right to strike from the right to associate and bargain collectively. In the private sphere, the strike is used to equalize bargaining power, but this has universally been held not to be [appropriate] when its object and purpose can only be to influence the essentially political decisions of Government in the allocation of its resources. Congress has an obligation to ensure that the machinery of the Federal Government continues to function at all times without interference. Prohibition of strikes by its employees is a reasonable implementation of that obligation.

While the UFPC contended that the word "strike" and the term "participates in a strike" as used in the statute are unconstitutionally vague and overly broad, the court held that those concepts "occupy central positions in our labor statutes and accompanying caselaw, and have been construed and interpreted many times by numerous state and federal courts." Citing Connolly v. General Construction Co., the court said that "'strike' is a term of such common usage and acceptance that 'men of common intelligence' need not guess at its meaning."

Regarding the latter term, the federal district court noted the government's interpretation of the phrase as "'striking,' the essence of which is an actual refusal in concert with others to provide services to one's employer." The court adopted this construction, explaining that such an interpretation > will exclude the First Amendment problems raised by the [plaintiff] in that it removes from the strict reach of these statutes and other provisions such conduct as speech, union membership, fund-raising, organization, distribution of literature and informational picketing, even though those activities may take place in concert during a strike by others. We stress that it is only an actual refusal by particular employees to provide services that is forbidden by 5 U.S.C. §7311(3) and penalized by 18 U.S.C. 1918. However, these statutes, as all criminal statutes, must be read in conjunction with 18 U.S.C. §§2 (aiding and abetting) and 371 (conspiracy).

In a concurring opinion, one judge questioned the "validity of the flat ban on federal employees' strikes under the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution." Finding it unclear that the right to strike is not fundamental, he commented that such a right "seems intimately related to the right to form labor organizations," and that "a union that never strikes, or which can make no credible threat to strike, may wither away in effectiveness." While not suggesting that "the right to strike is co-equal with the right to form labor organizations," the judge indicated a belief that "the right to strike is, at least, within constitutional concern and should not be discriminatorily abridged without substantial or 'compelling' justification." Therefore, the "real question" is > to determine whether there is such justification for denying federal employees a right which is granted to other employees of private business. Plaintiff's arguments that not all federal services are "essential" and that some privately provided services are no less "essential" casts doubt on the validity of the flat ban on federal employees' strikes. In our mixed economic system of governmental and private enterprise, the line separating governmental from private functions may depend more on the accidents of history than on substantial differences in kind.

> Nevertheless, . . . as the majority indicates, the asserted right of public employees to strike has often been litigated and, so far as I know, never recognized as a matter of law. The present state of the relevant jurisprudence offers almost no support for the proposition that the government lacks a "compelling" interest in prohibiting such strikes. No doubt, the line between "essential" and "non-essential" functions is very, very difficult to draw.

1970-71 SURVEY OF WRITTEN NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS

Preliminary results of the NEA Research Division's fifth annual survey of written negotiation agreements indicate that 3,522 public school systems with an enrollment of 1,000 or more were operating under a written negotiation agreement during the 1970-71 school year. Of the 7,122 school systems surveyed, 6,141 systems employing 2,101,714 instructional personnel responded to the survey, an 85.8 percent response rate. The number of systems with negotiation agreements comprised 57.3 percent of all responding systems and employed 63.6 percent of all instructional personnel employed in responding systems.

Over the past year, an increase of 228 systems with negotiated agreements covering about 82,000 teachers was reported. A portion of this increase can be attributed to the enactment of negotiation statutes in Alaska (1970), Delaware (1969), and Kansas (1970). Since many school systems in Hawaii and Pennsylvania (both of which states enacted new statutes in 1970) were involved in unit determination and certification proceedings during the past year, a number of systems which previously had reported agreements were eliminated from the survey pending resolution of those proceedings. The new Idaho and Montana statutes do not become effective until July 1, 1971.

Highlights of the preliminary survey results include:

- Since 1966-67, when the first survey of written negotiation agreements was conducted, the number of school systems with negotiated agreements has increased by 130.0 percent. In the 1966-67 survey, 1,531 school systems reported negotiation agreements; the 1970-71 survey found 3,522 systems with such agreements. Moreover, the number of agreements reported in the 1970-71 survey represented a 6.9 percent rise above the number reported in the 1969-70 survey (3,294).
- Instructional personnel employed in systems with agreements increased from 1,255,364 in 1969-70 to 1,337,146 in 1970-71, a 6.5 percent increase.
- Of the 3,522 systems which validated written negotiation agreements in the 1970-71 survey, 3,492 systems (99.1 percent) indicated organizational representation with a national affiliation. NEA affiliates were the exclusive bargaining representatives in 3,248 systems; American Federation of Teachers (AFT), AFL-CIO, locals represented instructional personnel in 116 systems; a mixed affiliation of two or more representative organizations negotiated agreements in 110 school systems. Since the 1966-67 survey, NEA representation has increased by 1,912 school systems, while AFT representation rose by 75 systems.
- National teacher representation figures indicate that since 1966-67, NEA representation has increased by 544,146 instructional personnel (123.3 percent), and AFT representation has increased by 88,963 staff (71.7 percent). In 1970-71, NEA represented 63,816 more teachers than it did the previous year, while representation by AFT locals rose by 9,259 teachers. The NEA's current share of total national teacher representation is 80.5 percent.
- More than 78 percent of all instructional personnel employed in the nation's largest school systems (enrollments of 25,000 or more) were working under negotiation agreements in 1970-71.
- Since 1966-67, the Northeast region has shown the greatest increase in negotiation activity as instructional staff representation rose from 44.7 percent in 1966-67 to 92.6 percent in 1970-71 and the number of systems with negotiation agreements increased from 31.7 percent to 85.1 percent. According to the 1970-71 survey, the percentages of school systems with negotiation agreements in the Southeast and Southwest regions remain well below all other regions at 6.1 percent and 22.2 percent respectively.

Differentials: (1970-71, with provision for a 10 percent upward adjustment in each figure indicated for the 1971-72 school year) head varsity football coach, $950; head varsity basketball coach, $800; head varsity golf and tennis coaches, $350; head junior varsity wrestling and baseball coaches, $400; girls' head varsity basketball coach, $300; girls' head varsity track coach, $250; cheerleading advisor, $350; athletics director, $1,200; band director, $500; drama director, $600; yearbook advisor, $350; senior class advisor, $275; student council advisor, $275; school psychologists, $1,000 plus a prorated amount of the total teachers' salary for any days worked in excess of 185; subject area coordinators, $500 plus a prorated amount of the total teachers' salary for any days worked in excess of 185.

Leaves: (effective September 1, 1970) 10 days' annual sick leave credited at the beginning of each school year, 120 days' maximum accumulation; sick leave days accumulated by a teacher in another Delaware school district shall be credited to his Dover accumulation in accordance with state law; 3 days' personal business leave for which a reason must be stated and which shall be deducted from accumulation; 3 days' leave for a critical family illness deducted from accumulation; 1 separate day of bereavement leave in the case of a death among "near relatives," and 5 separate days' bereavement leave in the case of a death in the immediate household; in the event of the death of a district teacher or pupil, "the principal or immediate superior of said teacher or student may grant to an appropriate number of teachers sufficient time off to attend the funeral," and such leave shall not be counted against the employee's accumulation; 3 days' leave for religious holidays deducted from accumulation; 2 days' leave for school visitation or professional conferences deducted from accumulation; time as necessary to appear in legal proceedings; time as necessary for National Guard or military reserve obligations with the board paying the difference between a teacher's regular pay and his military pay.

Insurance: Board pays a maximum of $9 per employee for Blue Cross-Blue Shield coverage; board provides long-term disability insurance coverage for individual; at the employee's request, the board will continue to pay the cost of membership in the state blood bank.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; building representatives may use their unassigned periods to conduct Association business; teachers shall not be prevented from wearing any identification of Association membership; one teacher designated by the Association shall be granted an unpaid leave of absence for up to one year for the purpose of engaging in Association activities; building Liaison Committees selected by the Association and comprised of no more than one member for every 25 building teachers shall meet with their respective principals at least once a month during the school day "to review and discuss local school problems and practices, and to play an active role in the revision or development of building policies."

Instruction: Academic freedom clause stating in part that "the teacher has the right to refuse, for good cause, to have a student(s) from a previous year in his classroom, except in the event that such refusal would deprive the pupil of the opportunity to pursue the course or class taught by said teacher"; class size objectives in academic areas are 25 to 30 pupils in kindergarten through grade 4, 100 to 116 pupils per 4-teacher team in grades 5 through 8, and 25 to 28 pupils in grades 9 through 12; if, "at any time," elementary classes reach 35 pupils in size, high-school classes reach 33 pupils, and middle-school classes reach 136 pupils per 4-teacher team, "it shall be the responsibility of the supervisor to arrange a meeting with the involved teacher(s), an Association representative, and a representative of the Superintendent, to relieve the situation by such means as may be practicable"; a joint Instructional Advisory Council to be established by October 1, 1970, shall consist of 3 permanent representatives appointed by the superintendent and 8 Association representatives selected from a cross-section of grade levels, and shall meet at least once a month to advise the superintendent on matters such as curriculum improvements, teaching techniques, extracurricular programs, pupil testing and evaluation, and district educational goals.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with submission of matter to the state board of education pursuant to statute; teacher may review his personnel file (in the presence of an administration representative) and respond to any derogatory material before placement therein; 30-minute duty-free lunch period for all teachers; kindergarten teachers shall have at least a 30-minute preparation period between the morning and afternoon sessions, and elementary teachers shall be relieved of pupil responsibility when their classes are taught by specialists; senior high teachers weekly shall be assigned up to 25 teaching periods, 5 preparation periods, no more than 2½ periods of scheduled professional duties, and 2½ teacher work periods for performing unscheduled assigned nonteaching duties; when necessary, senior high teachers shall reserve an "additional meeting period of 30 minutes" to begin no later than 5 minutes after pupil dismissal for the purpose of staff or faculty meetings (Monday), departmental meetings (Tuesday), parent-teacher conferences, and other meetings; qualified teachers already employed by the district shall be given preference in filling promotional vacancies when all other factors are substantially equal; by the beginning of the 1970-71 school year, teachers who work in more than one building shall be assigned appropriate working space in each building as well as a single classroom or office (with a work surface and storage space) for their exclusive use outside regular teaching hours; new teachers attending orientation programs for up to 3 working days shall receive a per-diem salary of $30; professional development clause stating that the board will pay "the full cost of tuition and other reasonable expenses incurred in connection with any courses, workshops, seminars, conferences, in-service training sessions, or other such sessions which a teacher is required and/or requested by the administration to take. Said teacher shall also be compensated for time spent in actual attendance at said session"; provision for the establishment of a joint Recruitment Committee comprised of 3 Association representatives and 2 persons appointed by the superintendent for the purpose of working with the superintendent in developing "ways and means to improve teacher recruitment."

Auburn, Massachusetts

Between the Auburn School Committee and the Auburn Teachers Association, effective July 1970 to June 1971. Approximately 213 certificated professional employees. Two employee units recognized: Unit A—all professional teaching employees, excluding the superintendent, assistant superintendent, principals, assistant principals, nonteaching supervisory staff, substitute teachers, and all other noncertificated personnel; Unit B—all full-time administrative and supervisory personnel, excluding the superintendent, assistant superintendent, all employees included in Unit A, substitute teachers, and all other noncertificated personnel. Provision for the negotiation of a successor agreement to begin no later than September 15 of the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the effective agreement expires.

Compensation: (effective September 1970) B.A., $7,000 to $10,400, 9 increments; differential of $300 shall be paid upon completion of each 15 hours of approved credit above the B.A. level; M.A., $7,700 to $11,600, 10 increments; M.A. plus 30 hours, $12,900 maximum; differential of $300 paid upon completion and award of doctoral degree. A separate salary schedule establishes differentials for 8 named categories of administrators and supervisors ranging from $125 per room for head teachers to $4,200 for the high-school principal. Longevity pay at $200 each after 15 years' service, 25 years, and 35 years. Differentials: head football coach, $1,300; head hockey and basketball coaches, $1,000; head soccer coach, $600; golf coach, $350; athletic director, $700; girls' basketball and field hockey coaches, $350; cheerleading coaches, $600; reading consultants, $500;

English and science coordinators, $300; senior class advisor, $425; student council advisor, $600; play directors, $200; French, Latin, and Spanish club advisors, $100; special education teachers, $500; department chairmen, $50 per teacher supervised with a base of $75 in junior high and $250 in senior high. Summer school teachers receive $130 per week, while directors receive $150 per week.

Leaves: 15 days' annual sick leave for tenure teachers and 10 days annually for nontenure teachers, 120 days' maximum accumulation; 3 separate days' personal business leave for purposes of attending to legal obligations, business matters, and observing religious holidays; leaves for personal business will be counted double and deducted from a teacher's sick leave accumulation if taken on any day immediately preceding or following a regular school vacation or holiday or on the first and last 3 days of the school year; 3 separate days' bereavement leave for a death in the immediate family; 3 separate days' for a critical family illness; if a teacher is absent as a result of personal injury caused by a job-related assault, he shall be paid his full salary less any workmen's compensation payments for up to one calendar year, although such absence shall be charged to his annual or accumulated sick leave; if a teacher is absent as a result of personal injury caused by a job-related accident, he shall be allowed full pay less any workmen's compensation payments for the first 30 calendar days with no deductions from his sick leave accumulation, although any absence in excess of 30 days shall be charged to his accumulation; sabbatical leave at half-pay for one-half year or one year after 7 years' service.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; Association representatives participating in grievance proceedings shall be granted released time without loss of pay; during negotiation, the Committee will furnish the Association with a complete tentative line budget for the next fiscal year; an unpaid leave of absence for up to 2 years shall be granted to one teacher designated by the Association for the purpose of engaging in Association activities.

Instruction: Junior and senior high teachers will not be required to teach in more than 2 subject areas, nor shall they have more than 3 preparations by course title; desirable class size limits which shall be observed "to the extent possible" are 25 pupils per first-grade class, 30 pupils per class in grades 2 through 7, 30 pupils per junior and senior high academic class, 18 pupils per science laboratory class, an average of 14 pupils per homemaking and industrial arts class, 18 pupils per art class, 24 pupils per drafting class, and 30 pupils per physical education class.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with binding arbitration; duty-free lunch period for all teachers which shall be the same length as the pupils' lunch period in junior and senior high school, and shall be at least 30 minutes in length for elementary and special area teachers; all junior and senior high teachers shall have at least one preparation per day, and English teachers will be assigned no more than 4 teaching periods per day; wherever possible, elementary and special area teachers shall be provided at least one preparation period per day; regular, required meetings are scheduled on Mondays; on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of each week teachers are to provide a "student helping period" for 30 minutes following the pupils' regular day, although teachers will be excused 5 minutes after the close of the pupils' day on Fridays; teacher has right to review his personnel file and may respond in writing to any material contained therein; teachers serving as substitutes during their preparation periods shall be paid proportionately at an hourly rate based upon the fourth step of the B.A. salary schedule; when a teacher is appointed to an extracurricular activity owing to a lack of volunteers, he shall not be required to accept that appointment for 2 successive years; when all other factors are substantially equal, applicants with the greatest system seniority will be given preference in filling vacancies; qualified teachers already employed by the Committee will be given preference in filling promotional vacancies; professional improvement requirement that each teacher average "at least one credit per year for each year of creditable teaching experience" in the system both preceding and following placement on the master's degree salary schedule, with the provision that a failure to meet this requirement shall be considered a major breach of professional ethics and "could result in a denial of an annual salary increase by the School Committee."

Harris, Michigan

Between the Bark River-Harris Board of Education and the Bark River-Harris Education Association, effective July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. Approximately 31 certificated professional employees. Provision for the negotiation of a successor agreement to begin no sooner than 90 days prior to the expiration of the effective agreement.

Compensation: B.A., $7,500 to $12,000, 12 increments; a teacher who has earned more than 15 semester hours above the B.A. degree shall receive $25 per semester hour above 15 hours to a total of 31 semester hours, or $400; M.A., $8,100 to $12,960, 12 increments. Differentials: football coach, $325; varsity basketball coach, $525; junior varsity basketball coach, $225; yearbook advisor, $200; athletic director, $100; senior and junior class advisors, $75. Teachers who are required to perform extra services outside the prescribed school day shall be compensated at an hourly rate determined by dividing their annual salary by 1,350 hours.

Leaves: 12 days' annual sick leave credited at the beginning of each school year, 120 days' maximum accumulation; provision for a sick leave bank to which each teacher contributes one day of his annual sick leave allowance at the beginning of each school year and which shall accumulate to a maximum of 90 days; teachers who have exhausted their accumulated personal sick leave may withdraw up to one-half of the available sick bank balance; 2 separate days for personal business (one at full pay and one deducted from sick leave) shall be credited at the beginning of each school year; 7 noncumulative days' emergency leave which shall be deducted from a teacher's sick leave accumulation and may be used for an illness or death in the immediate family; teacher absences due to mumps, scarlet fever, measles, or chicken pox shall be charged to sick leave at the rate of one-half the period of absence; paid leave for jury duty less per-diem court allowance; paid leave for professional conferences with board paying "appropriate" expenses incurred, as well as the cost of a substitute teacher; accumulated sick leave is not to be used as maternity leave, but "if complications arise within fourteen days after the birth, sick leave pay will commence on the fifteenth day after the teacher was scheduled to report to work if the teacher is unable to report to work"; a teacher who has been employed in the system for at least 15 consecutive years shall receive terminal leave pay of 50 percent of his unused personal sick leave at his daily rate, provided he does not accept full-time employment in another school district the following year.

Insurance: Board pays $30 per month per teacher to either the Association's medical insurance plan or the Association's tax deferred annuities plan; board-paid $20,000 term life insurance coverage for individual; board shall provide long-term disability insurance which shall pay 60 percent of the teacher's salary after the disability is incurred; workmen's compensation plan whereby such compensation shall be supplemented by an amount sufficient to maintain a teacher's regular salary for a period not to exceed his sick leave accumulation, which amount shall be charged to his accumulation.

Association: Association members may wear their membership insignia or other identification on school premises; 2 nonconsecutive leave days per year shall be granted to the Association for conducting Association business, and 2 additional days shall be made available if Association members agree to provide substitutes for the absent teacher; the board shall furnish the Association with all readily available district financial information including annual reports and audits, tentative budgetary requirements, board meeting agendas and minutes, treasurer's reports, and census and membership data; Association business may be conducted during school hours provided no classroom disruptions occur; Association representatives involved in negotiation or grievance proceedings shall be granted released time without loss of pay.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with binding arbitration by an impartial arbitrator or by a mutually agreed upon third party other than an arbitrator; teacher has right to review his personnel file and may be accompanied by an Association representative; daily pupil contact rates shall not exceed 5 hours in senior high, and 6 hours in junior high and elementary schools; junior and senior high-school teachers will be allowed 5 preparation periods weekly, with the provision that additional preparation time for junior high teachers is planned in accordance with gymnasium scheduling (every other day); whenever possible, elementary teachers will be provided 2 15-minute relief periods daily; duty-free lunch period of at least 30 minutes for all teachers; specialists, librarians, speech therapists, reading consultants, visiting teachers, counselors, and special education teachers shall be provided with released and preparation time to the same extent as other district teachers; teachers handling more than the normal specified teaching load shall be compensated at their hourly rate for each teaching period in excess of 3 periods per year; provision stating that "it is a condition of employment that all teachers make a 'just' attempt to attend all P.T.A. meetings without additional compensation"; all promotional vacancies will be made known to the staff 5 days before being advertised, and presently employed personnel will be given preference in filling such vacancies when the applicants' preparation, experience, and ability are equal; pupil discipline provision stating that when a teacher has one or more pupils in a class "who constitute serious behavioral problems as determined by the Superintendent, principal, and teacher, appropriate recognition shall be given by way of reduced class size, greater or more frequent relief periods, or additional compensation as agreed between the Board and the Association"; if a teacher is complained about or sued as a result of a job-related action, the board "will provide legal counsel and render all necessary assistance to the teacher in his defense, unless the teacher is proven negligent."

Miscellaneous: Class size guide providing maximums of 20 pupils per kindergarten class, 25 pupils per first-grade class, 25 pupils in most secondary school classes, 18 pupils per driver education class, 100 pupils per music class, 40 pupils per physical education class, and 10 pupils per high-school home economics class; board will pay up to $5 per teacher per year to defray the cost of membership in any of 12 named professional education associations; provision calling for the board to "use its best efforts" to assure continued Association recognition, maintain employment of its personnel, and maintain teacher tenure in the event of annexation or consolidation with other districts; provision stating that "the study of the feasibility of a cost of living clause shall be considered in future contract negotiations."

Penns Grove, New Jersey

Between the Penns Grove-Upper Penns Neck Regional Board of Education and the Penns Grove-Upper Penns Neck Regional Education Association, effective July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. Compensation: B.A., $6,950 to $10,350, 11 increments; B.A. plus 30 hours, $10,650 maximum; M.A., $7,550 to $10,950, 11 increments; M.A. plus 30 hours, $11,250 maximum; Ph.D., $11,550 maximum; longevity pay of $50 after 20 years' service and each 5-year period of service thereafter to 45 years' service. Differentials: (for athletics personnel, figures indicated here represent the first year of an 8-year schedule) head football coach, $600; head basketball coach, $400; head baseball, track, tennis, and wrestling coaches, $300; head girls' field hockey, tennis, and basketball coaches, $250; head athletics director, $400; cheerleader sponsor, $125; high-school department heads, $450; senior class advisor, $300; senior class play director, $250 per play; high-school band director, $400; yearbook literary advisor, $300; high-school newspaper advisor, $200. Adult education, summer school, and home teachers receive $6 per hour. Teachers using their own cars in the performance of their duties are reimbursed at the rate of $125 per year.

Leaves: 12 days' annual sick leave credited at the beginning of each school year, unlimited maximum accumulation; teachers who have completed at least one year of district service, have a minimum of 13 sick days available at the beginning of a school year in which a lengthy illness occurs, and have exhausted their sick leave accumulation are eligible for extended sick leave at partial pay for 10 to 90 days, according to the number of years of district service; 2 separate days for personal business; 4 separate days' bereavement leave for a death in the immediate family; 1 separate day per semester for purposes of classroom observation; time as necessary for legal proceedings; sabbatical leave at full pay for one semester if a qualified replacement can be found or half-pay for one year after the first 10 years of service and each 7 years of service thereafter.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, county, state, and national Association dues; any teacher or Association representative participating in negotiation during working hours shall be granted released time without loss of pay; in order to conduct Association business, Association officials may leave their buildings during their preparation periods and during the period that teachers are required to remain after school, provided they have the principal's permission to leave and the approval of the principal of the building to which they are going; the Association shall be allowed up to 30 minutes' presentation time during orientation programs for new teachers and at least 10 minutes' time at monthly building faculty or other professional meetings; one 2 p.m. dismissal shall be granted for an Association meeting; teachers may wear membership pins or other identification of Association membership; prior to February 1 of each year, the Association will submit its recommendations regarding the school calendar for the ensuing year to the superintendent for board consideration.

Instruction: Where possible, teachers of grades 7-12 shall not be required to teach more than 2 subject areas, nor more than a total of 2 teaching preparations; department heads shall be relieved of homeroom duties and shall not be assigned more than 4 student instruction-supervision periods per day; provision for the establishment of a joint Instructional Council (with a $500 budget) no later than September 30, 1970, which shall be comprised of 4 representatives appointed by the superintendent and 4 Association representatives and shall meet at least 4 times per year for the purpose of developing written recommendations for the board on such matters as curriculum improvements, teaching techniques, extracurricular programs, in-service training, pupil testing and evaluation, and research and experimentation.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with binding arbitration; provision stating that the Instructional Council "will try to work out a minimum lunch period of twenty-seven (27) minutes" which will become effective immediately if feasible, but shall be applicable only to high-school teachers; elementary teachers shall have preparation time when their classes are taught by specialists, and teachers of grades 9-12 shall have daily preparation time of one class period; regular teachers who volunteer or are assigned as substitutes may credit such periods to a total of 6 periods which shall entitle them to one additional personal business day to be taken by the end of a given school year; any teacher required to teach a class beyond the specified work day shall be compensated at the rate of $6 per class period; teachers may be required to attend building faculty or other professional meetings one day per month with such meetings beginning no later than 10 minutes after pupil dismissal and lasting no longer than 45 minutes; teachers may leave their buildings during their preparation periods with the principal's approval and may leave without permission during their lunch periods so long as they sign in and out; first-year teachers are to be evaluated by building administrators at least 7 times per year, second-year teachers at least 5 times per year, third-year teachers at least 3 times per year, tenured teachers with less than 10 years' district experience at least twice a year, and tenured teachers with 10 or more years' district experience at least once a year; each building faculty shall elect a Liaison Committee consisting of not less than one member for each 10 teachers in the building for the purpose of meeting with the principal at least once each month "to review and discuss local school problems and practices, and to play an active role in the revision or development of building policies"; provision stating that $1,425 will be allocated for a Professional Incentive Program wherein teachers taking professional improvement courses may apply for reimbursement of $10 per credit hour to a maximum of 6 semester hours of credit during any school term.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Between the Milwaukee Board of School Directors and the Milwaukee Teachers Education Association, effective January 1, 1971, to December 31, 1971. Approximately 5,150 certificated professional employees. Provision for automatic renewal of agreement for a one-year period if the board's finance committee prior to September 30, 1971, recommends adoption of the financial terms of the current agreement for 1972 and the board at its regular October 1971 budget meeting adopts a 1972 budget containing the financial terms of the current agreement. However, if the finance committee or the board fails to act as specified, the Association may, within 5 days of the date set for such action, notify the board that it chooses to renegotiate the agreement for 1972.

Compensation: (effective January 1971) B.A., $7,900 to $12,570, 12 increments; B.A. plus 16 hours, $12,904 maximum; M.A., $8,230 to $13,179, 12 increments; M.A. plus 64 hours, $14,397 maximum. Effective January 1, 1971, teacher salaries increase by 4 percent owing to board payment of that percentage of each teacher's salary to the Milwaukee Teachers Retirement Fund. Separate 10-step salary schedule for certified school social workers with salaries ranging from $11,164 to $15,969. Longevity pay of $100 each after 15 and 20 years' service.

(effective January 1972) B.A., $8,300 to $13,210, 12 increments; B.A. plus 16 hours, $13,563 maximum; M.A., $8,654 to $13,857, 12 increments; M.A. plus 64 hours, $15,152 maximum. Effective January 1, 1972, teacher salaries increase by 4½ percent owing to board payment of that percentage of each teacher's salary to the Milwaukee Teachers Retirement Fund. Separate 10-step salary schedule for certified school social workers with salaries ranging from $11,728 to $16,777. Longevity pay of $100 each after 15 and 20 years' service.

Differentials: (effective January 1971) for athletics personnel, the differential schedule is divided into categories by type of sport and type of position with base pay stated as a varying percentage (4.2 percent to 12 percent) of the B.A. base and increments after 5 years' service and 10 years' service ranging from $35 to $100 and $70 to $200, respectively; athletic directors, $948 (.12 of B.A. base) per semester with increments of $100 after 5 years' service and $200 after 10 years' service; intramurals leaders, $1,044 maximum per person; marching band directors, $661 per school; adjustment class teachers, $870; play and operetta directors, $1,450 per school; stage crew managers, $661 per school; forensics and debate directors and judges, $928 per school; instrumental music teachers, $4.50 to $6.25 per 45-minute class according to the number of years of experience. Summer school teachers receive 70 percent of their regular daily rates of pay effective at the close of the regular school term.

Leaves: 12½ days' annual sick leave (earned and credited at the rate of 1¼ days per month of service), 120 days' maximum accumulation at full pay at the end of any month with an unlimited maximum accumulation of days at half-pay; teachers with no accumulated sick leave may be advanced up to their annual leave allowance; in the event of personal illness or quarantine, a teacher shall be allowed in any school year 32½ days' leave in addition to his annual allowance before a formal application for leave is required, but such additional days shall be deducted from his accumulation; extended sick leave chargeable to a teacher's accumulation and lasting through the end of a semester or a school year may be granted at full or half-pay; 1 day of leave for an illness in the immediate family deducted from accumulation; 2 days' leave deducted from accumulation may be used for legal obligations, attendance at the funeral of a close friend, travel involved in funeral attendance, religious observance, and attendance at the graduations of one's children; 3 separate days' bereavement leave in the event of a death among close family members, and 1 separate day of leave for the death of a relative; teachers may be allowed one-half day of paid leave to attend the funeral of a fellow teacher; paid leave for jury duty less per-diem court allowance; paid leave as approved for school visitation or attendance at professional conferences; up to 17 days' paid leave to fulfill military reserve obligations; sabbatical leave for one semester or one year at 50 percent of regular salary after 7 years' service.

Insurance: Board-paid hospital-surgical and major medical benefits for individual or family coverage; effective January 1, 1971, the board shall pay the premium on the first $4,000 of group life insurance coverage for the individual plus $3.60 per thousand per year toward the cost of coverage above $4,000 with the employee paying the remainder of the premium for coverage in an amount equal to annual earnings raised to the next even thousand; effective January 1, 1972, board payments on group life insurance coverage shall apply to the first $8,000 of coverage; tax-sheltered annuity plans; payroll deductions for income protection insurance; board-paid liability insurance in the amount of $5 million; $10 deductible insurance provided by board to cover malicious damage to employees' cars while parked at school during school hours or while on school business; board will reimburse teachers to a maximum of $150 per occurrence for any job-related loss of or damage to personal property arising from theft, fire, or willful damage.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local association and its affiliates with each Association member paying a monthly service charge of 5¢ and the Association paying 50¢ per member per year; Association representatives involved in negotiation during the school day shall be granted released time without loss of pay; no-strike clause stating that "upon notification from the board of any unauthorized work stoppage, the MTEA shall make public that it does not endorse such stoppage. Having given such public notice, the MTEA shall be freed from all liability for any breaches of this part"; building security provision stating that the Association building representative "shall be released from his assignment during crisis periods, so that communication with teachers on the facts of the incident is accurate" (see following provision reprint).

Instruction: During the 1971 school year, the board shall "conduct an intensive recruitment campaign to attract and hire" 20 additional teachers of the educable mentally retarded, and 14 remedial reading teachers for the secondary schools will be hired in September 1971; effective January 1, 1971, "every effort will be made to recruit and hire fifteen (15) qualified elementary specialist teachers in art, physical education and music, to service those schools not presently served, including exceptional education classes. This additional staffing shall commence in February 1971 and shall be fully implemented by September 1971"; prior to September 1971, "efforts will be made to recruit and hire ten (10) additional qualified elementary specialist teachers in art, music and physical education . . . at an annualized (calendar year) level of $100,000, provided that the 1971 implementation shall not exceed $40,000"; provision for additional interim classes and/or programs (provided that actual 1971 implementation does not exceed $150,000) "for the purpose of meeting the needs of students demonstrating a lack of reasonable self control and whose behavior is seriously interfering with their own education, as well as the education of other children in the regular school program"; extensive class size provision providing staffing formulas determined by dividing the total daily pupil periods by specified figures, establishing varying class size ranges according to the type of instruction involved, grade level, and high population density and mobility factors, providing for the hiring of additional teachers within specified budgetary limits "to relieve critical class loads or clusters of individual classes which exceed the desirable class size," and providing for aide and paraprofessional time in the primary grades when average pupil-teacher ratios based upon spring enrollment projections are exceeded; provision establishing a procedure to be followed when "conditions in any school evidence a potential interference with the educational process" (see following provision reprint); teacher aides and paraprofessionals "shall be employed to the extent possible within the budget limits," and additional aide time shall be made available at the rate of 10 hours per week in the elementary schools, 40 hours per week in the secondary schools, and 200 hours per week in classes for the educable mentally retarded.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with a binding decision by an "impartial referee"; secondary teachers shall be assigned no more than 25 teaching periods, 5 homeroom periods, and 5 preparation periods per week; elementary teachers shall be assigned 25 teaching hours (including recess) and 5 45-minute "special help" periods per week; secondary teachers shall have a duty-free lunch period equal in length to the normal class period, while elementary teachers shall have a one-hour duty-free lunch period; secondary teachers assigned to cafeteria duty shall have such duty in lieu of a class, and elementary teachers will be compensated at the established hourly rate for certificated personnel, payable monthly; teachers assigned to noninstructional duties (e.g., study halls, attendance counseling, and hall supervision) "do not have to perform these duties year after year without being relieved, when they specifically request it," and teachers not so involved "shall be assigned to projects dealing with curriculum improvement within their area of teaching"; regular teachers serving as substitutes shall be paid on the basis of the "established part time certificated hourly rate properly prorated"; teacher involvement in noncompensable extracurricular activities shall not exceed 2½ hours per week in the secondary schools and 4 hours per week in the elementary schools, although in all cases "one open house per semester, when scheduled, shall be considered part of a teacher's assignment"; teacher protection provision (see following provision reprint); teachers wishing to qualify for teaching special education courses may receive tuition reimbursement for up to 12 credit hours after satisfactory completion of the courses; by September 1973, all new elementary teachers shall be required to have 6 college hours in reading, and the board shall provide tuition reimbursement for teachers wishing to take such hours; new teachers involved in orientation programs (a minimum of 5 days in central city schools and 3 days in others) prior to the opening of school will be compensated at their daily rate of pay; provision stating that teacher involvement "in the decision-making processes is vital to the continued improvement of the educational program," and that this provision shall be subject to arbitration, although no retroactive award shall be made; probationary teachers shall be evaluated in writing at least once per semester during their first 3 years of employment, while tenure teachers shall be evaluated annually for the first 2 years under such status and at 3-year intervals thereafter; 2 days per year are allotted for parent-teacher conference scheduling, and 2 half-days per semester shall be designated by the calendar for staff planning sessions which shall begin at 1:15 p.m.

BUILDING SECURITY

1. Principal Responsibility. The principal of each school shall be responsible for the general management, instruction, and discipline of his school, shall direct and assist the teachers, and see that the Rules of the Board and direction of the Superintendent are properly carried out.

2. Administrative Reinforcement. When the regular resources of the school are inadequate to accomplish this responsibility, principals are expected to call upon the Central Office for additional assistance, or if the nature of the problem so indicates, call upon the Milwaukee Police Department. Where additional personnel are assigned, they shall assist with administrative duties, such as handling of any suspensions and/or reassignments.

3. If the teachers feel a serious disturbance may develop, the principal shall provide an opportunity for the Building Representative to phone the MTEA office.

4. The MTEA Building Representative shall be released from his assignment during crisis periods, so that communication with teachers on the facts of the incident is accurate.

5. Any student making a direct or implied threat to any faculty member shall immediately be referred to the principal for disciplinary action, together with a #72 card. A conference shall be held between the student, the parent, and the principal, and the teacher involved. Where necessary, the principal shall also notify the Milwaukee Police Department.

6. Any student working to undermine the discipline in a school, either through direct action or the distribution of unauthorized publications, shall immediately be referred to the principal.

7. All persons, including students and staff in secondary schools, shall have an appropriate school system identification card which shall be shown on request. All other persons authorized to to be at any school shall have a school system identification card or permission from the principal in writing. When a person not so authorized refuses to leave the building, appropriate action shall be taken by the principal or his designee, and, where the situation warrants, the Milwaukee Police Department will be utilized. The MTEA staff representatives shall be furnished an identification card from the Central Office.

8. In schools having persistent problems with unauthorized people in the halls, assigned lay personnel shall be used.

9. No teacher shall be required to subject himself to any clear or imminent danger to his safety. (Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

PROCEDURES FOR SCHOOLS WITH SPECIAL PROBLEMS

When conditions in any school evidence a potential interference with the educational process, the following procedure shall apply:

1. MTEA Involvement.

a. When the MTEA is informed by teachers or other sources that such conditions exist within any school, the MTEA shall immediately investigate the situation and notify the Division of Administrative and Pupil Personnel Services that they are going to be in the building. Such investigation shall include meeting with the principal of the building and with members of the faculty and any other persons that may have information pertaining to the investigation.

b. If after such preliminary investigation the MTEA feels that the teachers' concerns are justified and require consideration to prevent a potential interference with the educational process, they shall file a written statement of the results of their preliminary investigation to the Office of the Superintendent.

2. Administrative Verification.

a. Within two working days after the receipt of the MTEA's preliminary investigation report, a three man administrative task force, appointed by the Superintendent, shall investigate the conditions in the building. The administration shall notify the MTEA that they are going to conduct such investigation. Within three days thereafter, the administrative task force shall report in writing to the Superintendent the conditions which exist.

b. The administrative task force shall be authorized to call upon any division or department for advice and counsel and upon representatives of the MTEA in making such investigation.

3. Conference with Superintendent.

a. Within two working days, upon the request of the MTEA, the Superintendent or Deputy Superintendent shall hold a conference with the administration and MTEA to discuss their reports. The parties will make every effort to resolve the matter informally.

b. Within three working days following the close of the conference, the Superintendent shall notify all parties of his decision and the manner in which it shall be effected in writing.

4. Immediately Available Funds. The Board shall set aside fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) in each year of the contract as an immediately available fund to initiate the Superintendent's recommended action, until such time as the Board can allocate additional funds, if necessary. Upon recommendation by the Superintendent, approval of the Board shall be required to use monies from the fund to meet the problems. Such approval shall be by voice approval of a majority of the Board.

5. Board Consideration.

a. Where the matter is not resolved by the action of the Superintendent it shall be reported to the appropriate Board committee at its next regular meeting by the Superintendent at which time the MTEA will be given an opportunity to be heard. (Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

PROTECTION OF TEACHERS

1. Assistance in Assault Cases.

a. Teachers shall report all cases of assault suffered by them in connection with their employment to the principal on forms provided by the Board, which may be obtained at the office in each school. Principals shall transmit a copy of the report to the Office of the Superintendent and to the office of the Assistant City Attorney assigned to the Superintendent's Office. Both the Superintendent and the City Attorney's Office shall acknowledge receipt of such report immediately after the report is received. In acknowledging receipt, the Superintendent or his designee shall send a copy to the MTEA.

b. The Superintendent shall request the City Attorney's Office in all such cases to inform the teacher immediately of his rights under the law and shall provide such information in a printed document to include rules of the Industrial Commission and the Board.

c. If a teacher who has been assaulted wishes to file a complaint against the student, the police shall be called immediately by the principal so that the police may properly investigate and find witnesses to the act.

d. The Office of the Superintendent shall request the City Attorney's Office, in all such cases, to notify the teacher of his readiness to assist the teacher as follows:

1) By obtaining from police and/or from the principal relevant information concerning the assailant.
2) By accompanying the teacher in court appearances.
3) By acting in other appropriate ways.

e. In schools where there is a record of danger to the teachers or students, the Board shall provide appropriate additional personnel to help in building control.

f. No teacher shall be required to subject himself to any clear and imminent danger to his safety.

2. Legal Counsel.

a. The Board agrees to provide legal counsel to defend any teacher in a civil action arising out of an alleged assault on or by a teacher, which occurs in connection with his employment, or any disciplinary action taken against the student by the teacher, where the Superintendent finds that the teacher acted in accordance with the disciplinary policy established by the Board.

b. In the event the City Attorney's Office is unable to defend the teacher, the Board agrees to provide minimum bar fees to aid in the defense of any teacher in a civil or criminal action, arising out of disciplinary action taken by the teacher in connection with his employment, provided such teacher is found not guilty in criminal action or judgment is rendered against the other party in a civil action or if the case is dismissed.

c. If the teacher is ordered to the District Attorney's Office, a warrant has been requested, or a complaint filed, the teacher shall immediately notify the MTEA and the Chief Negotiator. If the warrant is refused and the Board was unable to furnish legal counsel, the Board will pay minimum bar fees to the teacher for the attorney who defended the teacher.

3. Insurance.

a. Present liability insurance covering teachers' tort liability, paid for by the Board, shall be continued in the amount of $5,000,000.

b. The Board will reimburse teachers against loss or damage to personal property used in the course of employment in buildings operated by the Board arising from theft, fire, or willful damage not to exceed $150 on any one occurrence.

c. The Board will provide insurance to cover malicious damage to employes' cars while parked at school during school hours or while on school business. Such policy will not cover the first ten dollars ($10) of damage in any one incident.

4. Compensation for Lost Time. If an assault on a teacher results in loss of time, the teacher shall be paid in full for such time, and such paid absence shall in no event be deducted from any sick leave to which such teacher is entitled. The MTEA and the Board will appear before the State Legislature to recommend a change in the Teacher Pension Law so as to provide disability benefits where the disability is job incurred. (Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS: BUILDING REPRESENTATIVES

The NEA Research Division's analysis of 978 negotiated classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more identified 128 agreements (13.1 percent) with provisions concerning building representatives. Specific content found in these provisions can be categorized broadly as the number and organization of building representatives, the selection and qualifications of representatives, their functions, their privileges, and various miscellaneous rules.

Table 1 indicates the general content of the 128 provisions analyzed, and succeeding tables present a detailed analysis of the broad content categories identified. The categories listed in the tables are not mutually exclusive, and the analysis is limited to what appears in written negotiation agreements; no attempt is made to cross-reference the analyzed provisions with other negotiated content which indirectly may affect building representatives. In addition, peripheral and/or unrelated subject matter has been deleted from the sample provisions reprinted here.

Number and Organization

Of the 63 provisions indicating the number of representatives, 32 (50.8 percent) stipulated that there was only one representative per building. The 31 provisions (49.2 percent) stating that more than one might be chosen gave a specific maximum number only, a ratio of representatives to staff, or left the matter undefined. Those provisions allowing more than one representative per building and establishing a maximum number variously set the maximum at two (four provisions), three (nine provisions), five (six provisions), and seven (three provisions). Included in that count are six provisions which referred to both a faculty/representative ratio and a maximum number of representatives per building. Provisions mentioning only a ratio to staff figure sepcified a ratio of 1/20 (two agreements), 1/15, 1/25, 1/30, and 10 percent. Sample provisions are:

A committee of teachers shall be created in each school building from the faculty of that building.

In schools having a faculty of fewer than forty teachers, the committee shall consist of three teachers. Two members of the committee shall be elected by the teachers in the building. One member of the committee shall be appointed by the Association.

In schools having a faculty of at least forty teachers, but fewer than eighty teachers, the committee shall consist of five teachers. Three members of the committee shall be elected by the teachers in the building. Two members of the committee shall be appointed by the Association.

In schools having a faculty of eighty or more teachers, the committee shall consist of seven teachers. Four members of the committee shall be elected by the teachers in the building. Three members of the committee shall be appointed by the Association.

All elections under Section 28-1, above, shall be conducted by the Association members within the school. All teachers within the school shall be eligible to vote for and hold elective positions on the committee irrespective of membership in the Association. (Denver, Colorado)

* * *

One teachers' representative for each school building, selected by the Association, (or an alternate, if the building representative is absent) shall be recognized by the Board as the official representative of the Association for the teachers in that building to receive official communications under this grievance procedure. (Grosse Pointe, Michigan)

* * *

The Association Building Committees shall be selected by the Association membership in each respective building and each committee shall have no more than five persons. (Peru, New York)

* * *

The Union members in each building shall have the exclusive right to choose their representatives according to the provisions of the Constitution and By-laws of the Cleveland Teachers Union. By Union Representative is meant the Union Chairman and/or the Union Conference Committee. When there is no building representative, the Union president shall designate one or shall act directly for the building until such time as an official representative shall be elected. (Cleveland, Ohio)

Building representatives formed committees in 48 provisions, and the majority of these (91.7 percent) were strictly building level committees. Of the remaining committees, two were established only at the district level, and two were established at both the building and the district levels. Thirty-three of the 46 building level committees consisted solely of building representatives, and two of these were headed by a chief representative. Two other committees chaired by the representative included faculty members who were not official building representatives. Examples of such provisions are:

A School Building Committee shall be organized at each school. Committee members shall be elected on or about September 15 by and from the teachers assigned to the building and shall serve until September 15 of the following year. Committee membership shall be reported by September 20 of each year to the Deputy Superintendent for official filing. The Association shall designate one of its Building Representatives from the building to serve as chairman of the committee with the right to vote. The principal shall be a member of the committee with the right to vote.

Other members of the Committee will be certificated personnel elected by the faculty. Elections shall be conducted by the Association members within the school. All teachers within the school will be eligible to vote for members of the Committee irrespective of membership in the Association. Membership on the Committee, in addition to the principal and Association Building Representative, shall be based on the following school enrollment:

Enrollment	Number of members
600 or less	3
601 to 1,100	5
1,101 to 1,600	7
1,601 to 2,100	9
2,101 or more	11	(Wichita, Kansas)

* * *

To maintain a continuing mutual working relationship between the professional staff and the Board of Education, a permanent Professional Council shall be hereby established. . . . To bring the above proposals to bear on the teaching situation in each building of the Babylon School District, Building Committees shall be established according to the following procedures:

(a) The Elementary School Building shall have a Building Committee consisting of the building principal, or assistant principal, and one tenure teacher from the Elementary School Building.

(b) The Memorial Grade School Building shall have a Building Committee consisting of the building principal, or assistant principal, and two tenure teachers from the Memorial Grade School Building.

(c) The Junior-Senior High School Building shall have a Building Committee consisting of the building principal, or assistant principal, and three tenure teachers from the Junior-Senior High School Building.

Each teacher in each of the above Building Committees must be a member of the Babylon Teachers Association, and must be elected by the teaching staff of the building he is to represent. The Professional Council, in turn, will consist of all the members of all the Building Committees, and the President of the Babylon Teachers Association. . . . The Professional Council will meet officially only with the District Principal. (Babylon, New York)

While 11 provisions mandated that the principal join the committee of representatives (as indicated in the preceding examples), all of these clauses provided that the committees would function as liaisons between faculty and building administration. Committees established at the district level were for purposes of forming a liaison with the superintendent. Table 2 provides information concerning the number and organization of building representatives.

Selection and Qualifications

Of the 53 provisions containing a procedure for selecting building representatives, 67.9 percent stated that they were appointed only, 24.5 percent designated an election procedure, and 7.5 percent indicated that they were chosen by a combination of election and appointment. Only three agreements did not define the group making the appointment or participating in the election. In 37 agreements, some or all members of the teachers' organization selected building representatives, while nine agreements indicated that all building faculty members regardless of organization membership participated in the selection process. The remaining four agreements stated that the representative organization appointed some representatives and the entire building faculty elected others.

Twenty-eight provisions indicated the necessary qualifications of building representatives, but the statements of qualifications generally were not very explicit. For example, 19 agreements required the representative to be a building faculty member, but only three of these specified that he need not be a member of the teachers' organization. The remaining nine provisions stated that the representative must be both a building faculty member and a member of the representative organization. Table 3 indicates the number of agreements containing subject matter regarding the selection and qualifications of building representatives.

Functions

The topics most commonly included in building representative provisions dealt with representatives' functions, duties, and activities. In the 118 provisions containing such subject matter (92.2 percent of the total number of pertinent provisions), the functions generally included meeting with the building principal and/or the superintendent to discuss matters of mutual concern, performing the business of the representative organization, and participating in grievance proceedings. Sample provisions are:

> The principal of a school shall meet with the Federation Building Committee of that school upon the request of the Building Committee to discuss school operations and questions relating to the implementation of this agreement. Proposed changes in existing policies and procedures and new policies and procedures for that school shall be subjects for discussion at such meeting. (Inkster, Michigan)

* * *

> The principal of each school shall meet at least once a month with the Federation Building Committee at its request to discuss school operations and questions relating to the implementation of this Contract. These meetings shall be held at a time of the day mutually agreed upon and, if held during the regular school day, shall not result in loss of pay to the teachers. Any meeting of the Building Committee held during a teaching period of a member of the Committee shall be called only in the event of an emergency. . . . Proposed changes in existing policies and procedures and new policies and procedures for each school shall be appropriate subjects for discussion at such meetings. Any changes in such policies and procedures or any new policies and procedures shall be subject to the approval of the Board and consistent with the terms of this Contract. (Buffalo, New York)

Of the 75 provisions stating that representatives were to discuss matters with the building principal, 22 specified a minimum number of meetings per year, usually at least one per month. In addition, 21 provisions indicated that the outcome of such discussions might be proposals for new building policies or changes in existing policies. The presence of representatives at teacher-administrator conferences always was to be requested by one or both parties to the conference. Table 4 provides a detailed breakdown of building representatives' functions; the category labeled "other functions" includes the development and implementation of building rules, scheduling teacher work loads, and reporting to a so-called Operational Advisory Council.

Special Privileges and Miscellaneous Rules

Of the 43 provisions (33.6 percent of the total) granting building representatives special privileges, 24 provided time for them to speak at regular staff meetings, 15 provided some released time during the school day, and five stated that they had the right to use the school communications system. Five other agreements listed various privileges such as office space, the right to visit other schools, general use of school facilities, no loss of preparation period, and released time for in-service training courses sponsored by the organization.

While most of the provisions allowing representatives time to speak at faculty meetings did not indicate the amount of time, 11 clauses specified 10 minutes' time. Of the provisions granting released time, two provided for no loss of pay, seven stipulated that the time be taken from noninstructional duty periods, five provided released time at the representative's request, and three scheduled regular released time. Use of the school communications system often included use of school telephones, bulletin boards, and teacher mailboxes. Provisions illustrative of the special privileges granted to building representatives are:

A designated Union officer in each building shall have one regularly scheduled period of released time daily to conduct faculty business relating to this contract. File space and a telephone shall be made available to them for these purposes. (Proviso Township, Illinois)

The principal may provide the School Building Committee with secretarial services as may be available and agreed upon by the principal and Committee. (Wichita, Kansas)

* * *

The Federation shall be provided adequate bulletin board space in a place readily accessible to all teachers in each school for the posting of notices and other materials relating to Federation activities.

1. The bulletin board space allocated shall be identified with the name of the Federation, and the authorized representative of the Federation or his designee shall have the responsibility of positing materials on the bulletin board.
2. During the period of time that is presently allotted for regular school announcements, there shall also be time allotted for announcements concerning Federation bulletins affecting the teaching staff.
3. The Federation shall have the right to place material in the mail boxes of teachers. Placement will be made by the authorized representative of the Federation or his designee. (Inkster, Michigan)

Each building representative shall have the right to schedule Association meetings before or after school or during the lunch period in his or her building. The building representative shall be provided with not less than 10 minutes' time at all building faculty meetings to report on the matters involving representation of the teachers by the Association. The building representative shall be allowed free time during school hours each week to perform his duties under this agreement, provided such free time does not interfere with his teaching duties. (Ithaca, New York)

One Federation building representative in each building shall be assigned to handle grievances and other duties connected with the administration of the contract, and the duty of the Federation to represent teachers, as follows: in secondary schools the Federation building representative shall be relieved of two non-instructional periods (excluding assigned preparation periods) per week; in elementary schools the Federation building representative shall be relieved of two 25-minute periods per week during which children are arriving or departing. Except as otherwise provided herein, no teacher shall engage in the handling of grievances or administration of the contract during the time he is assigned to teaching or other duties. In the elementary schools, any teacher who relieves the Federation building representative shall receive compensatory time off from another duty. (Massapequa, New York)

Miscellaneous rules pertaining to building representatives are categorized under six broad self-explanatory headings in Table 5. Agreements most frequently mentioned that building representatives' activities should not interfere with the normal school program or with regularly scheduled faculty meetings, as in the following provisions:

Secondary school union building representatives shall be released from homeroom duties to conduct union business providing it does not interfere with regular homeroom activities of other teachers. Elementary school union building representatives shall be released from supervisory duties from 8:30 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. to conduct union business provided it does not interfere with supervisory duties of other teachers. (Harper Woods, Michigan)

The Building Vice-President shall have the right to schedule Association meetings in the school building before or after school or during school lunch periods, provided such meetings do not conflict with scheduled faculty or other academic meetings. The Building Vice-President shall be provided ten (10) minutes time at all faculty meetings, if requested, to report on matters involving representation of the teachers by the Association. The Building Vice-President shall be permitted to meet with teachers at times and places convenient to him, provided that such meetings can be scheduled without disturbing the regular academic program. (Amityville, New York)

Procedures which building representatives were to observe when performing their functions included requesting placement on the agenda of faculty meetings through normal channels, informing the principal of another school of their presence in a particular building, following the negotiated rules and guidelines of the representative committee, and following regular procedures when scheduling meetings.

Of the 12 provisions indicating that changes or new policies might result from discussions between the building representative and the principal, 10 stated that the matter would be settled at the building level, and two provided that the school board pass judgment first. Pertinent administrative information given to representatives included copies of all official committee meeting agendas and minutes, copies of board rules, and agendas of board meetings.

IDAHO

AN ACT

Relating to education: providing that professional employees and boards of trustees of each school district, including charter districts, shall upon request of either party, enter into a negotiation agreement, and negotiate on those matters agreed to in any negotiation agreement between the local board of trustees and local education organization representing professional employees; defining terms; providing for exclusive representation for negotiations; providing for mediation; providing for fact finding; providing that this act shall not conflict with existing responsibilities of boards of trustees and providing for action during emergencies; and establishing an effective date.

Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:

SECTION 1. The board of trustees of each school district, including specially chartered districts, or the designated representative(s) of such district, is hereby empowered to and shall upon its own initiative or upon the request of a local education organization, enter into a negotiation agreement with professional employees and negotiate with such employees in good faith on those matters specified in any such negotiation agreement between the local board of trustees and the local education organization. A request for negotiations may be initiated by either party to such negotiation agreement.

SECTION 2. Definition of terms as used in this act:

1. "Professional employee" means any certificated employee of a school district, including charter districts; provided, however, that superintendents, supervisors or principals may be excluded from the professional employee group if a negotiation agreement between the board and local education organization so specifies.

2. "Local education organization" means any local district organization duly chosen and selected by a majority of the professional employees as their representative organization for negotiations under this act.

3. "Negotiations" mean meeting and conferring in good faith by representatives of a local board of trustees and the authorized local representative organization of professional employees, for the purpose of reaching an agreement, upon matters and conditions subject to negotiations as specified in a negotiation agreement between said parties.

SECTION 3. The representative organization designated or selected for the purpose of negotiations by the majority of the professional employees in a school district shall be the exclusive representative for all professional employees in that district for purposes of negotiations. Provided, however, that the individual or individuals selected to negotiate for the professional employees shall be a member of the organization designated to represent the professional employees and shall be a professional employee of the local school district. A local board of trustees shall negotiate matters covered by a negotiations agreement only with the representative organization designated by the professional employees of a school district.

SECTION 4. In the event the parties in negotiations are not able to come to an agreement upon items submitted for negotiations under a negotiations agreement between the parties, one or more mediators may be appointed. The issue or issues in dispute shall be submitted to mediation at the request of either party in an effort to induce the representatives of the board and the representative organization to resolve the conflict. The procedures for appointment of and compensation for the mediators shall be determined by both parties.

SECTION 5. 1. If mediation fails to bring agreement on all negotiable issues, the issues which remain in dispute may be submitted to fact-finding by request of either party. One or more fact-finders shall be appointed by the parties by mutual agreement. If such agreement cannot be reached within thirty (30) days of the request for such appointment, the state superintendent of public instruction shall make such appointment. The fact-finder shall have authority to establish procedural rules, conduct investigations and hold hearings during which each party to the dispute shall be given an opportunity to present its case with supporting evidence.

2. Within thirty (30) days following designation of the fact-finder, he shall submit a report in writing to the respective representatives of the board and the professional employees, setting forth findings of fact and recommendations on the issues submitted.

SECTION 6. Nothing contained herein is intended to or shall conflict with, or abrogate the powers or duties and responsibilities vested in the legislature, state board of education, and the board of trustees of school districts by the laws of the state of Idaho. Each school district board of trustees is entitled, without negotiation or reference to any negotiated agreement, to take action that may be necessary to carry out its responsibility due to situations of emergency or acts of God.

SECTION 7. This act shall be in full force and effect on and after July 1, 1971.

CONTRACT RULED UNENFORCEABLE; BINDING GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION CLAUSE NEGATED

The Orange County Superior Court denied confirmation of an interim arbitration award (NRD, 6-71, 7) which held that the Placentia Unified School District was bound by and could not unilaterally withdraw from a binding grievance arbitration provision contained in its contract with the Placentia Unified Education Association. According to the court's memorandum decision, > the public policy of the State, as expressed by legislation and judicial decision, is to circumscribe narrowly the powers of school districts, in the interests of state-wide uniformity . . . In light of [the] terms and legislative history [of the Winton Act] and. . .the scope, nature and legislative history of other legislation. . . dealing with employer-employee relations in the private and public sectors, the Court concludes that the Winton Act does not authorize a school board, in the course of procedures therein outlined, to enter into legally enforceable contracts with employee organizations, whether relating to binding grievance arbitration or otherwise.

On September 15, 1970, the Association and the district "informally agreed" upon a document which subsequently was ratified by both parties. The grievance procedure contained therein provided for final review of an unresolved grievance by a three-member panel and stated that "the panel's review of the grievance and its subsequent findings shall be rendered in writing . . . and shall constitute a final and binding decision regarding the grievance."

Three weeks after ratification of the contract, the district requested a legal review by the county counsel which resulted in 21 suggested changes in the agreement and a statement "that much of the wording in the existing document goes beyond the requirements of the Winton Act, either as it exists or as it has been amended." The county counsel's opinion specifically took issue with the finality of the negotiated grievance procedure and suggested that "any decision made by such a panel be advisory to the governing board which should have the power to make final decisions."

When the district was asked to appoint its representative to the grievance review panel, the superintendent replied that "the findings reached by the panel will be advisory only," owing to the school board's conclusion that implementation of the binding arbitration provision "would be illegal." Moreover, the board considered that conclusion to be an "emergency" warranting deviation from the contract under a clause stating that "no change, alteration or modification of these Articles I through XI shall take place during the 1970-71 fiscal year, unless there is mutual agreement of the Board of Education and the Negotiating Council, except in the case where the Board of Education determines that an emergency exists."

The board appointed its representative to the panel, but that representative declared that he was unauthorized to proceed further when the interim arbitration ward at issue here ruled arbitrable two grievances entered by the Association according to the negotiated procedure. The arbitration hearing was recessed pending resolution of the Association's court appeal.

In support of its ruling that the Winton Act does not authorize school boards to enter into legally enforceable contracts with employee organizations (whether or not binding grievance arbitration clauses are included), the court cited the Act's emphasis upon the retention of administrative rules and regulations, lack of certain "standard collective bargaining language," purpose of providing for "orderly methods of communications" between employees and employers, and exclusion from coverage by the collective bargaining portions of the state's labor code. The court additionally pointed to > 2. The absence of the typical collective bargaining provision for the constitution of a body or employee organition with legal authority to present "negotiating" demands on behalf of employees and to bind employees by its own concessions. The "certified employee council" (Sec. 13085) does not meet these specifications.

>
> 3. The absence of any provision for a written contract or written agreement as a culmination of the "meet and confer" sessions. Such a provision is typical in statutes authorizing collective bargaining.
> 4. The provision, instead, that the "agreement" that might result from the "meet and confer" sessions would be memoralized by "written resolution, regulation, or policy of the governing board . . ." (Sec. 13081).

8. The provision of Sec. 13088, apparently reserving the "final decision" to the public school employer, which construed with the language of Sec. 13081 (d) adumbrates the legislative intent that the power of the school board to determine matters within its discretionary authority be not foreclosed by the outcome of the "meet and confer" sessions.

9. Lastly, the provision for resolution of "persistent disagreements" by "non-binding" recommendations or fact-finding by a three-man committee. (Sec. 13087.1)

With respect to the contract's "emergency" clause, the Association questioned the school board's power to invoke this provision (and thereby amend the grievance procedure to provide only for advisory arbitration) prior to institution of the grievance proceedings. The court found that both the Association and the chairman of the grievance review panel appear to believe that the power to modify was not exercisable because no emergency existed, or perhaps because the legal advice that the school board received could not reasonably in good faith have been considered by it to have created an emergency. The legal climate in which the document was negotiated and ratified was one of uncertainty as to whether the school board could bind itself contractually. Even non-lawyers know that "emergency" is an indefinite word. For the parties to use such a term, without definition or limitation, in a provision that the determination of whether an emergency existed was unilaterally reserved to the school board leads to the conclusion that they were content to enter into an illusory contract . . . . Alternatively, they must have intended at least that the school board would not be held to strict standards of precision, objectivity or restraint in making its determination of the existence of an emergency and of the modifications that the emergency required. In the Court's opinion the legal advice, imprecise as it was, that the school board received sufficed to support its determination that an emergency existed and that the emergency required the abrogation of the provision for binding grievance arbitration.

The court accordingly ruled that when the arbitration proceedings began, "the document ratified by the parties did not . . . . provide for binding arbitration of grievances, and that whether or not it so provided [the issue] was never submitted to arbitration by the school board." (Placentia Unified Education Association v. Board of Education, Placentia Unified School District, Orange County Superior Court, May 5, 1971.)

ILLINOIS

UNEXPECTED STATE AID INCREASE RULED CONTRACTUALLY APPLICABLE TO TEACHER SALARIES

A contract clause providing that 1970-71 teacher salaries be increased in the event that legislative alteration of the state aid formula resulted in additional state aid funds for Granite City Community Unit School District No. 9 was ruled applicable to an unexpected "density bonus" received by the district under an amended portion of the Illinois School Code. The Madison County Circuit Court accordingly ordered the district to pay local teachers a $550 salary increase on June 4, 1971.

The 1969-70 contract negotiated by the district and the Granite City Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 743, provided:

If, as a result of a change in the formula for State Aid resultant from a special session of the legislature held prior to the start of the 1970-71 school term;

a. Additional state aid funds are to be received by the district and

b. Such added funds are to be received for the 1970-71 school year.

Annual salaries for the 1970-71 school year shall be increased in accord with [a designated schedule].

Owing to a July 10, 1970, amendment to the Illinois School Code, the district received a 3.5 percent increase in state aid for the 1970-71 school year in the form of a "density bonus" amounting to nearly $260,000. The union then filed a court action, asserting that the density increase clearly resulted from legislative alteration of the general state aid formula, that it constituted additional state aid received by the district within the contractual definition, and that every district teacher should receive a $550 salary increase for the 1970-71 school year.

The district, however, argued that the density increase was not subject to the parties' contract clause because it is a form of state aid granted to certain districts for the improvement of instruction and is not intended to be applied to salaries. It also pointed to legal problems and guidelines issued by the state superintendent's office which would not allow enforcement of the provision as interpreted by the union.

Noting that there is a categorical type of state aid and a general type of state aid, the court found that the district had submitted a program which qualified for an increase in state aid funds under the density bonus provision. But, since this program was adopted prior to legislative enactment of funding increases under the density bonus formula, any additional funds received by the Granite district under that formula are to be utilized in the same manner as other general state aid funds received.

The court concluded that the density increase fell within the coverage of the parties' contract clause, thereby resulting in a $550 salary increase per teacher for the 1970-71 school year. (Granite City Federation of Teachers, Local 743 v. Granite City Community Unit School District No. 9, Madison County Circuit Court, June 10, 1971.)

MICHIGAN

APPLICATION OF PERA TO EASTERN MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY AFFIRMED

The Michigan Supreme Court upheld two lower court rulings (NRD, 1-70, 4) which determined that the Board of Control of Eastern Michigan University is a public employer within the meaning of the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA) and that its employees fall within the Act's jurisdiction. While the board argued that the PERA violated its right under Art. 8, §6, of the 1963 state constitution to "have general supervision of the [higher education] institution and the control and direction of all expenditures from the institution's funds," the high court found that the article does not constitute a plenary grant of powers which, by any stretch of the imagination, would take plaintiff's operations outside of the area of public employment. "Public employment" is clearly intended to apply to employment or service in all governmental activity . . . . It is the entire public sector of employment as distinguished from private employment. The public policy of this State as to labor relations in public employment is for legislative determination. The sole exception to the exercise of legislative power is the State classified civil service . . . . We conclude that the autonomy sought by plaintiff in the area of labor relations is unnecessary for it to maintain "the entire control and management of its affairs and property."

When the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 1666, petitioned the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (then the Michigan Labor Mediation Board) for certification as exclusive bargaining representative of university nonteaching, physical plant employees, the Commission asserted jurisdiction over the matter under the PERA. The university board then sought a judgment to the effect that it was not a public employer within the meaning of the PERA, and that application of the PERA to it violated Art. 8, §6.

While noting the provisions of Art. 8, §6, the trial court also pointed to Art. 4, §48, of the state constitution which states that "the legislature may enact laws providing for the resolution of disputes concerning public employees, except those in the state classified civil service." It found that "there is no reason that the two provisions of the Constitution cannot stand together," and explained:

Article VIII, Sections 5 and 6, were not meant to exempt [university] Regents and Boards from all laws passed by the legislature. It is not an unlimited grant . . . . It is not felt that Article IV, Section 48, would intrude on Regent's or Boards' exclusive power to supervise the affairs of their institutions . . . . It must be remembered that the [PERA] . . . does not impose an obligation on parties (employer or employee) to agree to any proposal or to require the making of a concession. Neither party is forced under the act to enter into any agreement. The Act mainly deals with the rights of employees . . . . Employers must meet with them but are not compelled to agree.

The Michigan Court of Appeals later affirmed this ruling on appeal, as did the state supreme court here. (Board of Control of Eastern Michigan University v. Labor Mediation Board, Michigan Supreme Court, April 5, 1971.)

NEW JERSEY

SCHOOL BOARD CONTRACTUALLY OBLIGATED TO PROVIDE SABBATICAL LEAVE FOR 4 PERCENT OF TEACHERS

In construing a sabbatical leave provision negotiated by the Englewood Cliffs Education Association and the local school board, the Bergen County Superior Court held that the board must provide sufficient funds to finance three sabbatical leaves, rather than two. The board had disputed the meaning of portions of the provision's language, but the court held that the effect of the board's definitional arguments "would be to render meaningless a right bargained for by plaintiffs." The court also dismissed the board's contention that plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies, since the issue presented was "solely a question of law."

The sabbatical leave clause was contained in a contract effective from July 1, 1970, through July 31, 1971, and provided in part that "[i]f there are sufficient qualified applications, sabbatical leaves shall be granted to a maximum of 4% of teachers at any one time." When the three plaintiffs here applied for leave, the superintendent found them all to be qualified, but said he could choose only two according to instructions from the board.

Plaintiffs then brought an action seeking to compel the board to include sufficient funds for three sabbatical leaves in its 1971-72 budget request. While the court had no authority to interfere with the legislative process by which budget appropriations for New Jersey school districts are determined, it ordered the board to set aside funds equal to the cost of one sabbatical leave pending disposition of the present matter.

The board moved to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint on grounds that plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies under the contractual grievance procedure and under statute. But the court held that plaintiffs were not required to follow the statutory route, because the parties' controversy raised no questions of fact and hinged "solely on the construction of the language of the agreement. This is a question of law for the Court."

Regarding the merits of the case, the board argued that the word teachers as used in the sabbatical leave provision referred only to actual classroom teachers and excluded teacher aides. It accordingly maintained that the district teaching staff consisted of 72.4 teachers, a figure which included two part-time teachers, but excluded the district's 11 teacher aides. Plaintiffs, however, included 85 staff members within the definition of the term teachers, and the court pointed out that "by a process of simple arithmetic, 4% of 85 would be 3.4 or 3 teachers."

Moreover, the court noted that Art. I of the parties' agreement provided that "the term 'teachers,' when used hereinafter in this agreement, shall refer to all professional employees represented by the Association in the negotiating unit as above defined." The contractual unit definition included regular and special teachers, teacher aides, and several categories of specialists. As such, the court held that > defendant cannot now complain that the meaning of "teachers" was dependent on its context in a particular provision. The language is clear and the Court has no duty other than to carry its meaning into effect . . . . Moreover, even if the Court were to accept defendant's figure of 72.4 then 2.89 teachers would be involved. Obviously the Court would consider this as 3 teachers in the same manner that 3.4 would be 3 and not 4.

The board additionally contended that the word maximum as used in the leave provision gave the board discretionary authority to grant leaves to less than 4 percent of the qualified applicants. Plaintiffs, however, pointed to the mandatory language of the clause and defined the word maximum as providing for a "situation where there may be applications by qualified persons in excess of 4% of the teachers."

Finding the language of the clause neither clear nor unambiguous, the court turned to the rules of construction and stated that it "must strictly construe any agreement against the draftsman." It pointed out that if the board's argument was correct, "the corollary of its position must be that it can grant no sabbatical leaves if it sees fit. For if defendant can grant leaves to less than 4% of the teachers, what is to prevent defendant from allowing only one or even none as opposed to the two it opts for here . . . . [P]laintiffs could not have been bargaining for an illusory provision and defendant must have understood this."

Concluding that plaintiffs' interpretation of the language was correct, the court briefly noted that the board's first draft of its 1971-72 budget "appropriated an amount sufficient to finance three such sabbaticals." (Betty Eagle, et al. v. Board of Education of the Borough of Englewood Cliffs, Bergen County, Bergen County Superior Court, February 19, 1971.)

RHODE ISLAND

BINDING GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION ENFORCED; SEVERANCE PAY RULED NOT GRATUITOUS

Negotiated grievance procedures ending in binding arbitration are valid and enforceable despite the absence of specific statutory language authorizing negotiation of such clauses, according to a decision of the Rhode Island Supreme Court. In so ruling, the high court affirmed a superior court judgment which upheld a binding arbitration award in the matter of severance pay due 11 retiring teachers pursuant to a 1968-69 contract negotiated by the Providence Teachers Union, AFL-CIO, Local 958, and the Providence School Committee.

The parties' contract provided in sec. 3-22 that > all teachers at the time of retirement after thirty-five (35) years of service in the Providence Public School Department shall be entitled to a maximum severance pay equal to ninety (90) full days and two hundred (200) half-days provided no absences have occurred during the last thirty-five (35) years of service. All absences charged against the teacher's sick leave reserve during the last thirty-five (35) years of service shall be deducted from the maximum severance allotment in the determination of individual severance allowances.

Subsequent to negotiation of the 1968-69 contract and in accordance with newly enacted legislation, the Providence mayor appointed a new school committee whose members adopted a resolution repudiating the severance pay clause negotiated by the former committee on grounds that funds were unavailable. The union grieved this action according to the contractual grievance procedure, which provided that all unresolved grievances be submitted to a three-member arbitration board for a binding decision. A board was appointed and a majority of its members eventually ordered payment of the retirement benefits to 11 eligible teachers.

The school committee challenged this award in a superior court action, arguing there and here that its predecessor lacked specific statutory authority to enter into an agreement containing a binding grievance arbitration clause. Noting the presence of specific language for establishing "a method of arbitration of disputes" in the state's policemen's and firefighters' arbitration acts and a corresponding absence of such language in the School Teachers' Arbitration Act, the committee contended that it was not bound by the arbitration award.

On appeal, the state supreme court found that the school committee failed to distinguish between the arbitration of negotiation disputes and grievance arbitration. It explained that "the only issues any of the three acts expressly authorize to be submitted to arbitration are those unresolved at the bargaining table." Moreover, by virtue of the Act, the court found it "obvious that the Legislature intended that the certified personnel of the state's public schools would be accorded many of the well-recognized rights enjoyed by those employed in the private sector of our economy. If this court is to effectuate this legislative purpose, we cannot look at the [Act] in a vacuum."

Applying the in pari materia rule, the high court found that a state statute which established > a legislative framework for the arbitration of labor controversies . . . provides that a written provision in a written contract between an employer and a union or association of employees to settle any controversy shall be valid, irrevocable and enforceable except upon such grounds as exist in law or in equity for the revocation of such contract. It is quite apparent that the Legislature when it enacted the . . . Act intended that a group such as Local 958 would have the same rights as any other labor organization except those as might be specifically withheld. We therefore hold that the provisions of chap. 9, title 28 give the union the right to provide in its contract with the school committee for the arbitration of grievances arising out of the May 1968 contract and that the school committee was bound to submit the "severance" pay dispute to arbitration as provided in article 7 of the contract.

While the school committee argued that the arbitration award was invalid because it was not unanimous, the court cited another portion of Chap. 9, Title 28, which states that "an award made by a majority of the arbitrators shall be valid unless the contract expressly required the concurrence of all the arbitrators. We have examined the contract and cannot find the specificity described in the statute."

Regarding the severance pay provision, the committee contended that it was prospective in nature, and that the only teachers entitled to its benefits would be those retiring in the year 2003. If interpreted otherwise, the committee claimed that the provision would violate "the principle that a municipality cannot grant its employees a 'gratuity' on account of work already performed." But the state supreme court found "nothing in the nature of a gratuity with the award in the controversy" and commented:

> This clause serves a useful function in the eductional scheme. This provision calling for the payment of accumulated sick leave after 35 years of service acts as an inducement to teachers to remain in the school system and deters absenteeism for trifling ailments . . . . It acts as an aid in seeking to insure that the pupils might have a continuity of teaching techniques in their classrooms throughout the school year . . . [and] might save the school administration much toil and trouble as it seeks to obtain the services of a substitute to cover for the regular teacher who, . . . takes advantage of some of his unused sick leave . . . . We cannot fault the retirement award provisions because, in computing the amount due, it takes into consideration services rendered by an employee prior to the effective date of the contract. Many courts have held that a governmental employee is not to be denied compensation because of the mere fact that his salary or retirement award is based on work performed prior to the effective date of the pay plan or retirement agreement.

Finding the severance pay clause valid and proper, the court pointed out that "the school committee is free to insist that it will not agree to the inclusion [of such a clause] within any future collective bargaining agreement." The court finally dismissed the committee's funding argument as affording "no legal basis for [its] unilateral disavowal of the 1968 agreement." According to state law, once a school committee is furnished with its appropriation, it "is then free to allocate the sums appropriated . . . as it deems fit. While we cannot . . . determine the causes for the committee's financial plight, it may not disregard the obligations it assumed when it took office in October 1968." The state supreme court concluded that "the money due the retirees is a debt of the city," denied and dismissed the committee's appeal, and remanded the matter to the snperior court. (Providence Teachers Union, Local 958, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO v. School Committee of the City of Providence, et al., Rhode Island Supreme Court, April 23, 1971.)

SUPREME COURT DECLINES REVIEW OF TEACHERS' CONTEMPT SENTENCES

In separate actions, the Supreme Court of the United States declined review of two cases originating in the Illinois state courts and dealing with the criminal contempt convictions of teachers for violations of anti-strike injunctions. Brief reviews of the cases follow.

In a case involving the Kankakee Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 886, the Illinois Supreme Court upheld criminal contempt sentences levied against Federation members for willful noncompliance with a temporary restraining order issued during an April 1969 strike (NRD, 2-71, 5). Although defendants argued that the ex parte order deprived them of due process of law and violated their constitutional right of free speech, the state high court concluded that defendants' disobedience of the order "merited their punishment for contempt" and pointed out that

We are not dealing with a prior restraint, nor was the trial court . . . confronted with a constitutionally protected area of free speech. Picketing, while a mode of communicating ideas, is not dogmatically equated with constitutionally protected speech . . . and it is settled that the first and fourteenth amendments do not afford the same kind of freedom to those who communicate ideas by picketing, as they afford to those who communicate ideas by pure speech . . . . Here, the unlawful strike of the teachers was already in progress when the temporary order was sought, and the picketing the Board was seeking to restrain was being carried on for the purpose of fostering and supporting such unlawful strike.

(Board of Education of Kankakee School District No. 111 v. Kankakee Federation of Teachers, Local No. 886, U.S. Supreme Court, cert. denied, June 7, 1971.)

The second case concerned an Illinois Appeals Court ruling (NRD, 1-71, 3) which upheld a lower court's refusal to dissolve a temporary injunction issued during a labor dispute between the Cook County College Teachers Union, AFL-CIO, Local 1600, and the Cook County Board of Junior College District No. 508. Union members struck and picketed in violation of the injunction, but counsel to the board moved to dissolve the temporary injunction once the parties settled their dispute. The trial court, however, denied the motion and issued a show cause rule which resulted in the criminal contempt conviction of the union and its president.

The state appeals court subsequently affirmed the lower court's actions in finding that the lower court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, that the matter was of a criminal rather than a civil nature, and that "under no theory can a party that obtains an injunction bind the issuing court with condonation of contemptuous or illegal acts of those who violate the court's order." As the evidence "proved beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants were guilty of contempt of court," the appeals court concluded that the fines and imprisonment imposed by the trial court constituted "exercise of reasonable discretion." Board Findings and Rulings

CONNECTICUT

PLAN TO REGAIN DAYS LOST BY STRIKING REJECTED

In considering whether a union plan for allowing teachers to make up days and pay lost during a strike was sound and feasible, an arbitrator accorded greater weight to the New Haven school board's educational objections to the proposed plan and denied system teachers a chance to recover any of the days lost. Since the situation did not involve a claim based upon contract language and the board's objections were "reasonable and sound," the arbitrator decided that the board "as the designated instrument of the state to fill in the details of educational policy and to administer it" was entitled to greater consideration than "informed professional teachers."

New Haven teachers went on strike on September 8, 1970, during a negotiation dispute, and remained on strike in varying numbers through September 24. The strike action was taken despite a temporary injunction prohibiting such activity, a board offer to continue negotiating while operating under the terms of an expired contract, and the understanding that the terms of any new contract reached with the New Haven Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 933, would be retroactive to the first day of the 1970-71 school year.

A series of court proceedings ensued during which the union was released as a defendant to the temporary injunction, and certain teachers were arrested and fined for violation of the injunction. On September 18, the parties reached settlement, and the board agreed to add to the proposed salary schedule all money not spent on striking teachers' salaries through that date. As the teachers did not ratify the tentative settlement, the strike continued through September 24 when the parties agreed to submit to binding arbitration the matter of a make-up plan. The arbitrator was empowered to decide whether such a plan was equitable, and how the lost days could be recovered. However, the make-up program was to apply only to four days (September 21 to September 24).

The union's plan provided that all teachers could "volunteer" for a tutoring program to be conducted outside school hours at a specified average salary. Pupil participation in the program was to be voluntary, and participating teachers could tutor for a maximum of 27 hours. The board objected to the program because of its voluntary nature and the logistical problems it posed; it also disputed the program's educational value and raised the problems of transportation and supportive services.

While finding some merit to the union's argument that the program would benefit pupils who had suffered an "educational deficiency" during the strike, the arbitrator also considered the board's contention that the program was merely a means of compensating teachers "when they abandoned the interests of their pupils and went on strike even though the board had agreed to apply any increases granted retroactively." He expressed "grave doubts" about interfering with state policy and substituting his judgment for that of the board, explaining:

> An arbitrator determining whether a make-up program should be "allowed" to teachers who were on strike would be decision-making in a field already occupied by statute and, by virtue of the statute, the courts. I make no finding here that a make-up program will or will not compensate wrongdoers and encourage them, in the next go-around, to look for ad hoc educational programs to recompense them for time lost while on strike; but the argument made by the board, even if not embraced, must be recognized as tenable and worthy of consideration . . . . Educational systems and programs and the policies involved therein, under the law of this state, are not to be formulated, determined and administered by arbitrators or associations of teachers, but by the legislature, in the first instance, and by boards of education. The boards flesh out the statutory skeleton and have the delegated authority to do all things necessary to run the educational system including arrangements with associations of public employees not prohibited by law.

The arbitrator pointed out that the matter did not involve a normal collective bargaining problem, but a question of whether the union's make-up plan "is educationally sound and administratively feasible." Under those circumstances, he decided that more weight should be accorded to the board's sound educational objections to the plan and denied the union's attempt to regain lost days. (New Haven Board of Education and New Haven Federation of Teachers, American Arbitration Association, February 24, 1971.)

PENNSYLVANIA

FACT-FINDER RECOMMENDS 8 PERCENT PAY INCREASE IN A TWO-YEAR CONTRACT

A fact-finder appointed to resolve a bargaining impasse between the Monessen Education Association and the local school district cited the "already well nigh unbearable" tax burden of district residents and the system's tight budget as reasons for rejecting the Association's demand for a 15 percent pay increase. Recommending instead an 8 percent pay increase in a contract of "at least two years' duration," the fact-finder also advised the parties to include a comprehensive arbitration clause (including a no-strike provision) and provisions for maternity leave, unpaid leaves of absence, and teacher preparation periods in their first negotiated contract under the state's Public Employee Relations Act (PERA).

The fact-finder, one of the first appointed under the PERA, commended the parties' "first crack at a negotiated written contract," but found the demands "staggering in their complexity if measured by private industry historical procedure." Specifically, he criticized the Association's insistence upon a master contract retroactive to the 1970-71 school year, and its demand for salary increases resulting in a pay scale ranging from $8,500 to $15,500. On the other hand, the school board was "implacably opposed" to the complexity of the Association's demand, the request for retroactivity, and the proposed salary increases. It also alleged that the Association had failed to negotiate pursuant to statute.

Noting that prior disputes between the parties had "engendered three work stoppages in three years," the fact-finder pointed out that the Association's salary demand would necessitate adding another seven mills to the district's current millage rate of 44. Moreover, a projected school budget incorporating the pay increase would lack funds to cover increased pupil enrollment and new school construction; provision for such contingencies "would entail another 20 mill increase," according to the fact-finder. He added that "there is no requirement to negotiate retroactively for the year 1970-71 during which the teachers were paid and accepted [a] $400 increase after [a] work stoppage."

Considering the competitiveness of Monessen district salaries with those offered by surrounding school systems, the fact-finder found the present B.A. scale of $6,600 to $10,600 to be adequate, while the M.A. salary range of $6,900 to $11,200 indicated a need for a more substantial differential. He accordingly recommended that the parties negotiate a two-year contract (beginning with the 1971-72 school year) with a B.A. base of $7,128, an M.A. maximum of $12,096, and a resultant average salary of $9,253. However, he rejected a cost-of-living formula, maintaining that it is "impossible in a tight budget."

In conclusion the fact-finder commented that "it is urged that the initial contract be kept relatively simple and brief, recalling that the best contract is one with the least inherent flash points--one both parties can live with." (Monessen School District and Monessen Education Association, March 22, 1971.)

RHODE ISLAND

IMPASSE AWARD ON RELEASED TIME ECONOMIC ITEM RULED NOT BINDING

An arbitration award involving implementation of a released time program and the consequent expenditure of money was ruled not binding by the Rhode Island State Labor Relations Board under the state's school teachers' Arbitration Act. According to the Act, awards rendered in negotiation disputes "shall be binding . . . on all matters not involving the expenditure of money." Determining that the Cranston School Committee statutorily was not obligated to implement the released time award, the state board ruled that the committee had not committed an unfair labor practice by its failure to so implement.

When the Cranston Teachers Association and the local school committee reached impasse on the issue of paid curriculm preparation time for teachers during the school day, the matter was submitted to arbitration. In accordance with a May 7, 1969, award, a four-member joint committee of the parties developed four plans for implementing a released time program. The school committee failed to implement any of the plans, so the Association filed unfair labor practice charges. It contended that the arbitration award required the committee to choose one released time plan for implementation, that the committee had failed to implement the award, and that it had not negotiated in good faith regarding implementation of the award.

The school committee, however, argued that the award was merely advisory since it involved the expenditure of money. It also showed that it was negotiating in good faith on the implementation of a released time program despite the nonbinding nature of the award. The state board accordingly concluded that "this award does in fact call for the expenditure of money and thus is not binding on the respondents under the Michaelson Act . . . . Further, the board feels that the record established before it shows that the respondents have been properly negotiating as to the implementation of said award." (Cranston Teachers Association and Cranston School Committee, Rhode Island State Labor Relations Board, March 23, 1971.)

WISCONSIN

SICK LEAVE PAY FOUND INAPPLICABLE TO EARLY DELIVERY PRECEDING MATERNITY LEAVE

A pregnant teacher who claimed she was entitled to two weeks' sick leave pay when she was delivered approximately two weeks prior to her scheduled maternity leave and two months prior to her expected delivery date was denied relief by an arbitrator. Finding distinct differences between the intent and purposes of maternity and sick leave provisions contained in a contract between the Madison Area Technical College Teacher's Union, AFL-CIO, Local 243, and the District No. 4 board, the arbitrator held that the board's refusal to pay $456.34 in sick leave benefits to the teacher was proper.

In January 1970, grievant advised the board that she was pregnant and expected to deliver on July 27. While the parties' contract mandated commencement of maternity leave two months prior to an expected delivery date, grievant asked to complete the spring term since it extended only one week past the date on which she contractually should begin her leave. The district director granted her request for leave from June 7 to September 1 while noting that a "technical violation of the union contract may exist." Moreover, her request was not processed in the usual manner because she was expected to deliver during the summer when school was not in session.

Grievant was delivered on May 25 and consequently did not return to her spring term teaching duties, which would have ended on June 6. However, upon returning for the fall term, she requested a sick leave benefit equal to the salary she would have received if she had been able to complete the spring term.

Local 243 argued that grievant was entitled to the benefit because she had applied for maternity leave in accordance with contractual requirements, had been granted such leave beginning June 7, and because the contract's sick leave clause did not exclude from its coverage medical complications relating to childbirth which would relieve the board of its obligation if the employee otherwise was eligible for sick leave. In addition the union found no justification for the board's failure to allow grievant the benefit of working to the end of the school year since that action "changes retroactively the agreement that was reached by [grievant] and the district in accordance with the terms of the . . . agreement."

The board contended that sick leave and maternity leave are distinctly and separately defined and administered, and pointed out that the two provide different benefits. It also maintained that grievant was not sick, referring to her doctor's characterization of pregnancy as a "physiologic rather than a pathologic experience."

Determining that the two types of leaves are quite different, the arbitrator observed that the parties' contractual sick leave provision no doubt was intended to cover pre-natal illnesses occurring prior to the mandatory commencement of maternity leave. But, he found the contract's language specific as to what types of leaves may be granted for what qualifying conditions, and decided that he was "not persuaded that the facts in this situation permit a conclusion that sick leave benefits are due the grievant":

> The special consideration granted [grievant] . . . cannot be construed as a contract, which, in the opinion of the union, the employer now retroactively seeks to break. Permission to delay the start of maternity leave was granted because of the short period of time involved and because both the grievant and the employer placed good faith reliance on the prognosis that she would deliver during the summer. Also, it may well be argued that no leave was actually granted inasmuch as the district director told [grievant] that her request would not be processed in the usual manner, i.e., presented to the Board of Education, because of the projected sequence of events. The argument that [grievant] was "deprived of the benefits of her bargain" by the denial of sick leave benefits has no merit inasmuch as it is obvious that the employer likewise was deprived of her services for the period of time between May 25, 1970, and June 7, 1970, for which he bargained.

TEACHER TRANSFERRED PARTLY FOR UNION ACTIVITY ORDERED REINSTATED IN FORMER POSITION

A Milwaukee teacher who was transferred to another school following an adverse performance evaluation was ordered reinstated to his former position or an equivalent one upon a determination by the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) that the transfer was partially motivated by anti-unionism. The WERC adopted the findings of a trial examiner (NRD,

1-71, 11) who had held that "regardless of how many valid reasons exist for action taken against an employee, if said action is partly motivated by protected union activities, then said action is unlawfully discriminatory and violates Section 111.70 of the Wisconsin Statutes."

First employed in the Milwaukee school system in February 1968, the teacher was transferred at the beginning of the 1969-70 school year upon the recommendation of his principal. An evaluation of the teacher conducted by the principal in the spring of 1969 initially stated that "there can be no adverse criticism of [the teacher's] work in the classroom," but went on to criticize his "questionable judgment in dealing with matters outside his classroom" and his "active leadership role in criticism of the administration."

Noting that this evaluation constituted the teacher's first "below average" rating, the trial examiner found "sufficient evidence . . . seemingly supporting [the principal's] cirticism" of actions taken by the teacher in handling a personal assault incident and in referring disciplinary problems to the administration. But he also found it "significant" that the principal's testimony as to the reasons for his criticisms was vague, and that "much of [his] explanation related to the [the teacher's] alleged deficiencies in student control even though said deficiencies were subject to specific criticisms in another part of the evaluation."

Moreover, the examiner held that the principal's recommendation for transfer was motivated in part by the teacher's activities during the spring of 1969 when he processed two grievances in behalf of the Milwaukee Teachers Education Association. Concurring with this finding, the WERC ordered the Milwaukee school board to reinstate the teacher and provide him with a new or amended evaluation of his 1968-69 teaching experience "based on a fair and nondiscriminatory evaluation on his performance as a teacher." (Milwaukee Teachers Education Association and Milwaukee Board of School Directors, Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, April 27, 1971.)

NLRB REFUSES JURISDICTION OVER NONPROFIT EDUCATION CORPORATION

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) declined to assert jurisdiction over unfair labor practice charges involving the Center for Urban Relations (a nonprofit New York state educational corporation) and the Center Employees Association. Acting upon a series of jurisdictional petitions filed by the parties and the New York State Labor Relations Board, the NLRB held that the Center's activities are essentially local in nature, are focused upon the public schools, and "would not have a substantial impact on interstate commerce."

According to the NLRB, the Center operates as "part of a national program of educational laboratories created by Title IV of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, and [its] principal activities are directed to local public education in urban and suburban communities." The Center argued that assertion of NLRB jurisdiction herein would be appropriate since its primary operations cover portions of three states, and it has had contracts with school boards and private businesses throughout the country.

But the state board and the Association contended that the Center's business is primarily local in nature, that it does no business with colleges and universities, and that it does not compete with commercial firms performing similar work since it is both noncommercial and nonprofit. They also argued that the NLRB should not expand its jurisdiction to this case (as it has in other cases in recent months under its $1 million jurisdictional standard for private nonprofit colleges and universities) since the case did not present "a situation which is national in scope."

Finding that the Center's services "to other organizations, such as private foundations and business concerns, . . . constitute a relatively minor portion of its operations, and do not materially alter the essentially local nature of its activities and endeavors," the NLRB concluded:

> Notwithstanding that the Employer's annual budget is in excess of $2 million and that its operating funds are derived principally from the Federal Government, the focus of the Employer's activities is centered on research and development in the aid of public school institutions, and its activities are, therefore, essentially local in character and any labor dispute in conjunction therewith would not have a substantial impact on interstate commerce. Under all of these circumstances we are of the opinion that pursuant to the provisions of Section 14(c)(1) of the Act, the Board should exercise its discretion by refusing to assert jurisdiction over the operations of the Employer.

Negotiation Notes

ALASKA

INDEPENDENT NEGOTIATION FOR ADMINISTRATORS ALLOWED

An amendment to sec. 14.20.560 of the Alaska teacher bargaining law provides that certificated administrative personnel may elect to negotiate independently of other certificated school personnel. Effective August 5, 1971, the amendment reads:

(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent certificated administrative personnel groups, including principals and assistant principals, from having the right to negotiate independently of the other certificated personnel if they choose to do so as the result of a secret ballot.

HAWAII

PERB MEMBERSHIP REDUCED

An amendment to a portion of sec. 5(a) of the Hawaii public employee bargaining law reduced the membership of the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB) from five to three and altered the length of the members' terms of office. The amendment was enacted by S.B. 1173 and became effective May 13, 1971.

It reduced the number of labor and management representatives from two each to one each; the public will continue to be represented by one PERB member. The amendment also provides that "the terms of members first appointed shall be for four, five, and six years respectively as designated by the governor at the time of appointments," while all members appointed thereafter shall serve six-year terms.

MARYLAND

TEACHERS NOW MAY NEGOTIATE BINDING GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION CLAUSES

Public-school employers and employee organizations now are authorized to negotiate binding grievance arbitration provisions, according to an amendment to a portion of sec. 1(h)(2) of the Maryland teachers' bargaining act. Enacted by S.B. 826, the amendment was signed by the Maryland governor on May 18, 1971, and became effective July 1, 1971.

The term negotiate as previously defined in the statute, included "the duty to confer in good faith, at all reasonable times, and to reduce to writing the matters agreed upon as the results of such negotiations." The new amendment then provides that "such agreements may include a provision for the binding arbitration of grievances arising under such terms of the agreement as the parties have agreed to be arbitrable."

MICHIGAN

STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION CANNOT REVOKE DUES CHECK-OFF FOR STRIKE

An appeal of an appellate court ruling which held that the Michigan Civil Service Commission (CSC) illegally revoked the dues check-off privileges of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 1342, for conducting a 12-day walkout in September 1968 at the Lincoln Park Liquor Control Commission warehouse has been withdrawn.

In prior litigation (NRD, 3-70, 3), the Wayne County Circuit court had vacated the CSC's check-off suspension order on grounds that "the only sanction that may be imposed by the Commission [under its State Employee Relations Policy] is the cessation of recognition of the particular employee organization, which organization was previously recognized under the policy." The Michigan Court of Appeals then determined that the check-off suspension "was arbitrary and cannot stand" since the Commission's rules and regulations nowhere contain a "provision for a suspension of dues check-offs as a possible penalty for engaging in strike activity."

NEW YORK

TAYLOR LAW AMENDED

An amendment which became effective March 1, 1971, extends sec. 205(5)(d) of the Taylor

Law to provide that the "exclusive nondelegable jurisdiction" of the New York Public Employment Relations Board in establishing "procedures for the prevention of improper employee organization practices" shall not apply to New York City prior to March 1, 1972.

SOUTH DAKOTA

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE BARGAINING STATUTE AMENDED TO ALLOW EXCLUSIVE REPRESENTATION

Recent legislative action in South Dakota has resulted in amendments to both the state's labor relations act and the public employee bargaining statute. The state act amendments, which were enacted by H.B. 507 and became effective July 1, 1971, created a state Department of Labor and Management Relations and a state Labor and Management Relations Board. With regard to the public employee bargaining statute, H.B. 716 (also effective July 1, 1971) replaced the formal and informal representation portion of the statute with a provision for exclusive representation and altered the procedure for implementing a negotiated settlement.

The newly created state labor department is empowered "to exercise all power and perform all duties relating to the field of labor and management relations as may be assigned by the legislature. This department is charged with the responsibility of assisting employers and employees in meeting their respective obligations and in benefiting from their respective rights under the laws." The amendment also provides for the establishment of a five-member state labor board which "shall appoint a Commissioner of Labor and Management Relations" and assign his duties. He, in turn, is to assume all duties performed by the former Commissioner of Labor and "shall be responsible for the enforcement of all labor laws," including the public employee bargaining statute.

Sec. 3-18-3 of the public employee bargaining law, as repealed and reenacted by the legislature, now provides for exclusive representation with the option of individual grievance adjustment. It reads:

> Representatives designated or selected for the purpose of formal representation by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for such purpose shall be the exclusive representatives of all employees in such unit for the purpose of representation in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment; provided that any individual employee, or group of employees, shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer and to have such grievances adjusted without the intervention of the formal representative as long as the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of any settlement with the formal representative then in effect, and provided that the formal representative has been given opportunity to be present at such adjustment.

Lastly, an amendment to sec. 3-18-8 of the public employee bargaining statute stipulates that a governing body shall implement any settlement reached with an employee organization in the form of "an agreement which shall be effective only upon approval by resolution of the governing body." That section formerly provided that a settlement would be implemented by the governing body in the form of "an ordinance, resolution, or memorandum of understanding as may be appropriate and consistent with the powers of the governing body."

WASHINGTON

COMMUNITY COLLEGE BARGAINING STATUTE ENACTED

A newly enacted statute granting bargaining rights to academic employees of Washington community colleges became effective August 9, 1971. As defined in the law, the term " 'academic employee' means any teacher, counselor, librarian, or department head, division head, or administrator who is employed by any community college district, with the exception of the chief administrative officer of each community college district."

The statute provides that an employee organization winning a majority of the votes cast in a secret ballot election among academic employees of a community college district > shall have the right, after using established administrative channels, to meet, confer and negotiate with the board of trustees of the community college district or a committee thereof to communicate the considered professional judgment of the academic staff prior to the final adoption by the board of proposed community college district policies relating to, but not limited to, curriculum, textbook selection, in-service training, student teaching programs, personnel, hiring and assignment practices, leaves of absence, salaries and salary schedules and noninstructional duties.

However, any individual academic employee may appear on his behalf in matters pertinent to his employment relations with a community college. The statute further provides for the establishment of a committee whose services may be sought when "any matter being jointly considered by the employee organization and the board of trustees of the community college district is not settled" by statutory means. Composed of educators and community college trustees appointed by the director of the state community college system, the committee shall make advisory, written recommendations to the parties within 20 days of receipt of their request for assistance.

Other portions of the law prohibit discrimination on the basis of employee organization activities, provide that community college boards of trustees "shall adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the administration of employer-employee relations" pursuant to statute, and state that nothing shall interfere with any lawful agreements previously entered into by an employee organization and a community college. The full text of the Washington statute is reprinted in the "Texts" section of this DIGEST.

AFT ATTEMPT TO ORGANIZE SCHOOL SECRETARIES RULED VIOLATIVE OF AFL-CIO INTERNAL DISPUTES PLAN

Apparent attempts by Local 4 of the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), AFL-CIO, to organize Gary, Indiana, school secretaries who already were exclusively represented by the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), AFL-CIO, Local 208, constituted a violation of Art. XX of the AFL-CIO constitution, according to an AFL-CIO impartial umpire. Sec. 2 of Art. XX (known as the Internal Disputes Plan) requires every AFL-CIO affiliate to respect the "established collective bargaining relationship" of all other affiliates.

In the instant matter, the umpire found that AFT communications with the secretaries through a questionnaire and follow-up memorandum issued during the late summer and fall of 1970 "clearly indicate a violation of Section 2 in that the acts of AFT constitute an attempt to represent employees as to whom an established collective bargaining relationship exists with SEIU."

The AFT argued that its actions in seeking information regarding the secretaries' affiliation and their interest in forming a chapter of the Gary Teachers Union were "to lay the groundwork" for a proceeding under sec. 4 of Art. XX. That section allows one AFL-CIO affiliate to interfere with the established bargaining relationship of another when "special and unusual circumstances" are evidenced. The AFT contended that it had jurisdiction over school secretaries and that it properly should organize them.

But the umpire rejected that argument in holding that invocation of a sec. 4 proceeding must precede any attempt to infringe upon another union's established bargaining relationship. That is, the AFT should have obtained an AFL-CIO ruling to the effect that special circumstances were in evidence in the situation before it attempted to organize school secretaries represented by the SEIU.

SUPREME COURT DECLINES REVIEW OF CONTEMPT FINES

An Illinois Supreme Court ruling (NRD, 3-71, 6) which vacated a permanent injunction issued against striking and picketing nonsupervisory employees of the Peoria County Bel-Wood Nursing Home but upheld sentences for contempt of a preliminary injunction was denied review by the Supreme Court of the United States. While the state supreme court found that the preliminary injunction erroneously was issued under the Illinois anti-injunction act, it nevertheless held that certain employees' violation of the injunction's "prohibitions and restraints warranted punishment for contempt." It explained that an injunction "must be obeyed . . . until it is reversed for error by orderly review."

CHALLENGE TO BARGAINING REPRESENTATIVE'S EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES WITHDRAWN

An appeal of a U.S. District Court decision (NRD, 9-70, 3) which found no constitutional violations in the Denver County School District's grant of check-off and other exclusive privileges to the Denver Classroom Teachers Association (bargaining representative of local teachers) has been withdrawn. The Denver Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, Local 858, originally brought suit against the district, claiming that exclusive privileges granted to the Association but denied the union as minority organization violated its constitutional rights of free speech and association, and equal protection under the law.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, however, pointed out that "we must carefully distinguish the exercise of those rights peculiarly involved in the employer-employee relationship from broader rights of speech and association." Stating that the privilege of dues check-off "is peculiarly a matter of labor relations," the court held that "neither the First Amendment nor any other constitutional provision entitles a public employees' union which has lost a representation election to the special aid of a public employer's collection and disbursing facilities." It concluded that the grant of exclusive privileges to the duly elected bargaining representative "promotes a compelling government interest . . . [and] satisfies the strictest test for constitutional equal protection."

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX APRIL TO JUNE 1971

Figures reported by the Labor Department, Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) indicated that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) all-items index rose sharply from April to June 1971. In April, the CPI rose 0.3 percent to 120.2, as computed on the base of 1967=100. That rise placed the April index 4.3 percent above that of a year ago and was attributed in large part to an 0.9 percent increase in the prices of food purchased in grocery stores.

The May CPI registered on 0.5 percent rise to 120.8 (1967=100), thereby resulting in an all-items index which was 4.4 percent above that of a year ago. According to BLS, half of the May increase came from higher prices for apparel, used cars, homes, and postage. Commodities other than food showed an unseasonal 0.7 percent rise that month, while charges for consumer services were up 0.6 percent (the largest rise since January 1971).

In June, the index rose 0.6 percent to 121.5 percent of the 1967 base. As such, the CPI stood 4.5 percent above the June 1970 level. Contributing to the June rise were an unseasonal 0.9 percent advance in the prices of food purchased in grocery stores, an 0.4 percent rise in the prices of nonfood commodities, and an 0.5 percent increase in charges for consumer services. Home repair and maintenance service charges advanced sharply in June, as did transportation charges owing to increases in taxicab and airline fares.

Faculty members requested to substitute are paid $10 per contact hour (defined as a 50-minute period spent in a regularly assigned instructional load). Full-time faculty members assigned to overload courses are paid $10 per contact hour. Full-time faculty assigned to the 1971 summer session are paid 95 percent of their regular weekly rate per week of summer school.

Leaves: For faculty members contracted for a 39- to 41-week period, 10 days' annual sick and emergency leave credited at beginning of school year, unlimited maximum accumulation; full-time summer session faculty receive 2 days' sick and emergency leave which, if unused, may be credited to their accumulation; 2 separate days' personal leave; a maximum of 5 days each (deducted from accumulation) may be granted in the case of an illness or death in the immediate family, although that leave allowance may be extended to 8 days when a serious illness results in death; 1 day of leave per occurrence (deducted from accumulation) may be granted in the event of a "natural catastrophe," which shall be limited "to those conditions commonly termed 'acts of God'"; paid leave as needed for professional conferences with board maintaining for such purposes a travel and conference fund in an amount equal to at least $50 per full-time faculty member; paid leave as needed for jury duty or court subpoena less any court allowances received; leave at partial pay as needed to fulfill military reserve obligations, provided that the total absence does not exceed 2 calendar weeks in any one year; sabbatical leave after 7 years' service within 20 consecutive years "for one semester at full pay or one (1) academic year, or the last semester of an academic year and the first semester of the following academic year at half pay"; in addition to the aforementioned severance pay provisions, faculty members who retire at age 65 with 135 accumulated, unused sick and emergency leave days shall receive $500 additional terminal pay, while faculty members retiring at age 62, 63, or 64 after 20 years' service shall receive an additional $5 per day of accumulated sick and emergency leave.

Insurance: Board-paid Blue Cross-Blue Shield major medical or super medical insurance for individual and family coverage; board-paid group life insurance coverage for individual providing $15,000 upon death, and a sum not less than twice that amount in the event of accidental death; board-paid long-term disability plan with a 30-working day waiting period and coverage to age 65 at 60 percent of salary; in the case of a disability as defined in the long-term disability plan, the board will provide the cost of the faculty member's health insurance coverage for as long as the disability lasts, but not exceeding 2 years from the inception of the disability; in the case of a work-related assault and resultant injury for which workmen's compensation is paid, the board will pay the difference between the faculty member's regular salary and the workmen's compensation payments for up to 3 years or the term of employment, whichever is shorter.

Association: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; agency shop clause providing that all full-time faculty members either join the Association within 30 days of employment, or pay a representation fee equal to the combined dues of the local, state, and national associations; faculty members teaching less than one-half time must either join the Association within 30 days of employment or pay a representation fee of $10 per weekly contact hour or one-half of an amount equal to local Association membership dues, whichever is less; failure to comply with the requirements of the agency shop provision shall be cause for dismissal at the end of the school year in which said failure occurs; released time of up to 5 days per school year for the Association president and vice-president to attend state or national Association meetings; a maximum of 5 other Association officers may be granted one day of released time for the same purpose upon written advance notice of 3 days and provided the Association pays the cost of any necessary substitutes; faculty co-chairman are allowed 3 contact hours of released time per week, while the Association secretary is allowed one contact hour of released time per week; whenever the board reaches a tentative conclusion to request additional millage from the community, it shall allow the Association the opportunity to meet with board representatives to discuss the comtemplated millage request and its expected allocation; all notices required by contract to be given to the Association shall be hand carried or mailed to the Association president by registered mail.

Instruction: The standard teaching load for full-time faculty members shall be 12 to 16 contact hours per week; no more than 2 course preparations shall be assigned full-time faculty members unless more are needed to carry a full load; full-time members shall maintain at least 6 office hours per week for student consultations; the number of advisees assigned to a full-time faculty member shall not exceed 25 during any semester or summer session; no faculty member shall be required to carry an overload during any semester or summer session, and no probationary instructor shall be allowed to teach an overload course except in a course he taught previously at the college; whenever feasible, classes shall be assigned within 8 consecutive hours and with a 12-hour span between the end of the last assignment of the day and the beginning of the first assignment the next day; full-time faculty members shall not be required to have classes beginning after 4 p.m. more than one semester in each academic year and no more than 2 nights each week, unless such is necessary to make a full load; no class size "shall exceed that size set forth upon an official list without the written consent of the faculty member affected, which list has been agreed to be correct by the Board and the GCCEA"; grades given by an faculty member "may not be changed without his consent except that in the event of extended unavailability of a faculty member, or in the event a court orders or recommends a review or change of grade, the faculty in the discipline and the division chairman shall review any request for a grade change and collectively issue a grade"; all instructional materials developed by a faculty member are his property; class record books and final examinations shall be kept on file by the faculty member for a period of one year.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with final and binding arbitration; faculty members may review their personnel files and challenge any materials contained therein relating to their employment by the board; full-time faculty members shall serve a three-year probationary period at the college, except that prior teaching and counseling experience at other accredited institutions may be credited toward reduction of the probationary period to 2 years; the discharge of probationary faculty members may be grieved, but shall not be subject to arbitration; an involuntary transfer or the denial of a request for transfer may be grieved solely on the ground that the decision was unreasonable; all faculty members shall be given a copy of the procedure for interviewing and otherwise judging the merits of applicants for vacanies; an ad hoc advisory committee appointed by the Association may examine the credentials of any and all officially listed applicants for administrative positions, but board decisions regarding appointments to such positions shall be final; faculty members have the responsibility of attending all regular, college and divisional faculty meetings, the agendas for which shall be published 48 hours in advance except in an emergency; a faculty member on continuing contract may be discharged or demoted only for "reasonable and just cause" and only after contractual procedures applying to such situations (a written statement of the charges, a public or private hearing, and the right to appeal an adverse board decision to arbitration) have been complied with; staff reduction procedure (see following provision reprint); board shall make "all reasonable efforts to recruit minority group members for employment in the College" in accordance with negotiated procedures which provide for the selection of faculty members who "shall participate in recruiting trips when practicable"; faculty member attendance at college activities is voluntary except in the case of commencement when no more than 50 percent of the faculty shall be required to attend; in cases of assault, the board "shall render all reasonable assistance to the faculty member (excluding legal counsel) in connection with the handling of the incident by law enforcement and judicial authorities"; provision for the establishment of a 9-member (4 members appointed by the board and 5 appointed by the Association) permanent College Professional Study Committee which shall meet at least once per month to discuss and study subjects relating to college educational processes and submit written recommendations to the college president who shall, within 30 days, issue a written response indicating the reasons for his approval or disapproval of the recommendations; divisional governance provision providing for the development of division rules, regulations, and procedures (which do not conflict with law, board policy, or the contract) in the areas of summer assignments, conference travel, probationary appointments, faculty evaluation, safety procedures, textbook selection, and course assignments, offerings, proposals, and revisions.

STAFF REDUCTION

The Board may, upon giving sixty (60) days written notice prior to the end of the academic year, without hearing, terminate the services of any faculty member because of necessary reduction in personnel; provided there is consultation with the GCCEA prior to the decision to make any such reductions, and provided that the reductions shall be accomplished according to the following provisions:

1. The Board shall determine the areas in which reductions shall be made and such reductions shall then be accomplished in the following order: part-time faculty, probationary faculty, year-to-year contract faculty, and lastly continuing contract faculty members. Seniority within the subject area within the division shall be the criterion for retentions.

2. Released faculty members shall be placed on leave of absence with no obligation to rehire after the expiration of three (3) years. Each faculty member placed on leave of absence as aforementioned shall be reinstated in inverse order of his placement on leave of absence for a vacancy for which he is qualified.

3. The Board shall notify qualified faculty members on leave of absence of subsequent vacancies by certified mail to the last address registered by the faculty member at the Vice President's office. No new appointments, except on a temporary basis, shall be made within thirty (30) days from the mailing of such notification. No appointment of new faculty members shall be made until all those on leave of absence qualified for the vacancy have been given an opportunity to be reemployed. If a faculty member does not return to work at the specified time the Board shall have no further employment obligation to him, except that when a faculty member who has given notice of his intent to return is prevented from so doing due to illness or ther emergencies, his leave shall be extended for a period not to exceed one (1) year.

4. Upon return such faculty member shall retain all credits toward sabbatical leave, sick and emergency leave and experience credits for salary purposes, but shall not accrue any such credits for sabbatical leave and sick and emergency leave and experience for salary purposes during lay off; provided that college or university teaching and counseling experience gained during lay off shall be evaluated for salary purposes upon re-employment. Insurance: Board-paid Blue Cross-Blue Shield major medical insurance coverage for individual, although the board will pay an amount equal to 2 single plans if both the husband and wife are employed by the system; a teacher absent from school as a result of a work-related personal injury shall be paid his full salary less any workmen's compensation payment received for a period of up to 26 weeks.

Personnel: Grievance procedure ends with final and binding arbitration; duty-free lunch period for all teachers corresponding with the students' lunch period; all teachers shall have a minimum of 110 minutes' preparation time per week; probationary teachers are to be evaluated twice during their first year and annually thereafter, while tenure teachers are to be evaluated once every 3 years with such evaluations conducted by an administrator with an M.A. degree and/or 3 years' teaching experience at the teacher's level of performance; teachers shall have the right at least once per year to review their personnel files and respond in writing to any materials therein; when considering candidates for promotional vacancies, qualified applicants within the system are to be given preference; teachers enrolled in summer study programs may receive up to 3 days' administrative leave upon application and certification by the higher education institution that such leave is necessary; teachers participating in scholarship and/or fellowship programs shall be paid stipends upon submission of a "certified class grade report from the institution indicating the successful completion of the courses undertaken together with a billing of the expenses."

Miscellaneous: Payroll dues deduction for local, state, and national associations; provision for the establishment of a joint 12-member Instructional Liaison Council which shall meet at least once per month, shall be allowed one-half day per month for meetings during school hours, and shall advise the superintendent on such matters as curriculum improvements, school calendar, teaching techniques, extracurricular programs, in-service training, pupil testing procedures, teacher evaluation, and teacher recruitment; the Council's recommendations shall be advisory and include both minority and majority views, but the superintendent must furnish the Council with written reasons for his nonadoption of any such recommendations.

NEGOTIATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Collective negotiation activity involving faculties in private and public colleges and universities and junior and community colleges has risen sharply. The National Labor Relations Board's assertion of jurisdiction over certain private colleges and universities and the passage of state negotiation statutes covering public employees have contributed greatly to this increased activity. In the public sector, the applicability of a particular state negotiation statute to college and university faculties is dependent upon the public agency (state or municipal bodies, or local school boards) responsible for academic faculty employment.

Academic faculties of all public higher education institutions in 19 states have been accorded or may be assumed to have negotiation rights under one or more bargaining statutes. Three other states have passed negotiation statutes for local or municipal employees alone, so academic faculties of locally-administered public colleges are either specifically or assumedly granted bargaining rights in 22 states. To date, a total of 28 states have enacted bargaining legislation covering professional school employees. A review of federal action and the nature of state legislation affecting employer-employee relations in higher education follows.

Private Colleges and Universities

In June 1970, the NLRB asserted jurisdiction over private, nonprofit colleges and universities as a class in a case involving Cornell University (NRD, 9-70, 10). It subsequently established a $1 million jurisdictional standard (NRD, 2-71, 13) wherein all such institutions with a gross annual operating revenue of no less than $1 million would fall within NLRB jurisdiction. According to the board's Cornell University decision, 15 states had enacted labor-management legislation at that time, but in only eight of those states (Colorado, Connecticut, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, and Wisconsin) had the legislation been written or interpreted expressly to cover employees of private educational institutions.

Since the NLRB's assertion of jurisdiction, the Connecticut State Board of Labor Relations concluded that it had jurisdiction over a small, private Connecticut college (NRD, 5-71, 7) whose services were primarily local and whose out-of-state students and purchases were minimal by comparison with schools under NLRB jurisdiction. Other state labor boards may be expected to assert similar jurisdiction under their respective laws.

Public Colleges and Universities

Nineteen states currently have enacted one or more negotiation statutes covering all public employees, including public school employees. Six states (Hawaii, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota) have a single statute covering public-school employees and practically all other state and local public employees. The Hawaii, New York, and Pennsylvania statutes specifically include public colleges and universities within their coverage. The Michigan Public Employment Relations Act covers state civil service employees insofar as the power exists in the state legislature to control employment. Both the Michigan courts and the state labor board have determined that state university employers and employees are public employees covered by the Act. In April 1969, the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission asserted jurisdiction over New Jersey state colleges and determined the appropriate representative unit for academic employees of such institutions (NRD, 10-69, 8).

Separate negotiation statutes applicable to specific levels and/or classes of public employees have been enacted by 13 of the 19 states: Alaska, California, Delaware, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oregon, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin. In the first seven states, state and local public employees are covered by one negotiation statute, while professional public-school employees fall within the coverage of another statute. Separate negotiation statutes for state and local employees also are effective in Massachusetts, New Hampshire (covering nonacademic employees of state universities and colleges), Rhode Island, Vermont (covering employees of state colleges), Washington, and Wisconsin. But public-school employees are covered by municipal negotiation statutes in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Wisconsin, and by separate professional school employee negotiation statutes in Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington. In addition, the Washington legislature recently enacted a separate negotiation statute covering academic community college employees. The full text of this statute, which became effective on August 9 is reprinted in the "Text" section of this DIGEST.

Public Colleges—Local or Municipal Administration

In addition to the 19 states which have enacted legislation covering state, municipal, and public-school employees, three states have passed negotiation statutes for local or municipal employees alone. These states are Connecticut, Maine, and Nevada. The municipal negotiation statute is applied to public-school employees in each state except Connecticut where a separate negotiation statute for certificated public school employees is in effect. Therefore, public colleges which are administered by local or municipal agencies are either specifically covered by or may be assumed to be included within the coverage of negotiation statutes in 22 states.

Public Colleges—School Board Administration

Of the 28 states which have enacted bargaining legislation covering professional public-school employees, 17 have separate teacher negotiation or consultation statutes for public education: Alaska, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, and Washington. In Florida, Idaho, Maryland, Montana, North Dakota, and Texas, only public-school teachers have negotiation or consultation rights; other public employees have not been given statutory negotiation rights. In Connecticut, a separate negotiation statute is provided for municipal employees, but there is no statute for state employees.

Public-school employers are defined as regional, county, or local school districts in the 17 teacher negotiation statutes. Public-school employees are defined as teachers, or professional or certificated school employees. While the Kansas law alone specifically includes certificated employees of community and junior colleges within its coverage, faculties of such institutions would in all likelihood be covered by the teacher negotiation statutes in other states so long as they fall within the statutory definitions.

In addition to the 17 states mentioned above, 11 other states have negotiation statutes which cover public-school teachers and other classes of public employees. The Hawaii, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota statutes include teachers within the coverage of legislation applicable to all public employees. Teachers in Maine, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, and Wisconsin are covered by negotiation laws which also apply to municipal employees.

Other Public Employees

The only state which has passed a negotiation statute for public employees in general with the exception of teachers is Missouri. That statute specifically excludes teachers in public schools, colleges, and universities from its coverage. Other states have enacted negotiation statutes for special classes of public employees (e.g., firemen, policemen, and public utilities' personnel) which are not related to education.

Survey of Formal Negotiation Policies and Procedures

In 1969-70, the NEA Research Division surveyed salary and related matters in public and nonpublic higher education institutions. Responses were received from 1,141 of the 1,634 colleges and universities granting the four-year or higher degree and 650 of the 986 two-year institutions. One survey question asked whether there was a formal procedure for conferences or negotiation between representatives of the institution's governing board and faculty representatives on matters of faculty salaries or welfare. Seventeen (1.5 percent) of the institutions granting four-year or higher degrees and 74 (11.8 percent) of the two-year institutions responded that they had a documented policy providing that representatives of the governing board or administration would agree to negotiate such matters. All but one of the 74 two-year institutions were public institutions. Tables 1 and 2 indicate the salary negotiation policies and practices of colleges and universities granting four-year or higher degrees, and two-year institutions.

UNUSUAL PROVISIONS: PUPIL AND CIVIL DISTURBANCES

Negotiated provisions relative to the handling of pupil and civil disturbances within the public-school context vary widely in definition, scope, specificity, and emphasis, but they have appeared with increasing frequency since the 1969-70 school year. According to a series of Teacher Opinion Polls conducted by the NEA Research Division, the percentage of teachers reporting pupil demonstrations against school policies increased from 4.1 percent in 1968-69 to 6.3 percent in 1969-70, and then diminished to 5.3 percent in 1970-71. In all three years, it was found that a much higher percentage of secondary than of elementary teachers reported some form of pupil unrest in their schools. An examination of pupil and civil disturbance clauses effective during the 1970-71 school year indicated that some are directed at particular actions, such as assault, while others refer to specific circumstances, such as bomb threats; still others deal broadly with "acts of misconduct," disorderly activities, "serious disturbances," or pupil unrest. By the same token, the means for handling such disturbances vary according to the gravity of the action or situation, and the person or persons responsible for initiating anticipatory, corrective, or punitive measures often varies with the context of the disturbance.

Generally, pupil or civil disturbances are considered to be the activities of one or more persons which threaten to or actually do jeopardize the safety of others and/or impede normal school operations. However, such disturbances are to be distinguished (in nature, degree, and methods for handling) from disruptive pupil activities which are subject to negotiated pupil discipline procedures. Classroom teacher contracts seem to recognize this distinction, even though a number of the pupil and civil disturbance provisions were classified as subsections of negotiated articles concerning pupil discipline policies. Several other pertinent provisions were negotiated as subsections of teacher protection articles. While the three types of provisions named tend to be interrelated, they are defined and discussed separately here in an effort to indicate more clearly the nature of the relatively few pupil and civil disturbance provisions which have been negotiated to date.

According to the language of classroom teacher contracts effective during the 1970-71 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more, pupil disturbances include the following specific actions: assault, aggravated assault and battery, harassment, intimidation, verbal abuse, disorderly conduct, the unauthorized occupation of property, and inciting others to violence. Specific circumstances referred to in such clauses include arson or attempted arson, false fire reports, bomb threats, and other situations involving the possession or use of lethal or destructive weapons or devices. The handling of pupil disturbances may range from referral of a problem to a specified administrator for appropriate action to immediate suspension or expulsion from school to the evacuation of a building to the closing of school. Likewise, the responsibility for handling a disturbance may rest with the individual teacher, a designated administrator, the school board, outside law enforcement or security personnel, or a combination of the foregoing. Sample provisions are:

In those cases where the number of disrupters and/or the activities being engaged in by the disrupters jeopardizes the safety of students and teachers as determined by the Superintendent and/or Board, school shall be closed, as prescribed by law, until such time as school can resume without fear for injury or abusive treatment. (Hillsborough County, Florida)

* * *

Certain acts of misconduct in school or at school-sponsored events will be subject to immediate suspension or expulsion from school:

1. Any person or group of persons involved in physical threats or violence (incidents legally termed assault, aggravated assault and battery, intimidation, and disorderly conduct) or verbal abuse (including profane and vulgar statements) to others.
2. Any person or group of persons aiding, encouraging, or participating in a disruptive activity that in anyway disturbs the learning process and impedes anothers freedom to properly utilize school facilities and programs.
3. Any person or group of persons involved in unauthorized occupation of any part of the school property and refusing to vacate such school property after being warned and told by a duly authorized school official as set down in section 3 of the 1969 Trespassing on Public Property Act.
4. Any person having possession (on person, in vehicle, or in locker) of a dangerous weapon on school premises or any school-sponsored activity. (South Bend, Indiana)

* * *

In the event of any disorder or disruption in the school program, the faculty shall meet with the administration as soon as possible to discuss appropriate courses of action. (Piscataway, New Jersey)

Most of the provisions examined took an "after-the-fact," restrospective, or correctional approach to handling pupil disturbances in that they provided methods for coping with (rather than averting) disorderly situations, established channels for developing future preventive programs, or named disorderly situations which, if unresolved after a period of time, could result in corrective action. Some clauses stated that school security personnel would be hired if needed to maintain order on a continuing basis, while others provided for police assistance if warranted by a given situation or in the event regular school policing forces were inadequate. Occasional provisions set forth association rights and responsibilities in the event of serious disturbances. Examples of two restrospective or correctional clauses are reprinted below, but the third provision is anticipatory or preventive in nature.

If on a day to day basis school authorities are unable to provide for the safety of students and teachers, the school system shall provide security guards as needed to maintain authority. (Hillsborough County, Florida)

* * *

In the event of any disorder or disruption in the regular school program, the Association shall have the right to meet with the Board before school reopens to develop mutually acceptable programs to guarantee the safety of students, teachers and property. (Penns Grove, New Jersey)

* * *

If the teachers feel a serious disturbance may develop, the principal shall provide an opportunity for the Building Representative to phone the MTEA office. The MTEA Building Representative shall be released from his assignment during crisis periods, so that communication with teachers on the facts of the incident is accurate. (Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

In the event of bomb threats or fire alarms, the general negotiated procedure is to evacuate first and investigate later. Some provisions allow designated administrators to determine the credibility of a threat and act accordingly; others refer to a prearranged building evacuation plan which automatically is to be implemented. Most all of the pertinent provisions stated that no teacher and/or student shall be required to search for any lethal or destructive weapon, remain in a school building during such a search, or act as security personnel in any instance of pupil or civil disturbance. Three sample provisions are:

Students shall not be used as security personnel. Teachers shall not be required to serve as security personnel during a period of civil disobedience, bomb threats, or assaults on students or teachers by trespassers. (Hillsborough County, Florida)

* * *

In the event that any school building is evacuated in whole or in part by reason of any report or threat of damage thereto by bomb, fire, or other lethal instrument or incident, no teacher will be required to participate in any search for such lethal or destructive instrument. When the principal or any school staff member receives a telephone call advising that a live bomb is secreted in his school building, the first step is the decision as to credibility of the call. Whenever a building principal decides that a call is not credible, he must do so in conjunction with the Superintendent or his delegate. (Ithaca, New York)

* * *

In the event that any school building is evacuated in whole or in part by reason of any report or threat of damage thereto by bomb, fire, or other lethal instrument or incident, the teacher's first responsibility is to evacuate the students as quickly as possible according to the prearranged plan for that emergency. After evacuation, the teacher shall report to proper authorities anything of a suspicious nature observed during the evacuation, but teachers shall not be required to participate in any search for such lethal or destructive instrument or to remain in the building while such search is under way. (Rome, New York)

Other negotiated items include reimbursement for damage to a teacher's personal property during a disturbance, and provision for the extension of the school year when pupil disorders necessitate school closings. Two examples are:

After consultation with the Association, the Board may expand the maximum number of work days for teachers in order to comply with but not to exceed statutory requirements to receive full State Aid, and the school calendar may be expanded to meet these statutory requirements. If an expansion of the maximum number of work days for teachers is necessary to meet statutory requirements due to the closing of schools because of student unrest, boycotts or problems related thereto, each teacher shall be paid 1/190th of his regular contractual salary per day. (Albion, Michigan)

* * *

If a staff member suffers the loss or destruction of a prosthetic device (viz: eye glasses, dentures, hearing aid) or has his clothing damaged while acting in the line of duty to stop a disturbance, is assaulted by a student, or while attempting to prevent the destruction of public property, such as a fire, the Board will assume the cost of the replacement or repair of such item. (Nyack, New York)

As indicated earlier, many agreements negotiate pupil and civil disturbance clauses or items in conjunction with articles relative to pupil discipline and/or teacher protection. The following brief discussions of pupil discipline and teacher protection provisions are included here merely to indicate their relationship with pupil disturbance clauses.

Pupil Discipline

According to an NEA Research Division survey, negotiated pupil discipline policies and procedures were contained in 404 (41.3 percent) of the 978 classroom teacher agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year in systems with a pupil enrollment of 1,000 or more. On a philosophical level, these provisions generally recognize that a teacher's authority and effectiveness in the classroom will be undermined if the school board does not provide reasonable support and assistance with respect to the maintenance of classroom control and discipline. Moreover, many clauses state that a teacher should not fairly be required to be responsible for pupils with behavioral problems, and that professional specialists both within and outside the school should be provided to relieve the teacher of such responsibilities.

Pupil discipline provisions also contain more specific statements of the types of behavior constituting a breach of discipline, procedures for identifying and handling pupils with behavioral problems, punishments for particular offenses, and procedures for handling disruptive pupils within the classroom or in special classes. The most frequently mentioned reasons for taking disciplinary action against a pupil consist of general references to disruptive behavior, persistent misbehavior, gross offenses, and physical violence; other more specific types of misbehavior include gambling, the use of drugs, alcohol, or tobacco, the possession of pornography or weapons, disrespect or insubordination, vandalism, arson, theft, extortion, false bomb reports, abusive language, a threatening or belligerent manner, and truancy or skipping classes.

The procedures for initially identifying and handling students with behavioral problems most often consist of reporting punishable offenses to the building principal with an indication of the students involved, and holding a parent-teacher conference. Other frequently negotiated procedures allow teachers the use of reasonable force in order to restrain the disruptive pupil and protect themselves and others, or provide that the pupil be sent to the office or that the principal be notified. Punishments for disruptive behavior vary with the offense but include temporary exclusion from class (usually upon action by the individual teacher), suspension, corporal punishment, transfer to another class (prior to suspension), detention, and expulsion.

Some negotiated provisions state that teachers who have one or more pupils with behavioral problems in their classes shall be given more or longer relief periods and/or reduced class sizes. Others provide for reduced class sizes only, or for the equal distribution of such pupils among all teachers. Many agreements recognize the need for specialized help with disruptive pupils, particularly the services of psychiatrists, psychologists, physicians, and counselors. However, only a few agreements provide special classes for pupils with emotional and behavioral problems, or state that a special education program should be expanded or developed.

Teacher Protection

Teacher protection provisions were found in 510 (52.1 percent) of the 978 agreements effective during the 1968-69 school year. As discussed in the April 1971 issue of the DIGEST, the term teacher protection refers to a statement of board support of its employees in the event that any complaint, claim, action, or injury arises in connection with and out of their employment. Such a statement then may be supplemented by more definitive supportive measures and provisions, such as liability protection and procedures, protection from personal property loss or damage, employee injury benefits, and workmen's compensation. In general, most teacher protection provisions recognize that to some extent a teacher should be guaranteed protection from threats, harassment, interference, or badgering by any group or individual, as well as personal assault, injury, or damage to property, and liability claims resulting from student injuries. However, such protection is applicable only to a teacher's actions within the scope of his employment, i.e., his involvement and activities during the regular school day, within or outside the school building, and his involvement in any other board-approved, school-related activities. Moreover, board fiscal support of a teacher in the event an action is brought usually is contingent upon the absence of negligence in the teacher's action and teacher compliance with board and/or negotiated rules and guidelines.

The provisions usually establish procedures for processing student or parental complaints brought against a teacher and guarantee certain teacher rights in the course of investigating such complaints. Since parental complaints can result from disciplinary actions taken by a teacher, many agreements attempt to define carefully the nature of the limitations upon student discipline, procedures to be followed in dealing with disruptive students and/or disorderly situations, and parental involvement in the discipline process. It often is emphasized, however, that within the scope of his employment, a teacher may use such force as is reasonable and necessary to quell a disturbance which threatens physical injury to others, obtain possession of weapons or other dangerous objects, protect himself, and protect other persons or property.

Many teacher protection provisions also provide procedures to be followed in the event a civil or criminal suit or threat of the same is brought against a teacher, or in cases of personal assault. The board usually will render all reasonable assistance (including legal counsel or fees in the event of a favorable judgment) to the teacher and/or comply with any reasonable request for information relating to the incident or the people involved which is not privileged under the law; in addition, the board often will act as a liaison between the teacher, law enforcement officials, and the courts. Most provisions hold that a teacher involved in school-related legal proceedings shall suffer no loss of wages, leaves, or benefits.

WASHINGTON

ACADEMIC COMMUNITY-COLLEGE EMPLOYEES' BARGAINING STATUTE

Sec. 1. It is the purpose of this chapter to strengthen methods of administering employer-employee relations through the establishment of orderly methods of communication between academic employees and the community college districts by which they are employed.

Sec. 2. As used in this chapter:

"Employee organization" means any organization which includes as members the academic employees of a community college district and which has as one of its purposes the representation of the employees in their employment relations with the community college district.

"Academic employee" means any teacher, counselor, librarian, or department head, division head, or administrator, who is employed by any community college district, with the exception of the chief administrative officer of each community college district.

Sec. 3. Representatives of an employee organization, which organization shall by secret ballot have won a majority in an election to represent the academic employees within its community college district, shall have the right, after using established administrative channels, to meet, confer and negotiate with the board of trustees of the community college district or a committee thereof to communicate the considered professional judgment of the academic staff prior to the final adoption by the board of proposed community college district policies relating to, but not limited to, curriculum, textbook selection, in-service training, student teaching programs, personnel, hiring and assignment practices, leaves of absence, salaries and salary schedules and noninstructional duties.

Sec. 4. Nothing in this chapter shall prohibit any academic employee from appearing in his own behalf on matters relating to his employment relations with the community college district.

Sec. 5. In the event that any matter being jointly considered by the employee organization and the board of trustees of the community college district is not settled by the means provided in this chapter, either party, twenty-four hours after serving written notice of its intended action to the other party, may request the assistance and advice of a committee composed of educators and community college district trustees appointed by the director of the state system of community colleges. This committee shall make a written report with recommendations to both parties within twenty calendar days of receipt of the request for assistance. Any recommendations of the committee shall be advisory only and not binding upon the board of trustees or the employee organization.

Sec. 6. Boards of trustees of community college districts or any administrative officer thereof shall not discriminate against academic employees or applicants for such positions because of their membership or nonmembership in employee organizations or their exercise of other rights under this chapter.

Sec. 7. Boards of trustees of community college districts shall adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the administration of employer-employee relations under this chapter.

Sec. 8. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to annul or modify, or to preclude the renewal or continuation of, any lawful agreement heretofore entered into between any community college district and any representative of its employees.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11615 – PROVIDING FOR STABILIZATION OF PRICES, RENTS, WAGES, AND SALARIES

Declaring that "the time has come for decisive action—action that will break the vicious circle of spiraling prices and costs," the President of the United States announced on Augnst 15, 1971, the initiation of a New Economic Policy entailing "a freeze on all prices and wages throughout the United States for a period of 90 days." According to Executive Order 11615, issued by the President under authority of the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970, as amended, prices, rents, wages, and salaries shall be stabilized for a period of 90 days from the date hereof at levels not greater than the highest of those pertaining to a substantial volume of actual transactions by each individual, business, firm or other entity of any kind during the 30-day period ending August 14, 1971, for like or similar commodities or services. If no transactions occurred in that period, the ceiling will be the highest price, rent, salary or wage in the nearest preceding 30-day period in which transactions did occur.

In addition to the wage and price freeze, which covers all commodities and services with the exception of raw agricultural products, stocks and bonds, and exports, the President ordered a 10 percent cut in foreign economic aid, directed the Secretary of the Treasury to temporarily suspend full convertibility of dollars into gold, and proposed a reduction of federal expenditures in fiscal year 1972 by $4.7 billion. He also recommended that Congress establish a job development credit, repeal the 7 percent excise tax on automobiles, and advance the personal income tax exemptions scheduled for January 1, 1973, to January 1, 1972.

The Order established a Cost of Living Council responsible for general administration of the wage-price freeze and for recommendations to the President of "additional policies, mechanisms and procedures to maintain a stable level of prices and costs and minimize unemployment when the freeze expires." Members of the Council include the Secretary of the Treasury (chairman), the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers (vice-chairman), the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness, the President's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs, and the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (advisor). The Office of Emergency Preparedness (17th and F Streets, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20504; phone: (202) 395-5678) was designated as the body responsible for monitoring the freeze and ensuring compliance with provisions of the Order. Sec. 7 of the Order states that "whoever willfully violates this Order or any order or regulation issued under authority of this Order shall be fined not more than $5,000 for each such violation."

National Education Association leaders, concerned that the freeze could be interpreted to affect some 90 percent of the nation's teachers whose contracts become effective in September and who would stand to lose an average of 5½ percent in salary if paid at last year's rate, joined a coalition of other public employee unions in a meeting with two key administration spokesmen on August 18. While emphasizing their interest in improving the nation's economic situation, coalition members requested separate treatment or a separate mechanism for handling public employee problems, and asked that the freeze not apply to service increments or to previously negotiated contracts.

In response to NEA contentions, the Cost of Living Council issued an August 20 statement conceding that a pay increase can be granted for the completion of educational requirements. A question and answer memorandum (no. 3) prepared by the Council stated in part that where the employer is willing to certify that an agreement was in existence that provided for increases in pay dependent on the employees' completing educational requirements for specific job levels, the pay increase can be granted because, in effect, the action is a bona fide promotion. For example, a teacher who has been awarded a master's degree can receive the increment which is normally given. If the effective date of the teacher's contract is after August 14, the increment must be the amount that was granted last year.

However, the Council continued to maintain that longevity increases are frozen. With respect to previously negotiated contracts, the Council indicated that a salary increase can be granted if a contract providing for such an increase became effective prior to the date of the freeze. As such, the Council reconsidered its earlier position that increases would be frozen unless a teacher actually had been paid at a higher rate prior to August 14. According to NEA President Donald E. Morrison, "It now seems clear that any teacher who, as of August 14, was under a contract with his school board for the 1971-72 school year will be entitled to receive the salary provided for in that contract." He added that the NEA "will continue to work for further modifications that will be equitable for members of the teaching profession."

"Economic Stabilization Circular No. 1," published in the August 24 issue of the Federal Register (vol. 36, no. 164), then set forth "general guides drawn from OEP Economic Stabilization Regulation No. 1 and from specific determinations by the Cost of Living Council" for the period August 15 through August 20. The guidelines do not constitute legal rulings. Pertinent portions of sec. 502 of the circular provide:

(a) Deferred wage or salary increases which have been negotiated to take effect during the period of the wage freeze are not permitted.

(b) There will be no cost-of-living increases during the 90-day freeze.

(c) The freeze does not require termination of bargaining for wage changes during the 90-day freeze period. However, no wage increase negotiated during the 90-day period can apply to the period of the freeze nor can it go into effect during the period of the freeze.

(d) If a strike is now in progress, contract negotiations can proceed during the course of the freeze. However, no increases in wages negotiated can be paid for services rendered during the period the freeze is in effect.

(e) State and local governments are subject to Executive Order No. 11615 freezing wages and prices. Accordingly, cost-of-living wage or salary increases ordered by a municipal government to become effective subsequent to the date of the Executive order are not permitted during the 90-day freeze period. . . .

(f) Increases in the salaries of teachers may be granted if the contract period started before August 15. If the contract period started after August 15, the increase is not allowed. For example, if teachers have reached a new agreement on pay scales for the coming school year but the contract does not go into effect until September 1, teachers cannot receive the pay increase.

(j) Policy on promotions provides that:

(1) Bona fide promotions that constitute an advancement to an established job with greater responsibility are allowed.

(3) Merit and longevity increases are not allowed.

(k) [statement about increases dependent upon the completion of educational requirements as quoted above]

(m) If a salary increase was granted and the employee actually performed under the new rate prior to August 15, he can be paid at the higher rate if the pay day is after August 15 provided there are adequate records to demonstrate that the increase was put into effect prior to the freeze date.

(n) The President's program does not call for reducing compensation levels below those in effect on August 15. Consequently, such matters are left entirely to negotiation between labor and management.

(o) Unions and management cannot negotiate for pay increases to be effective after the freeze which will be retroactive to cover the period of the freeze.

In a statement issued subsequent to an August 19 emergency meeting of representatives of all NEA state affiliates, Morrison made it clear that the NEA "will file an unfair labor practice suit or will take other appropriate legal action against any school board which refuses to negotiate in good faith during this emergency period." And, at a news conference held the same day, an NEA spokesman explained:

We have considered the possibility of a constitutional lawsuit challenging the freeze either in its entirety or in regard to certain of its aspects. Although we are convinced that there are significant legal problems, we have decided not to pursue that course of action at the present time. There are, however, certain legal rights which teachers have, even under the freeze, and we intend to enforce those rights. In those states in which negotiations are now underway, we are concerned that they continue in good faith. There is nothing in the freeze that even remotely suggests that negotiations should be discontinued. . . . Moreover, we are concerned with the money which is already in school board budgets for teacher salaries. We believe that it would be illegal for a school board to take advantage of the freeze in order to reallocate this money for another purpose. The taxes were raised for this purpose, and the money should remain in the salary account until we find out precisely what we can and cannot do with it. We intend to take every step possible in order to prevent the reallocation of money that has been earmarked for teacher salaries.

At the present time, questions relating to the payment of teacher salaries under the freeze continue to be the subject of various Cost of Living Council determinations. The information contained in this article covers pertinent guidelines issued through August 24; future Council guidelines and NEA actions will be reported in upcoming issues of the DIGEST.

NEGOTIATED LEAVE BENEFITS FOR ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT CANNOT BE DISCONTINUED

The Arapahoe County District Court enjoined Adams-Arapahoe Joint School District 28J from discontinuing pay and fringe benefits contractually due the president of the Aurora Education Association (AEA) during his 1970-71 leave of absence. Finding that an amended portion of the parties' 1969-72 agreement relating to Association privileges was negotiated for the benefit of the AEA president, the court ruled that the amended agreement constituted a binding and enforceable contract between the district and the AEA.

During a reopener prior to the 1970-71 school year, the parties amended their agreement on September 14, 1970, to allow the AEA president "a leave of absence with full pay and full fringe benefits, half the cost of which . . . [is] to be reimbursed to the school district by the Association." Upon requesting leave for the 1970-71 school year, the AEA president received his regular salary and fringe benefits from the district through January 25, 1971, and the AEA reimbursed the district for 50 percent of the cost. However, when the district ceased payment of the president's salary and either stopped or threatened to stop his benefits on January 26, he sought injunctive relief.

According to the court, plaintiff was serving as AEA president on September 14, the contract was amended for his benefit, and his services were beneficial to the district. Therefore, the court held that the negotiated leave payments were lawful, and that the district statutorily was empowered to execute the contract amendment. It consequently permanently enjoined the district from discontinuing plaintiff's salary and benefits during the remainder of his leave and ordered restoration of all payments withheld since January 26. (B. Beryl Watson v. Adams-Arapahoe Joint School District 28J, et al., Arapahoe County District Court, May 4, 1971.)

MASSACHUSETTS

APPROPRIATED FUNDS MAY BE REALLOCATED TO PROVIDE NEGOTIATED RETIREMENT BENEFITS

The Massachusetts Supreme Court held that a contract amendment providing a retirement benefit based upon unused sick leave was "valid and proper," but reversed a lower court decision that the Fitchburg School Committee could not pay the benefit because it had not appropriated funds "for the purpose of paying the [negotiated] amounts due." It ruled that the lack of a specific budget allocation for payment of the benefit would not alter the school committee's power (within its total appropriation) to order payment of the monies due and allocate funds accordingly. The high court also rejected committee contentions that local ordinances prevailed over the contract amendment and that the retirement benefit was an invalid gratuity.

The retirement benefit provision, which amended a 1966-69 contract between the committee and the Fitchburg Teachers Association, was negotiated during a 1968 reopener and became effective January 1, 1969. It called for "a salary adjustment for a teacher's final year of service before retirement" according to the number of days (a maximum of 10 per year) worked in excess of 170 days in each year of service.

When the Fitchburg city auditor refused to approve 1969 retirement payments due eligible teachers under the amendment, the Association sought declaratory relief. The lower court found the retirement provision valid and proper, but it dismissed the suit because "the City of Fitchburg never appropriated in the 1968 or 1969 budget any money for the purpose of paying the amounts due or that might become due under the provisions of the amendment to the contract."

The state supreme court agreed that the amendment "was a valid exercise of the committee's [statutory] power to set wages and conditions of employment through the process of collective bargaining." It also observed that the retirement benefit (based upon unused sick and personal leave in any given year) provided a reasonable reward for lengthy, continuing service, discouraged frivolous use of sick leave, and limited the municipality's liability to 10 days per year of service. While the school committee argued that the benefit was an invalid gratuity and that local ordinances consequently prevailed over the contract amendment, the high court rejected that argument in finding that "money paid pursuant to the amendment is money 'actually earned.'"

As to the dearth of a 1968 appropriation covering payments required by the amendment, the state supreme court found this > irrelevant since the amendment was not effective until January 1, 1969, and no sums could therefore be due under it until that year. The fact that the amounts were dependent in part on services performed in 1968 and prior years has no bearing on the fact that the calculated salary adjustment was due only after the teacher's final year of service beginning with the school year 1968-69.

Concluding that the lack of a specific allocation for payment of the benefit would not affect the school committee's power to order payment of the negotiated sums due (so long as its total appropriation was not exceeded), the state supreme court held that "the committee may use money allocated to the school as it sees fit, even to the extent of diverting sums specifically allocated in the budget from one use to another." It accordingly reversed and remanded the case for a decision as to whether ample unexpended funds remained in the schools' 1969 total appropriation to pay the required retirement benefits. (Fitchburg Teachers Association v. School Committee of Fitchburg, et al., Massachusetts Supreme Court, June 30, 1971.)

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

MATERNITY POLICY REQUIRING LEAVE AT END OF FIFTH MONTH DECLARED DISCRIMINATORY

A pregnant teacher who claimed that a maternity leave regulation violated her Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection by discriminating against her as a woman was granted monetary and other relief by the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Finding no medical or administrative reason for a Chesterfield County (Virginia) school board regulation requiring a pregnant teacher to terminate her employment at the end of her fifth month of pregnancy, the court ruled that the maternity policy > denies pregnant women . . . equal protection of the laws because it treats pregnancy differently than other medical disabilities. Because pregnancy, though unique to women, is like other medical conditions, the failure to treat it as such amounts to discrimination which is without rational basis, and therefore is violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

First employed during the 1968-69 school year, plaintiff was re-employed for the following two school years under a contract which contained the following provision:

> Termination of employment of an expectant mother shall become effective at least four (4) months prior to the expected birth of the child. Termination of employment may be extended if the superintendent receives written recommendation from the expectant mother's physician and her principal, and if the superintendent feels that an extension will be in the best interest of the pupils and school involved.

On about November 2, 1970, plaintiff informed the school board that she was pregnant and expected to deliver April 28, 1971. With the approval of her obstetrician, she asked that leave commence April 1, or the end of her eight month of pregnancy. That request was denied, and leave was granted effective December 18, 1970, pursuant to the terms and conditions of the policy which grants a teacher the right to re-employment at a time when she determines that she is physically fit and the school board is able to place her. She subsequently presented her request to the school board which denied an extension because it had a replacement available and felt it should comply with the regulation.

In finding no substantive basis for the board's regulation, the court observed that > pregnant women are more likely to be incapacitated in the early stages of pregnancy than the last four months. Further, there is no psychological reason for a pregnant teacher to be forced to take a mandatory leave of absence. In short, since no two pregnancies are alike, decisions of when a pregnant teacher should discontinue working are matters best left up to the woman and her doctor.

>
> In addition, no tenable administrative reason has been advanced by the defendants in defense of the provision. The reasons given . . . for the policy, such as fear of pushing with resulting injury to the fetus, and inability to carry out responsibilities in fire drills, are nugatory, and based on no empirical data whatsoever. Neither has there been a substantial study conducted upon which to base the contention that absences will increase during the latter stages of pregnancy. Basically, the four month requirement set forth in the provision was arbitrarily selected.

Reviewing case law relative to the validity of legislatively prescribing different treatment for men and women, the court cited a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Goesaert v. Cleary (1948) which stated that

> "[t]he Constitution in enjoining equal protection of the laws upon States precludes irrational discrimination as between persons or groups of persons in the incidence of a law." . . . Thus, though absolute equality is not required, Douglas v. California, . . . (1963), distinctions which are "'irrational,' 'irrelevant,' 'unreasonable,' 'arbitrary,' or 'invidious,'" cannot be drawn. Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, . . . (1963).

Defendants argued that the issue was "simply a matter of contract between parties," and that plaintiff waived her constitutional rights in signing the contract. Having once rejected that argument, the court pointed out that "the question to be answered is what rights, as a public employee, does [plaintiff] have. 'It is sufficient to say that constitutional protection does extend to the public servant whose exclusion pursuant to a statute [or regulation] is patently arbitrary or discriminatory.' Wieman v. Updegraff, . . . (1952)."

Defendants also attempted to justify the policy on grounds that other Virginia school boards have similar five-month rules. But the court pointed out that "similar treatment of a certain class in other school districts cannot be used to show that a certain policy has a rational basis. Rather, the Court must determine whether the classification drawn in the regulation, in light of its purpose, serves any rational purpose. Otherwise, it is arbitrary or invidiously discriminating."

Concluding that the regulation is discriminatory under the Fourteenth Amendment, the court held that plaintiff was entitled to placement in the same position she would have been in if she had been allowed to teach until April 1 as requested. Moreover, she was entitled to recovery of her salary from January to March 1971, and all seniority and other rights and benefits she would have received if she had been teaching during that period. (Mrs. Susan Cohen v. Chesterfield County School Board, et al., U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, May 17, 1971.)

SCHOOL BOARD MAY TERMINATE NONTENURE TEACHER WITHOUT REASONS

The U.S. Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, upheld the presumptive legality of a school board's right to refuse renewal of a nontenure teacher's contract without explanation so long as that refusal is not based upon unconstitutional motives. In its first ruling on the subject, the court pointed out that plaintiff did not have a constitutional right to public employment per se, and that the "very reason for the probationary period is to give the board a chance to evaluate the teacher without making a commitment to rehire him." It reversed a U.S. District Court ruling which held that the Columbus, Ohio board must give plaintiff written reasons for his nonrenewal and a hearing, or offer him a contract.

When plaintiff was notified that his contract would not be renewed for the 1970-71 school year, he filed suit alleging deprivation of his Fourteenth Amendment right to due process of law. He charged that the board had failed to provide him with written notice of the proposed nonrenewal, written notice of a hearing on the reasons for nonrenewal, and a hearing at which he could submit evidence in his favor. Finding no evidence that the teacher was impermissibly terminated for exercise of a constitutional right, the U.S. District Court proceeded to determine the nature of and balance between governmental and private interests in such a matter.

Citing Roth v. Board of Regents (which was upheld by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals and is reported in this DIGEST), the lower court held that the interests of the school board and the the teacher "will both be fully protected" by the following minimal, procedural due process requirements: (1) a written statement of the reasons for nonrenewal prior to any final action, (2) adequate notice of hearing at which the teacher might respond to such reasons, (3) a hearing allowing the teacher to submit relevant evidence, and (4) a statement of the board's reasons for nonrenewal if it actually dismisses the teacher.

On appeal, the appellate court emphasized the lawfulness of the school board's actions in the absence of any claim to an unconstitutional motive. It also noted that the probationary period is an "essential feature" of the tenure system because it allows school boards broad prerogatives in determining a teacher's eligibility for continued employment before granting him the rights adhering to tenure status. Reviewing judicial precedent with respect to the question raised by plaintiff's claim under the Civil Rights Act of 1871, the court pointed out that any claim entered thereunder must be proved by showing "(1) action under color of state law, and (2) a deprivation of a constitutional right as a result of that action."

The parties stipulated that the board's action was taken pursuant to state law, but the appellate court found that plaintiff had not charged that he was dismissed for exercise of any constitutionally protected rights. Rather, he contended that the board's failure to give reasons for its nonrenewal decision and a hearing at which he might contest those reasons was a violation of his rights to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment. According to the court, that amendment protects an individual only from deprivation of "life, liberty, or property" without due process of law; it cited another ruling to the effect that "it has been held repeatedly and consistently that government employment is not 'property' . . . . We are unable to perceive how it could be held to be 'liberty.' Certainly it is not 'life.'" Therefore the appellate court held:

> A nontenured teacher's interest in knowing the reasons for the nonrenewal of his contract and in confronting the board on those reasons is not sufficient to outweigh the interest of the board in free and independent action with respect to the employment of probationary teachers. The board is not a legal tribunal. It is an employer, and when it decides to hire or not to hire a particular teacher, it is acting 'as proprietor, to manage the internal operation' of the public schools. Cafeteria Workers, Local No. 473 v. McElroy.

The court accordingly remanded the case with instructions to dismiss plaintiff's complaint. (Thomas Justin Orr v. Raymond E. Trinter, U.S. Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, June 16, 1971.)

Board Findings and Rulings

MICHIGAN

COLLEGE ORDERED TO BARGAIN COACHES' TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

Seven of eight charges brought by the Oakland Community College Faculty Association against Oakland Community College during the parties' negotiation of a 1970-71 contract were found lacking in merit by a Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) trial examiner. His findings and recommended dismissal of the charges subsequently were adopted by the MERC. However, the MERC agreed that the college's refusal to negotiate a supplementary salary schedule for coaches constituted an unfair labor practice under the state's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA) and ordered the college to bargain the coaches' "wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment."

The Association alleged in two of its charges that the college "set prior conditions for the continuation of collective bargaining including a requirement for the entire collective bargaining demands before bargaining can continue," and that it refused to enter counterproposals to Association demands. According to the examiner, the Association presented its noneconomic demands on April 1, 1970, at which time the college said it would not agree to any of the demands until a complete proposal (including economic items) had been submitted. But he found that the parties were negotiating noneconomic matters at least by May 20, which date preceded the Association's submission of its entire bargaining package. Moreover, the following day the college presented a comprehensive proposal to the Association which contained numerous counterproposals and responses to Association demands.

In recommending that the two charges be dismissed, the examiner explained:

> Without specifically passing upon the obligation of the College to bargain relative to non-economic matters until a total economic and non-economic package had been submitted, the undersigned is of the opinion that clearly the Employer is not obligated to agree, as contrasted to bargaining, upon non-economic matters until the whole package is submitted. Section 15 of PERA specifically states that the obligation to bargain does not compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of a concession. In the case at hand, the College did fulfill its obligation by negotiating on non-economic matters, despite the fact that the total package had not been submitted . . . . Admittedly, not all of the proposals by the Charging Party were met with counter-proposals, but again, Section 15 of PERA does not require the making of a concession. Here, the extensiveness of the counter-proposals made does indicate to the undersigned that the College has fulfilled its obligation to bargain as imposed by PERA.

Two other charges dealt with alleged harassment of Association bargaining team members, and a demand by the college that the Association withdraw the unfair labor practice charges herein as a condition of continued bargaining. One team member was given a third year probationary contract on March 30, 1970, after his supervisor expressed some dissatisfaction with his teaching methods. While the examiner found conflicting opinions as to the teacher's ability and a question as to whether the contract was followed, he concluded that > the record is devoid of any evidence of animosity towards [the teacher] stemming from his activities as negotiator on behalf of the Charging Party. There is no reason to infer under the circumstances . . . that [the teacher's] third year probationary contract is attributable to his having engaged in protected activities.

Another bargaining team member allegedly was harassed by being assigned a course at another campus during the spring session 1970 which involved an extra hour of driving time. A grievance was filed on the day the transfer was made, and approximately five days later the assignment was rescinded. Again, the examiner found no evidence that the teacher's proposed transfer was motivated by anti-union animus or any animosity toward the teacher as a bargaining team member. As to the alleged demand that the unfair labor practice charges be withdrawn, the examiner found > that the record does not substantiate this charge. Although one of the representatives of the Charging Party's bargaining team did testify such a demand was made, the other one testified that the College representative stated he would "like us to drop the unfair labor practice charges so we could get to negotiations." In any event, the parties had a meeting on May 20, 1970, and many times subsequent thereto. Even if the demand was made it is now moot.

Another allegation involved the Association's demand that conditions of employment affecting the 1970 summer school session be bargained. The college maintained that a 1970-71 master contract covering the summer school program would be completed before the opening of the session (as had happened under the previous contract); it additionally offered to extend the previous contract if a successor agreement was not completed by the beginning of the summer session. In recommending dismissal of the charge, the examiner found no allegation that the college had refused to meet at reasonable times for purposes of bargaining, and could not see why the situation "should be treated any differently than that which teachers are faced with elsewhere when the opening of school following Labor Day approaches without agreement upon a . . . contract."

The sixth allegation involved three separate refusal-to-bargain charges wherein the Association contended that the college's economic offer was made on a take it or leave it basis, that it refused to bargain conditions of employment affecting unit members teaching in the college's community services division, and that it refused to bargain a supplementary salary schedule for coaches. The examiner found no merit to the first charge, and recommended dismissal of the second because > the community services courses are for the most part noncredit courses offered separate and apart from the curriculum of the College itself, and in many instances taught on a one time basis by instructional personnel obtained elsewhere than the faculty of the College. These teaching duties in the community services function of the College are on an optional basis and none of the faculty are required to teach the courses. At best, this employment is of a casual nature and those teaching these courses would not have been included in the faculty unit of College employees. Based upon these circumstances, the undersigned would conclude that the College is not required to bargain relative to wages, hours, and other conditions of employment of the personnel engaged in teaching in the community service courses, and that the College has not failed in its obligation to bargain as imposed by PERA . . . . In arriving at this conclusion, the undersigned wished to make it very clear that he does not agree with the contention of the College that it is not obligated to bargain relative to wages, hours, and other conditions of employment of part-time personnel teaching in the College curriculum.
